This limitation, however, does not become effective as to any commodity until the Federal Trade Commission has acted under this authority with respect to the commodity in question. Until then the granting of price differentials between purchasers of such commodities remains subject only to the other limitations under the bill, the chief of which is the requirement that they be supported by a showing of differences in cost as between the methods of sale or delivery or the quantities purchased by the buyers concerned.

SELECTION OF CUSTOMERS

The bill contains the proviso already contained in the present Clayton Act permitting sellers to select their own customers in bona-fide transactions and not in restraint of trade. This permits, however, the selection of customers and not the selection of what shall be sold to them. It is intended to protect the buyer against customers who are troublesome in their methods or insecure in their credit. It does not permit the buyer, once he has accepted a customer, to refuse discriminatorily to sell to him particular distinctions of quality, grade, or brand which the seller has set aside for exclusive sale at more favorable prices to selected customers in evasion of the purposes of this bill. Nor does it permit absolute refusal to sell to particular customers where the facts are such as to show that it is done for the purpose of injuring or destroying them and that the elimination of their competition effects a restraint of trade.

MARKET CHANGES, PERISHABLES, ETC.

Although the present Clayton Act has never been differently construed, Congress has in the fullness of caution inserted in the present bill a proviso exempting from its prohibitions—

> Price changes from time to time where in response to changing conditions affecting the market for or the marketability of the goods concerned, such as but not limited to actual or imminent deterioration of perishable goods, obsolescence of seasonal goods, distress sales under court process, or sales in good faith in discontinuance of business in the goods concerned.

This, however, is intended for protection of purely legitimate trade movements. The merchant or manufacturer who resorts to it as a cloak for price discriminations contrary to the spirit and purpose of this bill is likely to pay dearly for the lessons of experience. Wherever there are suspicious circumstances to indicate that such was the intent, the burden of proof, as in the case of other provisos granting exemptions from the bill, is upon the seller or other offender claiming the benefit of the proviso. The liberty of "price changes from time to time", as herein conferred, may not be held to extend, for example, to a price drop placed in effect one-half hour before the expected arrival of a large buyer representative whom it is desired to favor, with its restoration upward a half hour after his departure. Whether price changes are of a character justified by the causes here described is a question of fact, and where that question comes to issue the burden of proof is upon the offending party claiming its protection.

BURDEN OF PROOF

Owing to a body of court decisions to the effect that the legal rules of evidence do not in certain respects apply to hearings before administrative commissions, and to the uncertainty thus suggested, the bill contains a subsection stating the rule as to burden of proof, substantially as suggested above, as applicable to hearings before the Federal Trade Commission.

MEETING COMPETITION

In connection with the above rule as to burden of proof, it is also provided that a seller may show that his lower price was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or that his furnishing of services or facilities was made in good faith to meet those furnished by a competitor. It is to be noted, however, that this does not set up the meeting of competition as an absolute bar to a charge of discrimination under the bill. It merely permits it to be shown in evidence. This provision is entirely procedural. It does not determine substantive rights, liabilities, and duties. They are fixed in the other provisions of the bill. It leaves it a question of fact to be determined in each case, whether the competition to be met was such as to justify the discrimination given, as one lying within the limitations laid down by the bill, and whether the way in which the competition was met lies within the latitude allowed by those limitations.

This procedural provision cannot be construed as a carte blanche exemption to violate the bill so long as a competitor can be shown to have violated it first, nor so long as that competition cannot be met without the use of oppressive discriminations in violation of the obvious intent of the bill.

To illustrate: The House committee hearings showed a discrimination of 15 cents a box granted by Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co. on sales of soap to the A. & P. chain. Upon a complaint and hearing before the Federal Trade Commission, this proviso would permit the Colgate Co. to show in rebuttal evidence, if such were the fact, an equally low price made by a local soap manufacturer in Des Moines, Iowa, to A. & P.'s retail outlets in that city; but this would not exonerate it from a discrimination granted to A. & P. everywhere, if otherwise in violation of the bill.

But the committee hearings show a similar discount of 15 cents a case granted by Procter & Gamble to the same chain. If this proviso were construed to permit the showing of a competing offer as an absolute bar to liability for discrimination, then it would nullify the act entirely at the very inception of its enforcement, for in nearly every case mass buyers receive similar discriminations from competing sellers of the same product. One violation of law cannot be permitted to justify another. As in any case of self-defense, while the attack against which the defense is claimed may be shown in evidence, its competency as a bar depends also upon whether it was a legal or illegal attack. A discrimination in violation of this bill is in practical effect a commercial bribe to lure the business of the favored customer away from the competitor, and if one bribe were permitted to justify another the bill would be futile to achieve its plainly intended purposes.

BROKERAGE

The bill prohibits payment or allowance of brokerage or commission except for services rendered. As explained more fully in the report of the House Committee on the Judiciary, this refers to true brokerage services rendered in fact for the party who pays for them, whether he be an agent employed and paid by the seller to find market outlets or one employed and paid by the buyer to find sources of supply. As the bill further enumerates, it prohibits the payment or allowance of commissions or brokerage on the purchase or sale of goods either to the other party to the transaction or to an intermediary who is acting in fact for or under the control of the other party to the transaction; that is, the party other than the one who pays the commission or brokerage in question. There is nothing in the bill that requires the employment of a broker; there is nothing to prevent sales direct from seller to buyer. But if an intermediary is employed, and is in fact acting for or under the control of the buyer, then the seller cannot pay him. Or if he is acting for or under the control of the seller, then the buyer cannot pay him. And where sales are made from buyer to seller, in the nature of the case no brokerage services are rendered by either, and no payment or allowance on account thereof can be made by either party to the other.

SERVICES OR FACILITIES PAID FOR

The bill prohibits the seller from paying the customer for services or facilities furnished by the latter in connection with the seller's goods unless such payment is available on proportionally equal terms to all other competing customers. The existing evil at which this part of the bill is aimed is, of course, the grant of discriminations under the guise of payments for advertising and promotional services which, whether or not the services are actually rendered as agreed, results in an advantage to the customer so favored as compared with others who have to bear the cost of such services themselves. The prohibitions of the bill, however, are made intentionally broader than this one sphere in order to prevent evasion in resort to others by which the same purpose might be accomplished, and it prohibits payment for such services or facilities whether furnished "in connection with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale" of the products concerned.

SERVICES AND FACILITIES FURNISHED

The bill also prohibits the seller from furnishing services or facilities to the purchaser in connection with the processing, handling, or sale of the commodities concerned unless they are accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms. Again, the last phrase has reference to the several purchasers' equipment and ability to satisfy the terms upon which the offer is made, or the services or facilities furnished to any other purchaser.

There are many ways in which advertising, sales, and other services and facilities may be either furnished or paid for by the seller upon terms that will at once satisfy the requirements of the bill concerning equitable treatment of all customers and at the same time satisfy the legitimate business needs of both the seller and the purchaser.

THE BUYER'S LIABILITY

The closing paragraph of the Clayton Act amendment, for which section 1 of this bill provides, makes equally liable the person who knowingly induces or receives a discrimination in price prohibited by the amendment. This affords a valuable support to the manufacturer in his efforts to abide by the intent and purpose of the bill. It makes it easier for him to resist the demand for sacrificial price cuts coming from mass-buyer customers, since it enables him to charge them with knowledge of the illegality of the discount, and equal liability for it, by informing them that it is in excess of any differential which his difference in cost would justify as compared with his other customers.

This paragraph makes the buyer liable for knowingly inducing or receiving any discrimination in price which is unlawful under the first paragraph of the amendment. That applies both to direct and indirect discrimination; and where, for example, there is discrimination in terms of sale, or in allowances connected or related to the contract of sale, of such a character as to constitute or effect an indirect discrimination in price, the liability for knowingly inducing or receiving such discrimination or allowance is clearly provided for under the later paragraph above referred to.

SECTION 2. PENDING CASES

Section 2 of the bill—not section 2 of the Clayton Act, which section 1 of this bill proposes to amend—imposes temporary procedural requirements applicable to pending rights of action, complaints, or litigation, and is designed to enable the revision of existing or future orders of the Federal Trade Commission arising out of such claims harmoniously with the provisions of this amendment without the necessity of instituting a new proceeding.

SECTION 3. PENAL PROVISIONS

Section 3 of the bill sets aside certain practices therein described and attaches to their commission the criminal penalties of fine and imprisonment therein provided. It does not affect the scope or operation of the prohibitions or limitations laid down by the Clayton Act amendment provided for in section 1. It authorizes nothing therein prohibited. It detracts nothing from them. Most of the acts which it does prohibit lie also within the prohibitions of that amendment. In that sphere this section merely attaches to them its criminal penalties in addition to the civil liabilities and remedies already provided by the Clayton Act.

SECTION 4. COOPERATIVES

Section 4 represents another provision added to the bill in the fullness of caution to protect the distribution of cooperative earnings or surplus among their members on a patronage basis. In the dealings of cooperatives with others they share, of course, the protections and guaranties of the bill as to equal treatment and equal opportunity which it extends to producers, manufacturers, and merchants in trade and commerce generally. It leaves the members of cooperatives free to seek through cooperative endeavor the economies and savings of mass operations, and assures to them, as compared with their larger corporate competitors, any real economies and savings to which those mass operations entitle them and which they often now do not receive. There is nothing in the last section of the bill that distinguishes cooperatives, either favorably or unfavorably, from other agencies in the streams of production and trade, so far as concerns their dealings with others.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I shall not consume the 5 minutes. I simply want to get the record clear, because, of course, in endeavoring to interpret properly the language of statutes, the courts must, perforce, look to the statements that appear in the record on debate.

Bills ofttimes are vague and ambiguous. To clear up much of uncertainty, or rather to point it out, it is my purpose in arising. You might as well know that the bill finally agreed upon by the conferees—and I did not sign the conference report because I objected to it—contains many inconsistencies, and the courts will have the devil's own job to unravel the tangle. In an endeavor to get some sort of an agreement, the so-called Borah-Van Nuys provisions of the Senate bill were grafted onto the House bill, and we have what might be termed in common parlance somewhat of a "hodgepodge." You have the so-called Borah-Van Nuys bill grafted on the so-called Patman bill, and when you try to read them both together you have the greatest difficulty. You have the herculean task to make it yield sense.

For example, under the general House bill there is a ceiling set upon the amount of discount that may be given. There is a limitation, under certain conditions, to be fixed by the Federal Trade Commission. Under the so-called Borah-Van Nuys provision any quantity discount can be given, any amount, provided it is given or is available to everyone who obtains or buys the same quantity. There is no limitation as to the amount of discount obtainable or to be given under the Borah-Van Nuys provision, provided that discount is available to everybody. How under the sun you are going to reconcile that provision with the other sections of the House bill is beyond me.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Which provision was finally incorporated in the bill that is now presented to us by the conference report?

Mr. CELLER. Both provisions are in the bill, as I see it. The Borah-Van Nuys bill says you can do anything as far as discounts are concerned, provided that discount is available to everybody at the same time buying the same quantity; but in the House bill there are provisions relative to limitation of discounts to be set by the Federal Trade Commission. In one breath you can give any discount or allowance. In the next breath you say, "No; you cannot give any discount. The Federal Trade Commission can prevent it."

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Then, if I understand the gentleman, that limitation or that ceiling, as he calls it, has been removed in the bill that is embodied in this conference report?

Mr. CELLER. No. That is not my understanding, and that is not the case. The limitation has not been removed. The limitation is in the bill, but in addition you have something extraneous in the Borah-Van Nuys bill, where there is no limitation. Under the Borah-Van Nuys section you simply can give any discount you wish, provided that amount of discount is available to everyone else. In other words, you must treat everybody equally.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. If the matter is as stated by the gentleman, it is entirely inconsistent, because the real milk in the coconut, as far as quantity discounts were concerned, was embodied in the Patman bill in that very provision. If that is eliminated, as far as the efficacy of the bill is concerned there is not much left to it.

Mr. CELLER. I will ask the gentleman to read the sections of the bill in its entirety and see whether or not you can get any consistency out of it. I cannot, and I have read this bill backward and forward in an endeavor to get the inconsistencies removed therefrom, but I cannot do it. I am sure if the conferees will see eye to eye with me on the subject—and I am afraid they do not—they would vote against this conference report.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I understand the Borah-Van Nuys is a separate and distinct section from the House provision, and some of the conferees on the part of the House have stated to me that there is no inconsistency and that the House provisions prevail, but that the Borah-Van Nuys amendment is simply an additional remedy.

Mr. CELLER. I ask the gentleman to read section 3, the Borah-Van Nuys provision, and then read section 2 and section 1 and see whether that is so.

Also, let me point out, this bill is an amendment to the Clayton Act, which provides that anyone aggrieved by any discrimination in price or discount or allowance can sue and recover triple damages from the person guilty of the discrimination. In addition, for the same act of discrimination, to the triple damages the businessman accused can, by section 3 of this bill, be hailed to court and fined $5,000 or imprisoned for 1 year. I ask you to think carefully before you accept such a bill with such penalties.

Mr. BOILEAU. I cannot read the section in the gentleman's time, of course.

Mr. MICHENER. The original provision in the Patman bill is very stringent and is the real controversy between the two Houses. If the Borah-Van Nuys amendment is added on, then it becomes surplusage and does not amount to anything.

Mr. CELLER. The bill is now far more stringent. Besides the penalties mentioned, the bill places business in a strait jacket.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me 5 additional minutes?

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. CELLER. Does the gentleman refuse to yield me sufficient time on a bill of this character?

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. To say the least, I do not like such consideration after my service on the committee. I am ranking member on the committee. I think the gentleman is entirely in bad order in being so niggardly of time. His opposition should not interfere with his usual sense of justice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. CELLER. I read this provision of section 3, the Borah-Van Nuys section:

> SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to be a party to, or assist in, any transaction of sale, or contract to sell, which discriminates to his knowledge against competitors of the purchaser, in that, any discount, rebate, allowance, or advertising service charge is granted to the purchaser over and above any discount, rebate, allowance, or advertising service charge available at the time of such transaction to said competitors in respect of a sale of goods of like grade, quality, and quantity.

This is the particular language to which I direct your attention especially: "available at the time of such transaction to said competitors in respect of a sale of goods of like grade, quality, and quantity."

If it is available to everyone there is no limitation, and you can, therefore, give any discount you wish without let or hindrance, provided it is available to everyone at the same time. This is what I claim is a glaring inconsistency in the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. From a reading of the report it appears to me that the entire House bill was stricken out and practically a new bill written by the Senate. Am I correct?

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me some proponent of the House bill should tell us what is in the Senate bill.

Mr. CELLER. I am endeavoring to tell the House that, so far as I know and according to my lights. While it is true we struck out this entire provision, we practically substituted the House bill with certain changes and then took on in addition the Borah-Van Nuys provision.

Mr. SNELL. That is the practical effect of what was done.

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Is it the gentleman's opinion that the Borah-Van Nuys bill is inconsistent with the provisions of the other sections of this bill?

Mr. CELLER. I am of the conviction that there is an absolute inconsistency.

Mr. HEALEY. One further question, if the gentleman will permit. In the gentleman's judgment, the Borah-Van Nuys amendment in and of itself would amply take care of the situation?

Mr. CELLER. There is no question but what the Borah-Van Nuys provision in and of itself would be sufficient. I would have gladly supported this bill in its entirety if this provision had been controlling.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. If a vendor is found guilty of discrimination as provided in this bill, is he subject to the aggrieved party for damages or has he committed a crime and subjected himself to penalty?

Mr. CELLER. If he violates the Borah-Van Nuys provision or the other provision of the bill he is subject to penalties of a criminal nature and has committed an offense.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Would he also be liable for triple damages?

Mr. CELLER. And he would also have to respond in triple damages under the provisions of the Clayton Act. Anyone aggrieved can sue.

Furthermore I want to tell the Members from the dairy and farm sections that the provisions in the Senate bill known as the McNary amendment and the Schwellenbach amendment, which was very much like the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], have not been embraced in the bill. The Schwellenbach amendment and the McNary amendment were thrown out in conference. These amendments sought to help the farmers and dairymen of the country.

This bill thus bears most heavily against farmers and the cooperatives; and I repeat what I said 10 days ago, that all farm organizations are opposed to this bill—the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the National Cooperative Association, and all the other organizations with which you are familiar have voiced objection. Many of the consumer cooperative organizations have voiced objections because these dairy and farm provisions were stricken from the bill. The exception relating to minerals was also stricken from the bill. The Secretary of Agriculture has voiced emphatic opposition to the bill.

The conference report, in its reference to brokerage allowances, fails to take due notice of the fact that we put into the final bill the words "except for services rendered." That means if actual brokerage service is rendered it must be allowed or paid for; either must be reflected in price or discount and allowance. Many respectable and honorable business houses have brokerage departments or have organized separate entities which they may own in whole or in part and which perform legitimate brokerage functions; which departments or entities expend money in research, investigation, experimentation, advertising. They actually render valuable brokerage service. Yet if they be directly or indirectly connected with the seller or buyer, no brokerage allowance may be made, although in the language of the words we inserted "services" were actually rendered. I know that everybody watching the bill and interested in making it sound has assumed that the insertion of the words "for services rendered" meant that payment could be made whenever services were actually rendered. We have certainly come to a pretty pass in this country if a person cannot be paid for rendering legitimate services simply because he does not happen to be in a certain line of business. Under the same reasoning it would be quite logical to prohibit a store from altering garments for a customer, because it is not a tailoring business—and if we continue down this road we will surely end up with legislation requiring the consumer to deal with tailors for certain things, independent automobile repairmen for other things, and so on, and with companies unable to truck their own goods because there are separate trucking companies, and so forth.

This conference report contains the interesting statement at the top of page 7 that the meet-competition clause of the Clayton Act is, in the opinion of the conferees, "one of the obstacles to enforcement of the Clayton Act." This remarkable statement, plus the fact that the trick wording in the bill—"differing methods", in the first section—which is specifically intended to control prices by practically outlawing legitimate quantity discounts, is carefully repeated on page 6 of the conference report, shows that the bill is clearly intended to eliminate competition and control prices and restrict quantity discounts, all of which Senators LOGAN and ROBINSON have repeatedly told the Senate is not its intent. Certainly it should be at least made of record from the floor of this House that this legislation is just that, so that consumers will not eventually blame all Senators and all Congressmen for having enacted legislation without at least knowing what it means. I certainly cannot believe that it was the understanding of several conferees that the meet-competition clause in the present Clayton Act is an obstacle to the enforcement of that act. They do not intend that legislation shall make it only possible for a broker to discharge the brokerage function. Certainly Senator LOGAN agreed with me in a debate in New York publicly that he did not approve of any such legislation, and Senator BORAH during the hearings on his bill so agreed and also stated that legitimate quantity discounts were constructive.

For your information the consumer organizations are about to report to their members on this legislation, and it would seem to me in the interest of those who understand this situation to make it plain for the record that, while the proponents of the bill have stated one thing in connection with quantity discounts, the conference report states another, and deliberately makes note of the meet-competition clause, and specifically places a construction on the brokerage provision which amounts to the rankest sort of class legislation of a sort which may well mark the beginning of much similar legislation extremely harmful to the consumer by making it necessary for him to support, willy-nilly, those who elect to set themselves up as this or that in business.

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlemen from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I shall take but a few minutes. When the House bill reached the Senate, the Senate struck out all after the enacting clause and substituted its own bill. The bill then went to conference, and you will see from a reading of the conference report that the bill that is reported back by the committee of conference is substantially the House bill, rearranged, including the Borah-Van Nuys amendment which is section 3 of the bill.

We took both bills and compared them, and I do not recall a single, solitary amendment to the House bill in which the Senate did not recede. We omitted from this bill one particular provision of the House bill which dealt with intrastate commerce and not interstate commerce. But insofar as the other amendments that made up the difference between the Senate bill and the House bill as passed are concerned, the Senate receded on all of them, if I remember correctly.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Section 3 is the one that is changed? There is no section 3 in this bill.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; there is. Page 3 of the report.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thought the gentleman mentioned section 3 of the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Section 3 is the Borah-Van Nuys amendment. We accepted that amendment for this reason and this reason only. The first section of the bill as reported back here amends section 2 of the Clayton Act. That is the House bill substantially, and when I say to you it is substantially the House bill, every amendment that was offered in the Senate to the Patman bill was receded from by the Senate.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Does the bill as agreed to by the conferees carry the penalty of triple damages and also a penalty under the criminal law?

Mr. MILLER. The penalty of triple damages is the old law. In other words, we made no change in that particular provision of the Clayton Act. Section 3, which the gentleman from New York talks about, is the Borah-Van Nuys amendment, and that is the criminal section of this bill. The first part of the bill has nothing to do with criminal offenses. It deals primarily, in my opinion, with the authority of the Federal Trade Commission to regulate and enforce the provisions of section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended. Section 3 in the bill is placed in an effort to make the criminal offense apply only to that particular section, and I believe that is a reasonable construction, if you will look at the bill.

Mr. MASSINGALE. There is no criminal offense involved for anything outside of what is contained in that section?

Mr. MILLER. In section 3.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Is it not perfectly clear that any vendor who discriminates in price between purchasers is guilty of a crime and is also subject to triple damages to anyone who claims to be aggrieved?

Mr. MILLER. That is true, but the criminal part is included in section 3 and section 3 only.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. But it is a part of the same act?

Mr. MILLER. Of course it is, but it is not a part of the Clayton Act as amended by section 2. It ought to be, as far as that is concerned, if a seller willfully discriminates.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. I understood the gentleman to state a moment ago one provision of the House bill which dealt with intrastate commerce is eliminated from the bill. Will the gentleman state what provision that is? I understood him to make that statement.

Mr. MILLER. I did make that statement.

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. MILLER. You will remember it was in subsection (a) where we undertook to provide for a transaction that was closely intermingled with interstate commerce. We took that provision out and you will find it on page 6, I believe, of the report.

Mr. BOILEAU. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. It is possible, of course, for a man to violate section 3 and by that same act be guilty of violation of the other sections of the bill?

Mr. MILLER. That would be entirely possible.

Mr. CELLER. So that he would be subject to triple damages as well as criminal prosecution?

Mr. MILLER. That would be entirely possible.

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say if the Congress really wants a bill amending the Clayton Act, and desires to retain the three objectives of the House bill, the conferees on the part of the House, excluding myself, did a good job and brought back to the House a bill which thoroughly represents, in their opinion, and in my opinion, the expressed will of the House as indicated by the passage of the Patman bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The whole thing is the question of quantity discount?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman understands that as well as I do.

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the Borah-Van Nuys amendment affect the House provision so far as quantity discounts are concerned?

Mr. MILLER. No; it does not.

Mr. MICHENER. Because if it stands alone, the bill is not worth anything.

Quantity discounts, advertising, and brokerage allowances are prohibited in the bill exactly as they were in the bill passed by the House.

The conference report ought to be adopted. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

EQUAL-OPPORTUNITY BILL

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, a million and a half independent retail dealers in this country are interested in this bill, including druggists, grocers, and others. They are not asking for special privileges, special rights, or special benefits. They are just asking for a fair, square deal. That is all they are asking for and that is all this bill will give them. It will not deprive any person of any privilege or benefit that he is now receiving and which he is as a matter of right entitled to receive. It will help farmers, wage earners, and the consumers generally.

This bill grants each and every one the opportunity to do an honest, legitimate business, and protects him from cheaters and racketeers. It is not going to hurt any manufacturer or producer who is doing an honest business and treating all of his customers in the same fair, square way that he should treat all of them.

This is a good bill. I commend the House conferees, Congressmen UTTERBACK, MILLER, MCLAUGHLIN, SUMNERS, GUYER, and ROBSION for the good agreement they reached with the Senate conferees. It is a better bill than it was when it passed the House. The Borah-Van Nuys provision is separate and distinct. It is section 3 of this bill. It does not in the way it is inserted hurt the bill or injure it in any way, but strengthens the bill. I am pleased that the provision is in there in the way the conferees have put it in.

This bill passed the House by the enormous majority of 290 for, to only 16 against, and I hope this conference report will be accepted by this House by an even greater majority. This bill has heretofore been fully discussed and I hope this report is adopted without further delay. I do not desire additional time.

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LIQUOR TAX ADMINISTRATION BILL

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9185) to insure the collection of the revenue on intoxicating liquor, to provide for the more efficient and economical administration and enforcement of the laws relating to the taxation of intoxicating liquor, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

[To accompany H. R. 9185]

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9185) to insure the collection of the revenue on intoxicating liquor, to provide for the more efficient and economical administration and enforcement of the laws relating to the taxation of intoxicating liquor, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 55, 60, 77, 81, 85, 86, 102, 111, and 120.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9185) to insure the collection of the revenue on intoxicating liquor, to provide for the more efficient and economical administration and enforcement of the laws relating to the taxation of intoxicating liquor, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

SUBSTANTIVE AMENDMENTS

On amendment no. 1: This amendment strikes out section 2 of the House bill which provided for the seizure and forfeiture of intoxicating liquor and containers thereof when the containers do not bear proper stamps, labels, and other markings required by Federal law or regulation, and for seizure and forfeiture of such containers and contents when the containers are not accompanied by proper bills of lading or other documents required by Federal law or regulation. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 12: The House bill set forth in considerable detail the requirements for the marking and branding of casks and packages filled with distilled spirits in the cistern room, and required their immediate removal to bonded warehouses. The Senate amendment leaves these matters to regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 14: The House bill restated language now contained in section 3287 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the tax-free withdrawal of alcohol for the use of the United States. Such withdrawals are now completely provided for in title III of the National Prohibition Act. This language was stricken from the bill by the Senate amendment. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 16, 18, 19, 22, 23, and 26: The language of the House bill conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury authority to prescribe rules and regulations necessary for carrying out the provisions of certain sections of the bill. The Senate amendments provide that such rules and regulations shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, in conformity with the administrative procedure now followed in the Treasury Department. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 20: The House bill specified the marks, brands, and stamps to be placed on containers of distilled spirits upon tax payment and removal from bonded warehouses. The Senate amendment authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to prescribe regulations governing these matters. The House recedes with amendments which specify that the spirits shall be tax paid before removal and that the marks, brands, and stamps shall be erased when the containers are emptied.

On amendment no. 36: This amendment amends section 1 of the Bottling in Bond Act of March 3, 1897, to permit the bottling of distilled spirits in bond in any internal-revenue bonded warehouse without regard to the survey capacity of the distillery in which made and to permit such bottling to be done before or after tax payment, and in the name of the individual or association in whose name the spirits were produced and warehoused, as well as in the name of the distiller as is now provided by law. The House bill contained no corresponding provision. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 39: This amendment declares that nothing in the Bottling in Bond Act shall authorize the labeling of whisky contrary to regulations issued under authority of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act. The House bill contained no corresponding provision. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 40: The House bill amended the various provisions of law relating to the bonded period for spirits and the loss allowances thereof by redeclaring those laws as they existed prior to wartime and national prohibition. The purpose was to redeclare the bonded period for spirits to be 8 years and to redeclare the loss allowance to be for a period of 7 years. It further provided that distilled spirits 8 years of age or over which were in bonded warehouses on December 5, 1933, might remain in bond, and, when withdrawn, be given loss allowances up to and including the thirtieth day after the date of the enactment of this act. The Senate amendment completely restates the law relating to the bonded period and loss allowance without making any substantial changes in the purposes of the House provisions. The House recedes with amendments which make clarifying changes in the language of the Senate amendment.

On amendment no. 41: The House bill amended section 602 of the Revenue Act of 1918, to permit the withdrawal into barrels, drums, tanks, tank cars, or other approved containers, of spirits reduced to not less than 100 proof from receiving cisterns at registered distilleries and tax payment and removal of such spirits without entry into bonded warehouses. The Senate amendment provides (1) for the withdrawal of spirits of less than 159 degrees of proof and more than 100 degrees of proof from cisterns at distilleries into packages, and tax payment and removal of such spirits without being entered into warehouse; (2) for the transfer of such spirits from receiving cisterns at such distilleries by means of pipe lines to storage tanks in warehouses located on the bonded premises of such distilleries; (3) for the transfer of such spirits in bond, in approved containers, to warehouses for storage therein; and (4) that such spirits may be transported, after tax payment, in approved containers for beverage use only. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 42: As passed by the House section 309 amended section 3293 of the Revised Statutes to prescribe the form of the entry and the entry stamp and to require distillers to furnish monthly or annual warehousing bonds in penal sums of not less than 50 percent of the tax due on distilled spirits on deposit in the distillery warehouse at one time. The Senate amendment requires the entries of spirits to be made in accordance with the provisions of regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and requires distillers and warehousemen to furnish warehouse bonds in penal sums not to exceed $200,000 for each warehouse. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 43 and 44: The House bill set out in considerable detail the matter to be included in storekeeper-gaugers' and distillers' records. The Senate amendments authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to prescribe, by regulations, the records to be kept by storekeeper-gaugers and distillers of the receipt and use of distilling materials, and the production of spirits, at distilleries. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 46: The Senate amendment authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to prescribe by regulations tolerances within the limits of which the amount of fermented malt liquor in a barrel or fractional part of a barrel may exceed the quantity tax-paid as indicated by the stamp affixed to such barrel or fractional part of a barrel, without being accounted and tax-paid at a higher rate. The House bill contained no corresponding provision. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 55: The Senate amendment authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to permit brewers to ship beer in tank cars to breweries and depots, to the extent that in his opinion such transfer may be permitted without danger to the revenue. No corresponding provision was contained in the House bill. The Senate recedes.

On amendments nos. 60 and 61: The House bill permitted the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe the penal sums of bonds to be furnished by brewers, in proportion to the production capacity of their plants, but in no event to be less than $1,000; and required that such bonds be renewed once in every 4 years and when required by the Secretary. Senate amendment no. 60 provides that if the penal sum of any such bond exceeds $100,000, the bond covering such excess may be given without surety or collateral security; and amendment no. 61 strikes out the requirement that the bond be renewed once in every 4 years. The Senate recedes on no. 60, and the House recedes on no. 61 with an amendment which restores the House provision except for a clerical change.

On amendment no. 63: The House bill provided for the forfeiture of brewery premises for flagrant and willful removal therefrom of taxable malt liquors without payment of tax thereon. The Senate amendment provides for forfeiture of bottling-house premises also under the same circumstances. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 64: The bill as it passed the House provided that the brewery premises should consist of the lands and buildings described in the brewer's notice, and that such premises should, as to breweries established after the enactment of this act, be used solely for the manufacture of beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and similar fermented malt liquors, cereal beverages containing less than one-half of 1 percent of alcohol by volume, vitamins, and ice; of drying spent grain from the brewery, and recovering carbon dioxide and yeast. It further provided that brewery bottling houses established after the date of the enactment of this act should be used solely for the purposes of bottling such fermented malt liquors and cereal beverages containing less than one-half of 1 percent of alcohol by volume. It provided that notwithstanding such amendments, where established breweries were, on the date of the enactment of this act, being used by the brewer for other purposes, and brewery bottling houses were, on such date, being used for the bottling of soft drinks, such uses might be continued by such brewer. It further provided that the bottling house of any brewery should not be used for the bottling of the product of any other brewery. A penalty of $50 was provided with respect to each day upon which any brewery or brewery bottling house was used contrary to the provisions of this section. The Senate amendment changes these provisions (1) to provide that the brewery premises shall also be available for the manufacture of malt and malt syrup and the storing of bottles, packages, or supplies necessary or incidental to the manufacture of the articles now proposed to be manufactured on the brewery premises, and, under regulations, for the manufacture of other commodities or byproducts; and (2) to permit the use of the brewery bottling house for the manufacturing, carbonating, and bottling of soft drinks and to permit the use of the bottling house for the bottling of the product of any other brewery under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The House recedes with an amendment which restores the provisions of the House bill with the addition of the Senate provisions permitting the manufacture of malt and malt sirup and the storing of bottles, packages, and other incidental supplies.

On amendment no. 67: The Senate amendment amends section 605 of the Revenue Act of 1918 to declare that the filtering, clarifying, or purifying of wines, and the manufacture of vermouth with fortified sweet wine on the premises of a bonded winery, shall not be deemed to be rectification. Under the present law these operations are considered to be rectification and may be conducted only in rectifying plants, and the products are subject to a tax of 30 cents per proof gallon. There were no corresponding provisions in the House bill. The House recedes with an amendment which makes the provisions relating to the filtering, clarifying, or purifying of wines applicable only when those operations are conducted on bonded winery premises or bonded storeroom premises.

On amendments nos. 68 and 69: The Senate amendments (1) reduce by 50 percent the internal-revenue taxes on dry and sweet wines, champagne, artificially carbonated wines, liqueurs, cordials, and similar compounds; (2) exempt from the distilled spirits tax vermouth, cordials, liqueurs, and similar compounds made in rectifying houses with tax-paid wine fortified with tax-paid brandy and containing more than 24 percent of alcohol by volume; and (3) provide for a refund of such distilled spirits tax paid or assessed prior to the date of the enactment of the act. The House bill contained no corresponding provisions. The House recedes with an amendment to the Senate amendments which removes certain inconsistencies with other provisions of the bill and with provisions of existing law.

On amendments nos. 73 and 74: Sections 323 and 324 of the House bill amended paragraphs "Fourth" and "Fifth", respectively, of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes to restate the classifications of retail and wholesale dealers in liquors and malt liquors, and to provide (a) that no retail dealer in liquors on malt liquors shall be held to be a wholesale dealer solely by reason of sales of 5 wine gallons or more to the same person at the same time when such sales are for immediate consumption on the premises where sold, and (b) that additional special tax as dealer shall not be due on account of sales of malt liquors consummated at other dealers' places of business. The Senate amendments (1) authorize the issuance of "wine dealer" or "wine and malt liquor dealer" special tax stamps to wholesale and retail dealers who sell wine only or wine and malt liquor only, and the issuance of "at large" special tax stamps to retail liquor dealers whose business requires them to travel from place to place, and (2) restore a provision of existing law relating to "medicinal spirits stamp tax", which was omitted by the House bill in the restatement of paragragh "Fourth" of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 77 and 81: These amendments provide that retail and wholesale dealers in malt liquor shall not be required to pay additional special tax on account of sales at the residences of purchasers who have filed oral or written standing orders with the dealers to call at the residences. There were no corresponding provisions in the House bill. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no 82: This amendment provides for the sale of malt beverages at fairs, picnics, and other similar places for a period of not more than 30 days once in a year, upon the payment of a special tax of $2 in lieu of the tax which is ordinarily paid by retail dealers in malt liquors. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The House recedes with an amendment which makes the provision applicable to the sale of malt liquors by fraternal, civic, church, labor, charitable, benevolent, and ex-service men's organizations at entertainments, dances, picnics, bazaars, or festivals, held by them, and provides that the $2 tax shall be paid for each calendar month in which the sales are made, rather than for a period of not more than 30 days once in a year.

On amendment no. 84: The House bill provided for the redemption of the strip stamps issued under authority of the Liquor Taxing Act of 1934, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Senate amendment specifies the conditions under which such stamps may be redeemed. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 85, 86, 87, 88, and 89: The House bill provided that the tax paid on fermented malt liquor which was lawfully removed from a brewery to a brewery bottling house on and after March 22, 1933, and became unsalable without fraud, connivance, or collusion on the part of the brewer, and without removal from such bottling house, and was destroyed in the presence of a representative of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. The subsection in the House bill was applicable to past losses of such fermented malt liquor as well as to losses suffered after the subsection became law. The Senate amendments retain the provisions of the subsection but make it effective only as to losses occurring between March 22, 1933, and the date of enactment of the act, and authorize the refund if the unsalable malt liquor was returned to the brewery for use therein as brewing material. To care for future losses the Senate amendments authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make a survey of the losses of tax-paid fermented malt liquor in breweries, brewery-bottling houses, and elsewhere, for the purpose of ascertaining if refunds may be made of taxes paid on fermented malt liquor so lost, and, if he finds that such refunds may be made consistently with the protection of the revenue, to prescribe regulations under which such refunds may be made. The Senate recedes on nos. 85 and 86. The House recedes on no. 87 and recedes with an amendment on nos. 88 and 89. The action of the conference restores the provisions of the House bill with the addition of the provisions of the Senate amendment which made the refund applicable to malt liquor returned to the brewery, and omits all the other provisions of the Senate amendment.

On amendment no. 91: The House bill extended to all wine makers the provisions of existing law which exempt wine makers who produce wine from grapes from payment of special tax on account of the sale of wine of their own production at the place of manufacture or their principal office or place of business. The Senate amendment limits the exemption to wine makers who qualify as such under the internal-revenue laws. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 92: The Senate amendment amends section 3 of title III of the National Prohibition Act, to provide that tanks on the industrial alcohol plant premises which are approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may be used as warehouses for the storage of alcohol. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 96: Section 330 of the House bill extended the provisions of the internal-revenue laws applicable to natural wines, to wines made of citrus fruits (except lemons and limes). This section in substance was enacted into law in the Federal Alcohol Administration Act. The Senate amendment extends such provisions of law to wines made from peaches, cherries, berries, apricots, and apples. The Senate amendment also subjects to tax under section 613 of the Revenue Act of 1918, the cordials, liqueurs, and similar compounds containing wine made from such fruits and fortified with brandy. The House recedes with an amendment which omits that part of the Senate amendment which amends section 613 of the Revenue Act of 1918, because that part of the Senate amendment is now included in the conference amendment to the amendments of the Senate nos. 68 and 69.

On amendments nos. 98, 102, 105, 106, 107, and 111: The House bill reduced the tax on fortifying brandy and wine spirits from 20 cents to 10 cents per proof-gallon and extended the time within which the assessment of such tax must be paid from 10 months to 12 months. The Senate amendment no. 102 fixes the rate of tax on fortifying brandy and wine spirits at 15 cents per proof-gallon; no. 111 provides for abatement or refund of the fortifying tax to the extent the tax paid on brandy or wine spirits used in the fortification of wines held by the producer on the effective date of this act exceeds the tax which would have been paid on such brandy or wine spirits if the new rate had been in effect at the time of payment; nos. 98, 105, and 106 extend to 18 months the time in which the tax may be paid, but require every wine producer to give full bond coverage for the payment of the tax on such brandy and wine spirits within the 18 months allowed; and no. 107 authorizes the abatement or refund of the tax on the fortifying brandy or wine spirits when the fortified wines are destroyed. The House recedes on nos. 98, 105, 106, and 107. The Senate recedes on nos. 102 and 111.

On amendments nos. 100, 101, 103, 104, 108, 109, 110, 112, 113, 115: The House bill extended the provisions of law relating to the fortification of grape wines with grape brandy, and the withdrawal and tax payment of grape wines and brandies, to include wines and brandies made from citrus fruits (except lemons and limes). It also included dates as a fruit from which brandy may be distilled. Like section 330 of the House bill, these provisions were in substance enacted into law in the Federal Alcohol Administration Act. The Senate amendments insert new provisions which extend the same provisions of law to wines and brandies made from peaches, cherries, berries, apricots, and apples. Under the Senate amendments, wine made from one of the fruits may not be fortified with brandy made from another fruit. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 116: The House bill amended section 618 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1918 by striking therefrom the limitations formerly contained therein as to use of wines as distilling material for the production of nonbeverage spirits, and the further limitation that all alcoholic spirits obtained therefrom by distillation at any industrial distillery should be denatured and all spirits so obtained at any fruit distillery should be removed and used only for nonbeverage purposes or for denaturation. The Senate amendment strikes from this section the authority to allow on all spirits distilled from wines, credit for tax paid upon the spirits or brandy used in the fortification of such wines. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 118: This amendment provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe labels or other marks for the case or shipping container of wines as well as for the immediate container of such wines, as is now provided by law. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 120: The House bill amended section 3354 of the Revised Statutes by permitting the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to prescribe the manner of paying the tax on fermented malt liquor removed from a brewery to a brewery bottling house by means of a pipe or conduit other than by the cancelation and defacement of stamps covering the amount of the tax. The Senate amendment provides that the manner so prescribed for paying the tax shall not entail additional expense to the taxpayer. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 121: Section 402 of the House bill, relating to the disposal of forfeited liquor, was, in substance, enacted into law in the Federal Alcohol Administration Act. The Senate amendment strikes out the language of the House bill and inserts a new section 402 which relieves the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from the necessity of making assessments or bringing suits to effect recovery of taxes on distilled spirits, wine, or fermented liquors, or special occupational taxes required to be paid by persons manufacturing or dealing in distilled spirits, wines, or fermented liquor, whenever, after investigation, it appears that such taxes would not be collectible in full or in any substantial amount. The section requires that in each case of such omission to assess or to authorize the bringing of suit a report setting forth the facts as to the uncollectibility of the tax must be filed in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The House recedes with an amendment which omits from the bill entirely both the matter contained in section 402 of the House bill and the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment.

On amendment no. 122: Section 403 of the House bill imposed an embargo upon the importation or bringing into the United States of any distilled spirits, wines, or fermented malt liquors produced, manufactured, rectified, sold, or marketed by any person against whom there has been instituted, or against whom process has been issued for the institution of, any proceeding by the United States, based upon a claim arising out of the customs or internal-revenue laws in connection with an alleged bringing into the United States of liquors, and of any liquors in which such person has any interest, and of any liquors produced, marketed, etc., by any plant or business outside of the United States in which he has a substantial interest, direct or indirect, until such person submits to the jurisdiction of the proper court and furnishes security to insure payment of the claim. The Senate amendment strikes out section 403 of the House bill and inserts a new section 403 which amends section 239 of the Criminal Code (1) by eliminating the designation of "intoxicating liquor" and adding to spirituous liquor, or vinous, and malted liquor the designation "or other fermented liquor, or any compound containing any spiritous liquor, or vinous, malted, or other fermented liquor, fit for use for beverage purposes", (2) to limit the scope of its prohibition to shipments of liquors into States which prohibit the delivery or sale therein of such liquor as is designated, and (3) by providing a further penalty of imprisonment for not more than 1 year in addition to, or in lieu of, the present penalty of a fine of not more than $5,000. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The House recedes with an amendment which omits from the bill entirely both the matter contained in section 403 of the House bill and the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendments numbered 123 to 136, add new provisions. There were no corresponding provisions in the House bill.

On amendments nos. 123 and 124: These amendments amend the provisions of the tariff act to allow drawback of internal-revenue tax on distilled spirits and wines bottled especially for export and actually exported. The House recedes with amendments which make changes in section numbers.

On amendment no. 125: This amendment amends section 311 of the Tariff Act of 1930, (a) to permit the rectification of distilled spirits and wines in customs bonded warehouses, class 6, for shipment to Puerto Rico (as well as for export) exempt from all internal-revenue taxes; (b) to exempt the person so rectifying in the customs bonded warehouse from the payment of special tax as a rectifier; and (c) to provide that for the purposes of the section distilled spirits reduced in proof and bottled in such manufacturing warehouses shall be deemed to have been there manufactured. The House recedes with an amendment which makes a change in the section number.

On amendment no. 126: This amendment amends section 51 of the act of August 27, 1894 (which now authorizes the establishment of general bonded warehouses) to authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to establish a single type of warehouse to be known as "internal revenue bonded warehouse" for the storage of distilled spirits (other than alcohol) until payment of tax thereon. The House recedes with amendments which make clerical and clarifying changes.

On amendment no. 127: This amendment (a) repeals section 3271 of the Revised Statutes (which now requires each distiller to provide a distillery warehouse on his bonded premises) but preserves the liabilities of all distillers for taxes and penalties arising out of the use of, or storage of distilled spirits in, distillery warehouses authorized, approved, or maintained under section 3271 of the Revised Statutes, and (b) provides for the designation as internal revenue bonded warehouses of all distillery, general, and special bonded warehouses lawfully established and used prior to the enactment of this act, and authorizes their continued use for the storage of distilled spirits (other than alcohol) upon the filing of such new bonds or the consents of sureties on existing bonds covering spirits in distillery or general or special bonded warehouses as the Commissioner shall consider adequate to insure the payment of taxes due the United States. The House recedes with amendments which make clerical and clarifying changes.

On amendment no. 128: This amendment abolishes the distinction between distillery, general, and special bonded warehouses and authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to prescribe regulations governing the establishment, construction, maintenance, and supervision of internal revenue bonded warehouses. The House recedes with amendments which make clerical and clarifying changes.

On amendment no. 129: This amendment exempts internal revenue bonded warehouses from the provisions of those sections of law which prior to the date of enactment of this act made distinctions between distillery, general, and special bonded warehouses. The House recedes with amendments which make clerical and clarifying changes.

On amendment no. 130: This amendment amends section 3296 of the Revised Statutes by striking therefrom the words "distillery warehouse" and inserting the words "internal revenue bonded warehouse." The section will then provide for the punishment of those who remove distilled spirits on which the tax has not been paid to a place other than the internal revenue bonded warehouse provided by law or remove distilled spirits from any such warehouse in a manner not authorized by law. The House recedes with an amendment making a change in the section number.

On amendment no. 131: This amendment authorizes the destruction or denaturation, exempt from tax, of distillates containing one-half of 1 percent or more of aldehydes or 1 percent or more of fusel oil (commonly referred to as heads and tails, respectively) removed in the course of distillation. The House recedes with an amendment making a change in the section number.

On amendment no. 132: This amendment amends section 3318 of the Revised Statutes to require rectifiers and wholesale liquor dealers to keep daily at their places of business covered by special tax stamps records of distilled spirits received and disposed of by them and to render under oath correct transcripts and summaries of such records, and to authorize the Commissioner in his discretion to require such records to be kept at the place where such spirits are actually received and sent out. The amendment requires such records to be preserved for such period as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe. The House recedes with amendments making a change in the section number and changing the period for which such records are required to be preserved to 4 years.

On amendment no. 133: This amendment amends section 62 of the act of August 27, 1894, insofar as that section relates to the keeping of records by distillers who sell only distilled spirits of their own production at the place of manufacture, or at the place of storage in bond, in the original packages to which the tax-paid stamps are affixed, to authorize the Commissioner in his discretion to prescribe the form of the records and of the transcripts and summaries thereof. The House recedes with amendments making the same changes as in the case of amendment no. 132.

On amendment no. 134: This amendment declares that all internal-revenue laws of the United States in regard to the manufacture and taxation of, and traffic in, distilled spirits, wines, and malt liquors, and all penalties for violations of such laws, that were in force at the time the National Prohibition Act was enacted, shall be and continue in force, except as they have been repealed or amended by acts other than (1) title II of the National Prohibition Act as amended and supplemented, and (2) section 1 of the Liquor Law Repeal and Enforcement Act, and except as they may be modified by, or may be inconsistent with, this act. The House recedes with an amendment making a change in the section number.

On amendment no. 135: This amendment provides that, except as provided in section 329 of this act, nothing contained in the act shall be construed as restricting or limiting the provisions of title III of the National Prohibition Act, as amended. This section preserves the distinction between alcohol and other distilled spirits. The House recedes with an amendment making a change in the section number.

CLERICAL AND CLARIFYING AMENDMENTS

On amendments nos. 2, 7, 10, 11, 13, 15, 17, 21, 37, 47, 49, 51, 53, 65, and 93: These amendments make changes in section and subsection references which are made necessary by the Senate amendments. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 25, 34, 35, 70, 75, 76, 79, 80, 94, and 99: These amendments are all of a clerical or clarifying nature. The Houses recedes on all these amendments with an amendment on no. 4, which makes a further clerical change.

On amendments nos. 24, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 38, 45, 48, 50, 52, 54, 56, 57, 58, 59, 62, 66, 71, 72, 78, 83, 90, 97, 114, 117, and 119: These amendments are changes in references to the United States Code which were brought up to date by referring to proper sections in the 1934 edition of the Code. The House recedes on all these amendments with an amendment on no. 117, which corrects a clerical error in the text of the House bill.

The Senate amended the title of the bill to conform to the Senate amendments. The House recedes.

AMENDMENTS REPORTED IN DISAGREEMENT

The committee of conference report in disagreement the following amendments of the Senate:

On amendment no. 95: The Senate amendment extends and makes applicable to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, from and after August 27, 1935, title III of the National Prohibition Act relating to industrial alcohol, and all provisions of the internal-revenue laws relating to the enforcement thereof, the respective insular governments to advance to the Treasury of the United States such funds as may be required from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of defraying all expenses incurred by the Treasury Department in connection with the enforcement in the islands of the title and regulations promulgated thereunder. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill.

On amendment no. 136: This amendment adds to the bill a new title designed to make the Federal Alcohol Administration an independent establishment of the Government instead of, as now, a division of the Treasury Department. While the name of the Administration is retained, the office of Administrator is abolished and his powers and duties are conferred and imposed upon the Federal Alcohol Administration, to be composed of three members appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The compensation of the members is fixed at $10,000 a year. The appointment of officers and employees of the Administration, except attorneys and necessary experts, is to be subject to the civil-service laws; and the compensation of all officers and employees is to be fixed in accordance with the Classification Act. The usual provisions have been inserted for continuing in force the rules, regulations, permits, etc., that have been issued by the Federal Alcohol Administrator and for the continuation of proceedings, hearings, investigations, and suits.

Section 505 in the amendment, which amends the third paragraph of section 5 (e) of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, clarifies that section and also limits the duties of internal-revenue officers with respect to withholding the release of distilled spirits from the bottling plant which are not covered by certificates of label approval or exemption granted by the Administrator.

Section 506 in the Senate amendment amends section 5 of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act to specify certain names which may be used on labels of wine produced in the United States.

Section 507 in the Senate amendment amends section 9 of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, which provides for the disposition of forfeited distilled spirits, wines, and malt beverages, to declare that nothing in such section 9 shall affect the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, under customs or internal-revenue laws, to remit or mitigate the forfeiture, or alleged forfeiture, of such distilled spirits, wines, or malt beverages.

R. L. DOUGHTON,
SAM B. HILL,
THOS. H. CULLEN,
FRED M. VINSON,
FRANK H. BUCK,
FRANK CROWTHER,
DAN'L A. REED,
THOS. A. JENKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I have had no requests for time on the report, and I therefore move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

Amendment no. 95: Page 66, after line 2, insert:

"(c) Title III of the National Prohibition Act, as amended, and all provisions of the internal-revenue laws relating to the enforcement thereof, are hereby extended to and made applicable to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, from and after August 27, 1935. The respective insular governments shall advance to the Treasury of the United States such funds as may be required from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of defraying all expenses incurred by the Treasury Department in connection with the enforcement in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands of the said title III and regulations promulgated thereunder. The funds so advanced shall be deposited in a separate trust fund in the Treasury of the United States and shall be available to the Treasury Department for the purposes of this subsection."

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 136: Page 94, after line 20, insert:

"TITLE V

A successor shall have a term of office expiring 3 years from the date of expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, except that a person appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of such term shall be appointed for the remainder of such term. No person shall be eligible for appointment or continue in office as a member if he is engaged or financially interested in, or is an officer or director of or employed by a company engaged in, the production or sale or other distribution of alcoholic beverages or the financing thereof. Each member shall, for his services, receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum, together with actual and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses while engaged in the performance of his duties as member outside the District of Columbia.

"(b) One of the members shall be designated by the President annually at the beginning of the calendar year as chairman and shall be the chief executive officer of the Administration; one of the members shall be designated by the President annually at the beginning of the calendar year as vice chairman of the Administration and shall perform the functions and duties of the chairman in his absence or in the event of his incapacity caused by illness; and one of the members, who shall be a lawyer, shall be designated by the President as general counsel of the Administration. The Administration may function notwithstanding vacancies, and a majority of the members in office shall constitute a quorum. The Administration shall meet at the call of the chairman or a majority of its members. The Administration is authorized to adopt an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed. The Administration shall be entitled to free use of the United States mails in the same manner as the executive departments.

"(c) The Administration is authorized and directed to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out its powers and duties.

"SEC. 503. (a) Sections 2 (b), 2 (c), and 2 (d) of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act are hereby repealed. "(b) All proceedings, hearings, investigations, or other matters pending before, or being carried on by, the Administrator shall be continued and brought to determination by the Administration.

"(c) No suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against any agency or officer of the United States shall abate by reason of the transfer of rights, privileges, powers, and duties, or the abolition of the office of Administrator, under the provisions of this title.

"SEC. 504. The unexpended balances of appropriations available for salaries and expenses of the Federal Alcohol Administration, as a division of the Treasury Department, shall be available for salaries and expenses of the Federal Alcohol Administration, as an independent establishment of the Government, including the salaries and expenses of the members of the Federal Alcohol Administration.

"SEC. 505. The third paragraph of section 5 (e) of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'In order to prevent the sale or shipment or other introduction of distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages in interstate or foreign commerce, if bottled, packaged, or labeled in violation of the requirements of this subsection, (1) no bottler of distilled spirits, no producer, blender, or wholesaler of wine, or proprietor of a bonded wine storeroom, and no brewer or wholesaler of malt beverages shall bottle, and (2) no person shall remove from customs custody, in bottles, for sale or any other commercial purpose, distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages, respectively, after such date as the Administrator fixes as the earliest practicable date for the application of the provisions of this subsection to any class of such persons (but not later than Aug. 15, 1936, in the case of distilled spirits, and Dec. 15, 1936, in the case of wine and malt beverages, and only after 30 days' public notice), unless, upon application to the Administrator, he has obtained and has in his possession a certificate of label approval covering the distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages, issued by the Administrator in such manner and form as he shall by regulations prescribe: Provided, That any such bottler of distilled spirits, or producer, blender, or wholesaler of wine, or proprietor of a bonded wine storeroom, or brewer or wholesaler of malt beverages shall be exempt from the requirements of this subsection if, upon application to the Administrator, he shows to the satisfaction of the Administrator that the distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages to be bottled by the applicant are not to be sold, or offered for sale, or shipped or delivered for shipment, or otherwise introduced in interstate or foreign commerce. Officers of internal revenue are authorized and directed to withhold the release of distilled spirits from the bottling plant unless such certificates have been obtained, or unless the application of the bottler for exemption has been granted by the Administrator; and customs officers are authorized and directed to withhold the release from customs custody of distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages, unless such certificates have been obtained. The district courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States court for any Territory shall have jurisdiction of suits to enjoin, annul, or suspend in whole or in part any final action by the Administrator upon any application under this subsection; or.'"

"SEC. 506. The second proviso of subdivision (e) of section 5 of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act is amended to read as follows: 'Provided further, That nothing herein nor any decision, ruling, regulation or other action of any Department of the Government or official thereof shall deny the right of any person to use wholly or in part the wine names or brands Port, Sherry, Burgundy, Sauterne, Haut Sauterne, Rhine (Hock), Moselle, Chianti, Chablis, Champagne, Tokay, Malaga, Madeira, Marsala, Claret, Vermouth, Barbera, Cabernet, St. Julien, Riesling, Zinfandel, Medoc, or Cognac, or any other geographic name of foreign origin, upon any of the foregoing produced in the United States if of the same type and the use of such name or brand is qualified by the name of the State or other locality in the United States in which the product is produced, and, in the case of the use of such name or brand on any label or in any advertisement, if such qualification is as conspicuous as such name or brand: And provided further, That nothing in this section shall be held in any wise to affect or abridge any of the powers granted the Federal Alcohol Administration by an Act of Congress entitled the "Federal Alcohol Administration Act", approved August 29, 1935, to provide standards of identity, quality, labeling, or other regulations save as herein expressly provided as to said names or brands.'

"SEC. 507. Section 9 of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act (U. S. C., 1934 ed., supp. I, title 27, sec. 209) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(e) Nothing in this section shall affect the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, under the customs or internal-revenue laws, to remit or mitigate the forfeiture, or alleged forfeiture, of such distilled spirits, wines, or malt beverages.'

"SEC. 508. This title, except sections 502 and 505 shall take effect when a majority of the members of the Federal Alcohol Administration first appointed under the provisions of section 502 qualify and take office."

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, amendment no. 136 involves title V of the bill. The only reason we brought it back in disagreement is that it carries an appropriation. We have therefore brought it back for a vote by the House; otherwise it would have been in the conference report. All of the matter in the amendment is agreed to, but because it involves an appropriation we had to bring it back to the House for a vote.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me this is a very important amendment, as it sets up a new bureau in the Government. I think the gentleman from Washington should explain fully to the House exactly what the bill intends to accomplish.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There was a unanimous agreement by the conferees on the question of establishing an independent agency to be known as the Federal Alcohol Administration, rather than having this agency in the Treasury Department.

Mr. SNELL. Just what kind of agency is this to be, and how much of an agency is it going to be, and what will it cost?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It will be an agency composed of three members with a salary of $10,000 each, and the cost, in addition to the cost of the agency itself, will probably be the same as it would be in the Treasury Department.

Mr. SNELL. If you set up an independent agency, it always takes on more employees, and so forth, and costs more than it would if it were in one of the regular departments.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There is no reason for that in this case.

Mr. SNELL. Whether there is any reason for it or not, we know that the experience in the Government has been that it does cost more, and I think the gentleman ought to explain the matter a little more fully.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is all there is to it. The gentleman understands that the Federal Alcohol Administration at the present time is an agency in the Treasury Department.

Mr. SNELL. And this is going to be an independent agency.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The amendment provides that instead of being an agency in the Treasury Department, the Federal Alcohol Administration will be an independent agency.

The appropriations available for the expenses and salaries of the Federal Alcohol Administration as an agency of the Treasury Department are to be available for the payment of expenses and salaries of this Administration as an independent agency.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman does not think that when we establish an independent agency that that agency thinks it is more important than when it was under some department, and therefore the expenses and general control, and so forth, begin to widen?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I hardly think that would be true, because we would have to have the same machinery, except the board itself.

Mr. SNELL. That has been the experience of government so far, as far as I know. I do not know that I am opposing this, but I think the gentleman ought to explain it very carefully to the House.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I have done my best to explain it. I do not know of anything further about it to explain.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Is there any limitation placed on the number of employees that this new agency may require?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The number of employees, of course, will be limited by the need of the service and by the appropriation provided therefor. There is the power of limitation in the Congress, through the power of appropriation in providing for these employees.

Mr. MICHENER. This provides that the employees be taken from the civil service?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. All except the experts.

Mr. MICHENER. How many experts?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. May I say that the only portion of this amendment that is really in disagreement is the language that appropriates money as placed in the amendment by the Senate. That is the reason it is necessary to bring back the amendment for the action of the House.

Mr. MICHENER. This carries how much in the way of appropriation?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It makes available to the Federal Alcohol Administration as an independent agency the unexpended balance appropriated for the expenses of the Administration as an agency in the Treasury Department.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It reappropriates.

Mr. MICHENER. If this new agency were set up there would be no money to carry on. Therefore the conference report provides sufficient money from money already appropriated to carry on?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is right.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. How will this affect the present personnel, the enforcement agency?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Presumably it will not affect the personnel.

Mr. HEALEY. I mean the civil-service personnel—inspectors and investigators—that are now employed by the alcohol tax unit?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. We have no information that there will be any change.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. In that respect, it is my understanding that, naturally, the present personnel will continue. In connection with the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington whether or not it was desired to have an independent agency because the primary purpose of the Treasury Department is for raising revenue, and this is a regulation provision?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. Really, the only change brought about is to take this out of the Treasury Department and create an independent agency? In every other respect it continues as it is now?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. The appropriation made to the Treasury Department for the purposes of this activity is authorized to be used by the new agency established; is that not right?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is right.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. CROWTHER. The gentleman will recollect that as one of the conferees, I, as well as some of the others, stood in favor of a single head in charge of this commission?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. CROWTHER. I finally yielded. My idea was that in the Federal Alcohol Administration we might have a single head, the same as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The question of expense was brought into the argument. I came to the conclusion that if we had an Administrator then he would have a deputy or assistant and he would have a general counsel. The law provides in this bill that one member of the Commission shall be appointed by the President as chairman, another as vice chairman, and the third one must be a lawyer who acts as general counsel. So that as between the two set-ups there was apparently no difference as regards the expense connected with the administration.

That is all I have to say in regard to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Washington.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL submits the following motion: "I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment no. 156 with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"'TITLE V

"'SECTION 501. (a) The Federal Alcohol Administration created as a division in the Treasury Department by section 2 (a) of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, approved August 29, 1935 (Public, No. 401, 74th Cong.), is hereby made an independent establishment of the Government. The office of Administrator of the Federal Alcohol Administration is abolished, and hereafter the Federal Alcohol Administration shall be composed of three members appointed as provided in section 502 of this title.

"'(b) All rights, privileges, powers, and duties conferred or imposed upon the Administrator of the Federal Alcohol Administration are conferred and imposed upon the Federal Alcohol Administration. All papers, records, and property of the Administrator and the Federal Alcohol Administration, as a division of the Treasury Department, are transferred to the Federal Alcohol Administration as an independent establishment of the Government.

"'(c) The Federal Alcohol Administration is authorized without regard to the civil-service laws, to appoint such attorneys and experts, and, subject to the civil-service laws, to appoint such other officers and employees, as it deems necessary to carry out its powers and duties; and the compensation of all such attorneys, experts, and other officers and employees shall be fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. All officers and employees appointed by the Administrator and engaged in carrying out his powers and duties shall be officers and employees of the Federal Alcohol Administration: Provided, That no such officer or employee who does not already possess a competitive classified civil-service status shall thereby acquire such status, except upon recommendation by the Federal Alcohol Administration to the Civil Service Commission, subject to such noncompetitive tests of fitness as the Commission may prescribe; and no such officer or employee, except attorneys and experts, may be retained in the Federal Alcohol Administration without appropriate civil-service status for a period longer than 60 days from the effective date of this section.

"'(d) All provisions of law applicable to the Administrator shall be applicable in the same manner and to the same extent to the Federal Alcohol Administration.

"'SEC. 502. (a) The members of the Federal Alcohol Administration shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than two members of the Administration shall be members of the same political party. The terms of office of the members first taking office shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, one at the end of the first year, one at the end of the second year, and one at the end of the third year after the date of the enactment of this act. A successor shall have a term of office expiring 3 years from the date of expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, except that a person appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of such term shall be appointed for the remainder of such term. No person shall be eligible for appointment or continue in office as a member if he is engaged or financially interested in, or is an officer or director of or employed by a company engaged in, the production or sale or other distribution of alcoholic beverages or the financing thereof. Each member shall, for his services, receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum, together with actual and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses while engaged in the performance of his duties as member outside the District of Columbia.

"'(b) One of the members shall be designated by the President annually at the beginning of the calendar year as chairman and shall be the chief executive officer of the Administration; one of the members shall be designated by the President annually at the beginning of the calendar year as vice chairman of the Administration and shall perform the functions and duties of the chairman in his absence or in the event of his incapacity caused by illness; and one of the members, who shall be a lawyer, shall be designated by the President as general counsel of the Administration. The Administration may function notwithstanding vacancies, and a majority of the members in office shall constitute a quorum. The Administration shall meet at the call of the chairman or a majority of its members. The Administration is authorized to adopt an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed. The Administration shall be entitled to free use of the United States mails in the same manner as the executive departments.

"'(c) The Administration is authorized and directed to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out its powers and duties.

"'SEC. 503. (a) Sections 2 (b), 2 (c), and 2 (d) of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act are hereby repealed. All rules, regulations, orders, permits, and certificates, prescribed or issued by the Administrator and in full force and effect on the effective date of this section, shall continue in full force and effect until duly modified, superseded, or revoked.

"'(b) All proceedings, hearings, investigations, or other matters pending before, or being carried on by, the Administrator shall be continued and brought to determination by the Administrator.

"'(c) No suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against any agency or officer of the United States shall abate by reason of the transfer of rights, privileges, powers, and duties, or the abolition of the office of Administrator, under the provisions of this title.

"'SEC. 504. The unexpended balances of appropriations available for salaries and expenses of the Federal Alcohol Administration, as a division of the Treasury Department, shall be available for salaries and expenses of the Federal Alcohol Administration, as an independent establishment of the Government, including the salaries and expenses of the members of the Federal Alcohol Administration.

"'"In order to prevent the sale or shipment or other introduction of distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages in interstate or foreign commerce, if bottled, packaged, or labeled in violation of the requirements of this subsection, (1) no bottler of distilled spirits, no producer, blender, or wholesaler of wine, or proprietor of a bonded wine storeroom, and no brewer or wholesaler of malt beverages shall bottle, and (2) no person shall remove from customs custody, in bottles, for sale or any other commercial purpose, distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages, respectively, after such date as the Administrator fixes as the earliest practicable date for the application of the provisions of this subsection to any class of such persons (but not later than Aug. 15, 1936, in the case of distilled spirits, and Dec. 15, 1936, in the case of wine and malt beverages, and only after 30 days' public notice), unless, upon application to the Administrator, he has obtained and has in his possession a certificate of label approval covering the distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages, issued by the Administrator in such manner and form as he shall by regulations prescribe: Provided, That any such bottler of distilled spirits, or producer, blender, or wholesaler of wine, or proprietor of a bonded wine storeroom, or brewer or wholesaler of malt beverages shall be exempt from the requirements of this subsection if, upon application to the Administrator, he shows to the satisfaction of the Administrator that the distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages to be bottled by the applicant are not to be sold, or offered for sale, or shipped or delivered for shipment, or otherwise introduced, in interstate or foreign commerce. Officers of internal revenue are authorized and directed to withhold the release of distilled spirits from the bottling plant unless such certificates have been obtained, or unless the application of the bottler for exemption has been granted by the Administrator; and customs officers are authorized and directed to withhold the release from customs custody of distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages, unless such certificates have been obtained. The District Courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States court for any Territory shall have jurisdiction of suits to enjoin, annul, or suspend in whole or in part any final action by the Administrator upon any application under this subsection; or."

"'SEC. 506. The second proviso of section 5 (e) of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act is amended to read as follows: "Provided further, That nothing herein nor any decision, ruling, regulation, or other action of any Department of the Government or official thereof shall deny the right of any person to use wholly or in part the wine names or brands Port, Sherry, Burgundy, Sauterne, Haut Sauterne, Rhine (Hock), Moselle, Chianti, Chablis, Tokay, Malaga, Madeira, Marsala, Claret, Vermouth, Barbera, Cabernet, Saint Julien, Riesling, Zinfandel, Medoc, or Cognac, or any other geographic name of foreign origin (except Champagne), upon any of the foregoing produced in the United States if of the same type and the use of such name or brand is qualified by the name of the State or other locality in the United States in which the product is produced, and, in the case of the use of such name or brand on any label or in any advertisement, if such qualification is as conspicuous as such name or brand: And provided further, That except as herein expressly provided as to said names or brands, nothing in this section shall be held in any wise to affect or abridge any of the powers granted to the Federal Alcohol Administration to provide standards of identity, quality, labeling, or other regulations."

"'SEC. 507. Section 9 of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act (U. S. C., 1934 ed., supp. I, title 27, sec. 209) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'"(e) Nothing in this section shall affect the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, under the customs or internal-revenue laws, to remit or mitigate the forfeiture, or alleged forfeiture, of such distilled spirits, wines, or malt beverages, or the authority of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to compromise any civil or criminal case in respect of such distilled spirits, wines, or malt beverages prior to commencement of suit thereon, or the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to compromise any claim under the customs laws in respect of such distilled spirits, wines, or malt beverages."

"'SEC. 508. This title, except sections 502, 505, and 507, shall take effect when a majority of the members of the Federal Alcohol Administration first appointed under the provisions of section 502 qualify and take office.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL].

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

CHALMETTE NATIONAL MONUMENT

Mr. DEROUEN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted a conference report (Rept. No. 2993) and statement on the bill (H. R. 5368) to provide for the addition of certain lands to Chalmette National Monument, in the State of Louisiana, and for other purposes.

REGULATION OF LOBBYING

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11663) to require reports of receipts and disbursements of certain contributions, to require the registration of persons engaged in attempting to influence legislation, to prescribe punishments for violation of this act, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and inserted its own bill in lieu thereof. The House receded from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, with an amendment which is a substitute both for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate bill, and the substitute agreed to by the conferees are noted below.

The first seven sections of the conference report are identical with the first seven sections of the House bill, with the exception of the following minor amendments:

(1) The first amendment requires persons expending money for the purposes set out in the act to register as well as those receiving money for such purposes.

(2) The House bill required the first report filed pursuant to this act to contain the name and address of each person who during the preceding 6 months made a contribution required to be reported. The conference report changes the wording to require such report to contain the name and address of each person making a contribution after the effective date of this act.

(3) In section 7, the words of the House bill, "to attempt to influence", are changed by the conference report to read, "for the purpose of attempting to influence."

The House bill required registration only of persons attempting to influence legislation pending before Congress. The Senate amendment added provisions requiring registration of persons who engage themselves for pay or for any consideration to attempt to influence any Federal department, bureau, agency, or Government official or employee to make, modify, alter, or cancel any contract with the United States, or any bureau, agency, or official, as such official, or to influence any such bureau, department, agency, or official in the administration of any governmental duty so as to give benefit or advantage to any private corporation or individual. The House accepted the Senate amendment with amendments, which is section 8 of the conference report. Under this section the report is to be filed with the bureau or agency sought to be influenced, in such form and detail and at such times as said bureau or agency shall prescribe by regulations. The statement to be filed must include the subject matter of such employment, and may include the nature and character of the retainer or employment and the amount of compensation received or to be received by such person directly or indirectly in connection therewith. Persons who merely appear before a committee or board in open session, giving testimony or making arguments, for or against any pending matter, and who engage in no further activities in connection therewith, are exempted from the provisions of the act.

All reports are required to be made under oath. The penalties for violation of the act are a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than 12 months, or by both such fine and imprisonment. Any person making a false affidavit shall be guilty of perjury and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 2 years.

Section 12 of the conference report is section 9 of the House bill. This section is the usual separability clause.

Section 13 of the conference report provides that this act shall not apply to practices or activities intended to be regulated by the Federal Corrupt Practices Act nor be construed as repealing any portion of said Federal Corrupt Practices Act, or any other statute heretofore enacted or any portion thereof. This is the same as section 10 of the House bill with the addition of the clause "or any other statute heretofore enacted or any portion thereof."

EMANUEL CELLER,
ZEBULON WEAVER,
FRANCIS E. WALTER,
JOHN E. MILLER,
U. S. GUYER,
WM. E. HESS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York explain the bill?

Mr. CELLER. The bill provides, briefly, for accountings by persons and organizations that are set up principally, and I use the word "principally" advisedly, for the purpose of influencing, directly or indirectly, any legislation or appropriation, or to influence, directly or indirectly, the passage or defeat of any legislation or an appropriation or an amendment to the Constitution, or to influence, directly or indirectly, the election or defeat of any person to any elective Federal office. These provisions require careful and rather minute and detailed bookkeeping and accounting of moneys received and disbursed. Political committees defined in the Federal Corrupt Practices Act are excepted.

Th esecond portion of the bill provides that any person—the term "person" includes a committee, association, or corporation—who shall engage himself for pay or any kind of consideration for the purpose of attempting to influence the passage or defeat of any legislation or appropriation and for that purpose appears before a committee or takes other appropriate action comes within the provisions of the act and must register with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate. Each person thus lobbying must continue to register quarterly so long as his employment continues. He must state his compensation, the name and address of his employer or employers, the moneys expended, the amount, and for what purpose. He must indicate whatever propaganda he has initiated and continued, and names of the papers, magazines, and periodicals carrying the statements and propaganda.

If there is a casual, a single, appearance before a committee, he need not register in that fashion. The provisions of the section, for example, would not apply to any person who merely appeared before a committee in support of or in opposition to pending legislation; the bill says so in so many words. It is the professional lobbyist that is sought by the bill. If a man appears before a committee and engages in no other activity in connection with a bill, no registration is necessary. If he appeared for pay in an attempt to influence legislation or balk the passage of a bill before a committee and received compensation therefor, he must register in the manner provided.

That, I may say, was the House bill in general terms. The Senate bill went further and provided a third general section setting up various requirements to be complied with by any person who for profit or consideration appears before any bureau, department, or governmental agency in an endeavor to influence those in charge of that agency, bureau, or department in the way of modifying a contract or changing the actions or influencing favorable actions of those officials in charge of such bureaus or departments. If they act for profit, they come within the provisions of the act and must register in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the departments, agencies, or bureaus. First, the appearance before the governmental agency must be for pay. Second, the attempt must be to influence the Government officials so as to confer some advantage upon the person thus appearing. Then registration is essential in pursuance of rules and regulations of the department before which such person appears.

The House conferees thought the Senate had gone too far on this matter of lobbying restrictions so far as executive departments were concerned. After considerable deliberation, it was agreed that we would go along partly with the Senate and require registration of anyone appearing for profit before a department, bureau, or agency in accordance with rules and regulations to be promulgated by the department, bureau, or agency. The Senate originally required that the rules and regulations must provide that the individuals thus appearing to influence the department must state the nature and character of the retainer and the amount of compensation, and give all manner and kind of details. As a result of the deliberations we came to this compromise, that the statement the lobbyist would have to file would be in accordance with rules and regulations of the department, without making it mandatory that the rules and regulations require the individual to state the nature and character and amount of the retainer. That was left purely discretionary with the department in their promulgation of rules and regulations. Thus we finally agreed that the disclosure of the retainer and details thereof be discretionary and not mandatory regulations. It is to be mandatory that the rules and regulations only require a statement of the subject matter in respect of which such person or lobbyist is retained.

Mr. SNELL. Does that mean that under the present bill, as the gentleman views it, if a man wanted to come to Washington and appear before a department in connection with some business for a firm he represented, that before he could appear he must register under the rules and regulations of the department?

Mr. CELLER. If he came here specifically engaged for pay in that appearance—yes.

Mr. SNELL. We would not expect a lawyer to represent a man and not be paid for his services.

Mr. CELLER. If he were a lawyer engaged for compensation by the principal to appear before a department, he would have to register according to the rules to be promulgated by that department.

Mr. SNELL. He would have to consult the rules first and disclose whatever information was required before he could appear before the committee or department?

Mr. CELLER. He would have to disclose whatever was required by the rules and regulations of the particular department before which he wished to appear.

Mr. SNELL. He would have to find out what the rules and regulations were first.

Mr. CELLER. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. As a matter of fact, the net result of this would be that the business would come to the man who was here in Washington registered.

Mr. CELLER. I do not think that is a fair inference to be drawn.

Mr. SNELL. I thought it was a fair question. It seems to me that is the way it would result.

Mr. CELLER. I cannot answer the question the way the gentleman wanted it answered. There could be no limitation as to who would have the right to register.

Mr. SNELL. I did not ask the gentleman to answer in any particular way. It seems to me it would drive business to those who are registered in Washington to appear before the departments and bureaus.

Mr. CELLER. Any man who seeks to do what this bill says he should not do offends against it. Any man who appears before the departments for compensation or profit would register and disclose what the rules and regulations require. That is nothing more than the Treasury Department requires now, and is nothing more than what many of the departments require now. The R. F. C., the S. E. C., the Federal Communications Commission, the Patents Bureau, and many other departments require no more, no less, than this bill's requirements in this connection.

As I say, instead of making a disclosure of the compensation received mandatory, it is left discretionary with the departments.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, the House bill was the Smith bill and the Senate bill was the Black bill.

These are known as the antilobbying bills. I understand the conferees are in unanimous agreement?

Mr. CELLER. They are in unanimous agreement.

Mr. MICHENER. The Smith bill, as it passed the House, was aimed directly at movements like the Father Coughlin movement and the Townsend movement. It required all of those people to keep books and a record of the individuals who gave a nickel or a dime. It required reports and things of that kind. Are those provisions still in the bill?

Mr. CELLER. Those provisions are in the bill in this sense: Any entity organized principally to influence legislation or to elect or defeat candidates for Federal office must keep a record of receipts and disbursements.

Any organization whose principal function is to influence legislation or influence such Federal elections must keep these accounts and do this filing.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, if this bill is strictly complied with it would be physically impossible for the Coughlin group or the Townsend group—and I am not speaking for them—to function as they do now.

Mr. CELLER. I am not familiar enough with the practices of these organizations. If they come under the bill they would have to comply, whether it would be easy or difficult so to do. For example, the American Federation of Labor would not have to register under the provisions of this act, because the American Federation of Labor has not been principally devised and organized to elect Federal officials or to influence legislation. Those are only incidental functions. The American Federation of Labor embraces many purposes, only one of which has to do, namely, with the influencing of legislation. The word "principally" was added so as to exempt organizations like the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, the American Federation of Labor, and so forth.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. In the House bill there were provisions to the effect that these organizations would have to file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives the names of all contributors, whether the contribution was a nickel or a dime, or what not; and such organizations as the gentleman from Michigan referred to, having millions of contributors of small amounts, would have to file the names of those contributors. Is that section still in the bill?

Mr. CELLER. Yes; it is still in the bill. It is the duty of House conferees always to preserve as much as possible of the House bill. Conferees would not be doing their duty otherwise.

Mr. BOILEAU. At the time that that bill was up in the House for consideration I offered an amendment which required the organization to file a statement showing the total amount of the contributions, but listing only the names of those who contributed $5 or more. I understood there was some concession made along that line. However, they still would have to file the names of the millions of people who may have contributed 5 or 10 cents each month?

Mr. CELLER. We took the Smith bill. The Smith bill remained intact. The House voted on that bill, and we dared not change it. The Senate concurred in it.

Mr. BOILEAU. I would like to go along with the gentleman on this bill, but it seems to me that is an unreasonable provision.

Mr. CELLER. Remember, the House passed the bill originally with the provision the gentleman objected to in it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Did I understand the gentleman to say that this bill is applicable only to those corporations which are formed principally for the purpose of influencing legislation or influencing Federal elections?

Mr. CELLER. That is correct.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. A public utility holding company is not formed principally for the purpose of influencing legislation. Therefore a public utility holding company would not come under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. CELLER. They might. For example, they would if a public utility hired somebody who appeared before a committee and paid that somebody a compensation. If they hired a lawyer to appear before a committee or department or hired some agent in Washington for compensation to appear before a committee or to appear before a department, that lawyer or that agent would have to register and state who his principal was and give the details of the retainer.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. But let us take such organizations as mentioned by the gentleman from Michigan, such as the Townsendites, Father Coughlinites, and the unemployment groups. These groups will have to register and they will have to give a list of every single contributor, whether the contributor has donated 5 cents or a penny, is that right?

Mr. CELLER. If the Townsend organization is created principally for the purpose of influencing legislation it would have to tell what the contributions were and where they come from, and tell how the moneys were dispersed and for what purpose.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. If the gentleman will bear with me, may I make this further statement? Insofar as the public-utility companies are concerned, as they are not organized principally for the purpose of influencing legislation, the same obligations do not fall on them which this bill places on such organizations as unemployment groups, the Townsend group, Father Coughlinites, and various other groups.

So that in that respect the public-utility holding companies are not by any means curbed in their lobbying down here as you are curbing the unemployment organizations, the Townsend group, the National Union for Social Justice, and various other groups who openly and aboveboard admit they exist for the purpose of influencing legislation. This group penalizes those who operate in the broad daylight and permits those who operate in the dark to continue their nefarious practices.

Mr. CELLER. I do not agree with the gentleman at all.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Well, the public-utilitity holding companies are not curbed at all.

Mr. CELLER. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman show me the distinction?

Mr. CELLER. If the public-utility companies sent someone down here to appear before the various departments or agencies or to appear before the gentleman's committee or my committee, and their agent or lawyer received compensation, the agent or lawyer would have to register.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. But they do not have to list their contributors because those organizations are not formed principally for the purpose of influencing legislation. The unemployed and other groups are forced to list their contributors. The joker in this bill becomes more and more apparent.

Mr. CELLER. I may say to the gentleman that if these utilities banded together and collected funds to defray expenses to be incurred to influence legislation or to defeat legislation these utilities would have to give an accounting of all contributions to the fund, and a list of all contributors, the purposes for which the money was raised. They would fare no better nor worse than the Townsend group. Such fund would be one raised to influence elections or legislation and hence the accounting would have to be filed periodically with the Clerk of the House.

Remember, no one can devise a perfect bill. This bill seeks to scotch the common evil of unwholesome and illegitimate and improper lobbying. To do a great good it may do some little injustice. It is not a perfect bill. No perfect bill is possible.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. But under this bill the public-utility holding companies are protected.

Mr. CELLER. That is not so. They must comply if they attempt to do any of the things covered by the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, the gentleman has suggested that the American Federation of Labor, for instance, would not be compelled to register. By the same token the National Manufacturers' Association, the Chamber of Commerce, and other agencies engaged in influencing legislation in Washington would not be compelled to register provided they had some other activity. Now, as a matter of fact, this bill if enacted into law and carried out would require the filing once each month of every contributor, for instance, to the Townsend plan. There would be necessarily a filed list of the members in good standing and paying dues of the several Townsend clubs throughout the country. Everybody who contributed to Father Coughlin would be compelled to have his name entered by the Clerk here at least once a month and the amount he gave.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman is taking for granted he knows what the plan, scope, and purposes of the Father Coughlin organization and the Townsend organization are. I have not examined the charter or bylaws of those organizations, and I do not know.

Mr. MICHENER. Neither have I. I take what they state.

Mr. CELLER. I do not know what comes within the purview of their organization or charter. For example, if they are organized principally for the purpose of influencing legislation here they would come within the provisions of this bill. As for the National Manufacturers Association or the United States Chamber of Commerce, if they, for example, collect a fund from their Members, just as Townsend collects a fund from his adherents, for the purpose of influencing legislation they would come under this bill's restrictions. There are no favorites. There are no special privileges; all are treated alike.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. If my friend says that the American Federation of Labor is exempt, how is it that he also says that the public utilities are included?

Mr. CELLER. The American Federation of Labor, I take it, from my knowledge of that organization, has various purposes that it seeks to accomplish. It seeks to better labor conditions in many other ways other than through legislation.

Mr. McCORMACK. So have the public utilities.

Mr. CELLER. Just a minute. I started to say that the American Federation of Labor is not principally engaged in the practice of changing statutes or laws.

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. CELLER. Now, a utility corporation, if it wants to effect a change in a statute, usually hires a lawyer or some sort of agent to come here for compensation and appear before the various committees or appear before the various bureaus. The American Federation of Labor usually sends its own employees down here.

Mr. McCORMACK. Not necessarily.

Mr. CELLER. Yes; I have inquired about that. It does not hire a lawyer specifically to appear before a committee and pay him just for that job.

Mr. McCORMACK. Not always.

Mr. CELLER. It has a legislative branch among its activities, over which there presides an officer or officers or aides, and they come down to the various committees. They do not receive any specific compensation for their work here, and therefore they would not come within the purview of this bill. Their appearance is incidental to many other functions or activities.

Mr. McCORMACK. I cannot see the distinction.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SWEENEY. The gentleman is making a fine explanation, but what I want to know is this: Are we going to get any time to oppose this matter? The gentleman is in charge of the time.

Mr. CELLER. I shall be pleased to yield time.

Mr. SWEENEY. Is the gentleman going to consume all the time?

Mr. CELLER. I did not intend to do so, and I shall be very pleased to desist now.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. As a matter of fact, as the bill is now written, it is a discriminatory bill against the organizations that are formed wholly for the purpose of influencing legislation.

Mr. CELLER. That is a correct assumption.

Mr. HEALEY. And some of these other organizations not formed for that purpose may influence legislation just as much.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill and we ought to have a quorum here. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I withhold it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In view of the situation which has developed—we did not think this matter would take so long—it is my purpose to move to recess very shortly.

First, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD two speeches, one made by Postmaster General Farley and one by General Hines, explaining the distribution of the bonus bonds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

DELIVERY AND PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE BONDS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following special radio message of Postmaster General James A. Farley to the veterans of the Nation explaining the final preparations for the delivery and payment of the adjusted-service bonds over a Nation-wide radio hookup (National Broadcasting Co., blue network), on June 13, 1936:

It is my privilege tonight to bring to the men and women who participated in the World War a last-minute message explaining the final preparations for the delivery and payment of adjusted-service bonds.

This will be a big task; its magnitude can hardly be appreciated by one not having an intimate knowledge of the numerous details as worked out by the three Government agencies concerned, namely, the Veterans' Administration, the Treasury Department, and the Post Office Department.

Approximately 3,518,000 veterans will receive 38,000,000 bonds, valued at $1,900,000,000. These shipments by mail will total 300 tons in weight, enough to fill completely more than 25 full-sized railway postal cars.

The first step necessary was the surrender by the veteran of his or her adjusted-service certificate and the filing of an application. The Veterans' Administration is the Federal agency which reviews these applications and determines the amounts to be paid.

To the Treasury Department went the equally difficult job of working out the many details incident to the issuance and preparation of the bonds for mailing, as well as their redemption.

In order that the veterans may be accommodated to the fullest extent and put to as little inconvenience as possible, the Post Office Department, with its trained personnel and more than 45,000 post offices located in all parts of the United States, Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam and Samoa, has been called upon to deliver the bonds and make payment on request.

The Postal Service welcomes this opportunity to serve the veterans and fully appreciates the importance of the undertaking.

There is one point I wish to make clear—the bonds may not be dispatched or delivered by the Postal Service until June 15, the date prescribed by law for first release. The dispatch of millions of the bonds will commence immediately after 12 o'clock tomorrow night. On Monday thousands of veterans will actually have the bonds in their possession and many who desire to redeem them will receive their checks a few days thereafter.

All veterans will receive their adjusted-service bonds by registered mail, together with checks for odd amounts of less than $50 and a circular letter giving detailed information concerning certification and payment. Delivery will be made to the addressee only. Under no circumstances may delivery be made to other than the person named as the addressee, even though addressed in care of some person, firm, hotel, or institution. It is important, therefore, that veterans arrange to be at their homes or at the addresses given by them in their applications when delivery of the bonds is expected. If delivery cannot be made at the post office to which originally addressed, the registered letter will be returned to the sender, as it may not be forwarded to another office.

In some of the larger cities postmasters will arrange for a night delivery starting about 5:30 p. m. This arrangement will relieve veterans of the necessity of losing time from their places of employment.

In the large cities and many of the small towns, announcements have been made over the radio and through the press advising veterans the date delivery is to start. Every attempt will be made by the Postal Service to deliver the bonds to the veteran at home for the reason that it will be much easier to furnish suitable identification there than it would be at the post-office delivery windows. I would advise each veteran who is not known to the carrier on his route to have someone available to identify him who is acquainted with the carrier.

Due to incomplete applications, the Treasury Department may not be able to turn over all veterans' bonds to the Postal Service by June 15, but you may rest assured that bonds received at post offices subsequent to that date will receive the same speedy service.

Veterans residing on rural routes will receive their bonds from the rural carriers. It will be necessary for veterans on star routes to call at post offices for their bonds, because it would be unlawful for the postmaster to turn such letters over to the star-route carrier, as he is not a regular classified postal employee. However, the veterans on star routes need make only one trip to the post office for delivery of the bonds and payment if desired.

Now as to details concerning payment: All post offices, wherever located, will certify to requests of veterans for payment, and 241 post offices have been selected to issue checks.

When a veteran desires payment all he need do is to go to his local post office, identify himself, and sign the request for payment on the back of each bond. The postmaster will then make the necessary certification, and if his office is not authorized to issue a check he will send the bonds to a central office, where a check for the proper amount will be issued and mailed direct to the veteran's address. This check will be a warrant drawn against the Treasurer of the United States and may be cashed by the veteran in the same manner as other checks—through banks, stores, and other business establishments.

In the event a veteran is not personally known to the postmaster or an employee of his post office he should have one or two responsible persons with him who are known to identify him. This is necessary for the reason that postal employees who certify to requests for payment will be held personally responsible for all improper certifications. If you are a member of a veterans' organization, it is suggested that you contact the officers of your post, and I have been assured that arrangements will be made by them to help you secure necessary identification.

It was realized that because of the large number of veterans to be served during the first 2 or 3 days the space in post offices at many of the larger cities would be inadequate to accommodate the veterans and the necessary witnesses. Arrangements have therefore been made to obtain additional space in which to set up units to take care of the certifications.

Relative to requests for certification for payment of bonds, it has been made plain to the veterans throughout the country that they do not have to cash their bonds at this time. In fact, it has been pointed out that veterans, who are in position to do so, may hold these bonds as security and draw 3 percent interest on them. The interest on these bonds begins on June 15, 1936, but if they are cashed before June 15, 1937, they will draw no interest.

It has also been suggested that veterans who are not in immediate need of funds should hold their bonds for a time in order that those less fortunate may receive first attention.

There are other methods provided by the Treasury Department for having bonds certified, such as by officers in charge of any home, hospital, or other facility of the Veterans' Administration, any executive officer of a bank or trust company, judges and clerks of the United States courts under seal of the court, United States collectors of customs and internal revenue, commanding officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard of the United States, and certain designated officials of the Treasury Department, but bonds certified by anyone except a postal employee must be sent direct to the Treasurer of the United States, Washington, D. C.

It is evident from a number of letters which I have received that many veterans, civic organizations, and business establishments have been misinformed about the plans worked out for the payment of the bonds. They apparently are under the impression that veterans will be compelled to leave their cities and towns of residence for the purpose of obtaining certification to their request for payment and also for the payment of the bonds.

I want to emphasize that no one need go beyond his local post office. A check for the proper amount will be mailed direct to him at the address furnished, and therefore no community will be deprived of any benefits which might result from the cashing of the checks.

I had the privilege a few weeks ago of conferring in Washington with the national commanders and other representatives of the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and Disabled American Veterans. There was an open discussion as to ways and means of placing the bonds in the hands of the veterans and redeeming them at the very earliest practicable date. This conference was of inestimable value in making the arrangements. I appreciated their suggestions and assurances of cooperation, and I welcome continued cooperation on the part of these organizations and also the assistance of fraternal, labor, and civic organizations, service clubs, and all public-spirited citizens to the end that there shall be no avoidable delay in the payments to veterans.

In concluding my remarks I want each veteran and others interested to know that the Post Office Department in Washington and the Postal Service throughout the entire country have planned weeks in advance to handle and pay the bonds without any unnecessary delay. I have directed that the procedure be such that the veterans shall not be put to any undue inconvenience or hardship. Detailed instructions have been in the possession of all postmasters for more than 2 weeks and they have had opportunity to make all necessary arrangements. I am confident that when the payment of the bonds is completed it will be found that the postmasters and postal employees will have performed a vast job in a most creditable manner.

PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following radio address of Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, relative to the payment of adjusted-service certificates over the blue network of the National Broadcasting Co. from 7:15 to 7:30, eastern standard time, on Saturday evening, June 13, 1936:

The Postmaster General has just told you of the plans that have been formulated and the methods which will be employed to deliver to the veterans their adjusted-service bonds. I do not propose to tell veterans what they shall do with their bonds after they receive them, as the veterans of the World War have long since reached their majority and require no such counsel. In fact, I believe it to be almost a truism that those who need advice do not heed it, and those that heed it do not need it.

However, I would like to suggest to the veterans that before they decide upon the disposition which they will make of their bonds they give consideration to some of the more important factors relating to them. Where there is an immediate need for cash for a specific purpose the veteran, of course, will desire to convert his bonds into cash; but in so doing it should be remembered that it is not necessary that all of the bonds be converted at one time, as the veteran is afforded the privilege of securing cash up to any amount represented in the whole and retaining the remaining bonds for such period as may suit his convenience. If there exists no emergent condition which requires that the bonds be cashed, I would like to offer the suggestion that before surrendering the extraordinary benefits to be derived by holding the bonds that it be ascertained how the proceeds may be safely otherwise invested, keeping in mind that the insurance represented in the adjusted-service certificate no longer exists, as it has been surrendered.

I strongly suspect that it is not unlikely that many veterans will be called upon by persons who have ingenious schemes to assist veterans in the spending of the money represented by their adjusted-service bonds. Some will no doubt attempt to demonstrate how the veteran can more advantageously invest his money than by retaining it in the form of service bonds. I doubt if I need to advise veterans carefully to investigate the various schemes suggested, because by this time they, no doubt, have worked out in their own way the plan they expect to follow, but it is my hope that every bond will be retained if cash is not needed urgently, and if cashed the proceeds will be used for some worthy purpose.

Every effort has been made by the Government agencies charged with the operational functions to place the adjusted-service bonds in the hands of veterans as soon after June 15 as is possible, and the Veterans' Administration is now current in the handling of applications filed. The amount of work involved is so great as to make it nearly impossible for even the most imaginative fully to comprehend its volume and complexities. More than 3,000,000 applications have been received and acted upon. It is estimated that the total amount involved in applications already approved will approximate $1,650,000,000, and the average payment to veterans will be about $550. In some few instances, because of certain complications, it has been necessary to delay final action pending the acquiring of further information. I assure you that the Veterans' Administration is working on these cases and settlement will be effected as quickly as possible. So, if perchance you do not receive your bonds on the 15th or 16th of this month, please do not become impatient and write to the Veterans' Administration; the next mail may bring your bonds, and to write may cause a further delay.

The task of administering the Adjusted Compensation Payment Act, which is the statute under which the adjusted-service certificates became immediately payable, is an enormous one involving millions of separate operations. The Veterans' Administration was called upon to recalculate over 3,000,000 veterans' accounts and to determine eligibility for payment and to certify the amount due each veteran.

Upon the Treasury Department devolved the printing and issuance of the bonds and checks, which means that over 40,000,000 individual pieces of paper had to be printed and thereafter inscribed with the veteran's name and other necessary identifying data; and the printing job was not an ordinary one, as the standard for printing Government obligations is so high that the slightest smear or other irregularity is not countenanced. The magnitude of such an undertaking beggars description, and its successful accomplishment should be a matter of great pride to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Post Office Department is charged with the duty of distributing and cashing the bonds, and its job would be well-nigh impossible were it not for the fact that it is so well organized and by experience equipped to bear unusual burdens.

The General Accounting Office, while it will not have direct contact with the veterans, has a very important part in the procedure.

I can say with all modesty that in my opinion each department of the Government has discharged its duties in a most efficient manner, and the teamwork has been remarkable with an absolute lack of any friction. In fact it would seem from the standpoint of the Veterans' Administration that each department was endeavoring to outdo the other in cooperativeness.

The help of the American Legion, the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars did not even have to be solicited, as the national commanders of these organizations immediately, upon the enactment of the law, generously offered their full assistance; and I want to say that the aid which they have rendered has been of inestimable value and their uniform attitude has been that of helpful cooperation.

I desire to thank the National Broadcasting Co. for this opportunity of speaking to you.

SOCIALIST PARTY PLATFORM

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request.

I have been requested, Mr. Speaker, by the national affairs committee of the Socialist Party, in view of the fact they have no representation of the Socialist Party in this body, to ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD the Socialist Party platform adopted in Cleveland, Ohio, on May 26, 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

SOCIALIST PARTY PLATFORM ADOPTED IN CLEVELAND, OHIO, ON MAY 26, 1936

The Socialist Party of the United States pledges itself anew to the task of building a society under which the industries of the country shall be socially owned and democratically managed for the common good; a society under which security, plenty, peace, and freedom shall be the heritage of all.

THE OLD DEAL FAILS

Eight years ago the people of this country voted to continue the capitalist Old Deal. The purpose of this deal was to preserve the rights of the few who own most of the Nation's wealth. Under the Old Deal the economic machine was plunged into the worst depression in our history.

THE NEW DEAL FAILS

Four years ago the voters of the United States threw their support to the New Deal. They elected to office Franklin D. Roosevelt and the Democratic Party. The New Deal, like the Old Deal, has utterly failed. Under it big business was given almost unheard-of powers. Untold wealth was destroyed. Prices rose. Profits advanced. Wages lagged. Twelve million men and women are still jobless, and hunger and destitution exist throughout the land.

Under the New Deal attacks have been made on our civil liberties more vicious than at any period since the days immediately following the World War. Gag and loyalty bills have been rushed through our legislatures. Labor organizers have been seized, kidnaped, maltreated, killed.

The militia has been used to crush attempts of labor to organize. Lynching, race discrimination, and the development of Fascist trends have continued unabated. Against these infringements of human rights the Democratic administration has kept an ominous silence.

Under the New Deal we are now spending on our Army and Navy three times as much as before the World War.

CAPITALISM MEANS INSECURITY

Under the capitalist Old Deal and the capitalist New Deal America has drifted increasingly toward insecurity, suppression, and war.

Insecurity is but the logical result of the workings of capitalism. For under capitalism, new and old, the many work for the owners of the machines and land. The owners will not employ the workers unless they expect to extract a profit. Labor is forced to divide up its earnings with the owning group.

With their scanty wages, the workers are able to buy only a part of the goods which they create. Goods pile up. Factories close. Workers are discharged. The country finds itself face to face with another depression.

In the past after a period of hard times we could depend upon the settlement of the West, the development of new foreign markets, and the rapid expansion of our population to revive industry. These forces can no longer be depended upon, as formerly, to keep the system going while our gross and unjust inequality of wealth, our monopoly prices, and our growing debt structure are sowing the seeds of more tragic depressions in the days ahead.

CAPITALISM SOWS SEEDS OF DICTATORSHIP

Our capitalist system is also sowing the seeds of dictatorship. As unemployment increases under capitalism the masses, to save themselves from starvation, are compelled to make even greater demands on the Government for relief and for public jobs. These demands are resisted by the propertied classes, fearful of higher taxes. Restlessness grows.

Demand for greater appropriations increase. The struggle between the House of Have and the House of Want becomes ever more intense. Big business seeks to deny the masses their constitutional rights. Fascist trends develop, trends that only a powerful and militant labor movement on the economic and political fields can successfully stay.

CAPITALISM BRINGS WAR

Militarism, likewise, under a declining capitalism, becomes an ever greater menace. As unrest increases, the masters of industry seek to use the military forces as the bulwark of reaction at home. They support higher military budgets. They look toward imperialist adventures abroad as a means of diverting attention from the unrest at home, and of gaining new markets, new investment areas, new sources of raw material.

A race begins that can have but one ending—an international war. The Japanese seizure of Manchuria and Italy's invasion of Ethiopia are but examples of the forces at work under capitalism. These adventures may well be the forerunners of another world conflict.

SOCIALISM PROVIDES ONLY SOLUTION

In socialism and in socialism alone will we find the solution of our problem. Under socialism the socially necessary industries would be socially owned and democratically administered by workers, consumers, and technicians. The farmer working his own farm would be secure in its possession. The workers would no longer be forced to pay tribute to private owners. They would be able to buy back the goods they created.

SOCIALISM AND THE GOOD LIFE

Industry, finding a market for these goods, would run to capacity without periodic break-downs. Unemployment and the wastes of unplanned industry would cease. Our national income would double or treble. Every useful worker would be assured of high living standards, short hours, freedom of thought and action, and a chance to live the good life. The young would be guaranteed an opportunity for a well-rounded education. The old, the sick, the invalided would be assured the necessaries of life. Industrial autocracy and war would pass. An economy of scarcity would give way to an economy of abundance.

Such a society cannot be obtained without a mighty struggle. That struggle must be made both by workers and farmers, organized on the economic and political fields and dedicated to the creation of a cooperative commonwealth.

In their fight for power and socialism the workers and farmers must gain new strength and unity by their daily struggle against poverty and exploitation. To improve the conditions of life and labor and thereby to weld together the strength and solidarity of the masses, the Socialist Party pledges itself to fight for a number of immediate proposals in legislative halls and side by side with labor in field and factory and office.

1. Constitutional changes

We propose the adaptation of the Constitution to the needs of the times through the farmers' and workers' rights amendment, ending the usurped power of the Supreme Court to declare social legislation unconstitutional and reaffirming the right of Congress to acquire and operate industries. We also propose to change the Constitution so as to make future amendments less difficult and pledge our continued support of the child-labor amendment.

2. Social ownership

We propose the social ownership and democratic control of mines, railroads, the power industry, and other key industries, and the recognition of public industries of the right of collective bargaining.

3. Relief, insurance, jobs

We propose an immediate appropriation by Congress of $6,000,000,000 to continue Federal relief to the unemployed for the coming year; the continuance of W. P. A. projects at union wages; the inauguration of a public-housing program for the elimination of the Nation's slums and the building of modern homes for the workers at rents they can afford to pay; a Federal system of unemployment insurance and of old-age pensions for persons 60 years of age and over, with contributions for such social-insurance systems to be raised from taxes on incomes and inheritances, as provided in the Frazier-Lundeen bill; and adequate medical care of the sick and injured as a social duty, not as a private or public charity. Such services should be financed by taxation and should be democratically administered.

4. Youth

We propose the passage of the American Youth Act to meet the immediate educational and economic needs of young people; adequate Federal appropriations for public schools and free city colleges with a view to making possible a full education for all young people; and the abolition of the C. C. C., the National Youth Administration and other governmental agencies dealing with the youth problem which threaten the wage and the living standards of organized labor.

5. Taxation

We propose a drastic increase of income and inheritance taxes on the higher income levels and of excess-profits taxes and wide experimentation in land-values taxation.

6. Labor legislation

We propose the establishment of the 30-hour week; the abolition of injunctions in labor disputes; the prohibition of company unions, company spying, and private guards and gunmen; and the prohibition of the use of police, deputy sheriffs, and militia and Federal troops in labor disputes.

7. Agriculture

We propose the abolition of tenant and corporation farming and the substitution of the use-and-occupancy title for family-sized farms and the conversion of plantations and corporation farms into cooperative farms. We propose that the marketing, processing, and distribution of farm products be taken over by bona-fide cooperatives and other agencies to be created for this purpose. We propose that farm prices be stabilized at cost of production to the working farmer, such stabilization to be made by representatives of organized working farmers and consumers.

While these changes are taking place we urge:

a. That immediate relief be provided for debt-laden working farmers by advancing Government credit on such terms as do not threaten the farmer with the loss of his farm.

b. That social insurance be provided against crop failures.

8. Civil liberties

We urge the abolition of all laws that interfere with the right of free speech, free press, free assembly, and the peaceful activities of labor in its struggle for organization and power; the enforcement of constitutional guaranties of economic, political, legal, and social equality for the Negro and all other oppressed minorities; and the enactment and enforcement of a Federal antilynching law.

9. Militarism and war

Not a penny, not a man to the military arms of the Government. We reaffirm our opposition to any war engaged in by the American Government. We propose the elimination of military training from our schools; the abandonment of imperialistic adventures of a military or economic nature abroad; the maintenance of friendly relations with Soviet Russia; and the strengthening of neutrality laws, to the end that we may ward off immediate wars while fighting for the attainment of a social order which will eliminate the chief causes of war.

10. Cooperation

We recognize the importance of the consumers' cooperative movement, though realizing that it alone cannot be depended upon to achieve a Socialist cooperative commonwealth. We urge the Socialist and the organized-labor movement to give their support to consumers' cooperatives to the end that it may become a valuable auxiliary to labor on the economic and political fields, and that it may help lay the foundation for a new economic order. We urge the encouragement by the Federal Government by every legitimate means of genuine consumers' cooperation.

The Socialist Party calls upon the workers, farmers, and all advocates of social justice to join with it in its struggle to widen the channels through which may be made peaceful, orderly, and democratic progress; to resist all trends toward insecurity, fascism, and war; to strengthen labor in its battles for better conditions, and for increasing power; to refuse to support the parties of capitalism, or any of their candidates, and to unite with it in its historic struggle toward a cooperative world.

AIR CORPS OF THE ARMY

Mr. McSWAIN submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 11140) to provide more effectively for the national defense by further increasing the effectiveness and efficiency of the Air Corps of the Army of the United States.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SWEENEY. Do I understand the conference report submitted by Mr. CELLER, which was under consideration, is the matter now before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further consideration of the conference report on the so-called antilobby bill be postponed until tomorrow.

Mr. SWEENEY. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further consideration of the so-called antilobby bill be postponed until Wednesday at the earliest.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what my friend from New York means by "the earliest."

Mr. O'CONNOR. I mean that it will not be taken up tomorrow.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why should this antilobbying bill not be the unfinished business in the morning? This is a most important bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We have other business that was scheduled to be taken up tomorrow, and this is a controversial matter.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the bill that is to be taken up tomorrow that is more important than the antilobby bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. We had planned to take up the bituminous-coal bill.

Mr. BLANTON. That also is a controversial matter. I do not think that is as important as the pending bill, and I object.

Mr. SNELL. In view of the pending situation, I think the gentleman from New York should state what is coming up tomorrow.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Subject, of course, to recognition by the Speaker for the bringing up of conference reports, it is planned to take up the coal bill tomorrow.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there is no bill before the Congress more important than the pending antilobbying bill, and I object.

PROTEST AGAINST REDUCTION OF TARIFF ON CHERRIES

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a letter to the Secretary of State's office.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a letter written to the Secretary of State by Members in Congress from Michigan protesting against the reduction of the tariff on cherries made in the reciprocal-trade agreement with France:

JUNE 4, 1936.

Hon. CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HULL: We have just been informed that under the trade agreement with France the tariff on maraschino and candied cherries not in brine nor sulphur and not in their natural state was reduced from 9½ cents a pound plus 40 percent ad valorem to 9½ cents a pound plus 20 percent ad valorum. Your Department further informs us that this reduction upon a basis of the 1934 importations represents a reduction of the tariff from 96 percent to 76 percent. Under the "most-favored-nation clause" adopted by you in your reciprocal-trade agreements, this concession permits the importation of these cherries by any other nation, including Italy, with the same reduction in tariff which is given France.

For your information, approximately 22,000,000 pounds of Italian cherries in addition to cherries from other countries were shipped into this country for the maraschino trade in 1929, and prior to the time this tariff was placed on the importation of this product. In 1934, after this tariff had been in operation approximately 4 years and industry had had an opportunity of operating, the importation of this product was reduced to approximately 700,000 pounds. The remainder of the maraschino-cherry trade was supplied by domestic cherry growers and manufacturers. In view of the fact that there has been a surplus of cherries in this country for several years past, this has been an important factor in keeping the cherry industry from being completely demoralized. The maraschino-cherry trade has absorbed from 10 to 15 percent of the total crop, which has been a decisive factor in preventing a still greater surplus and a complete break-down of prices.

The above tariff rate was based upon the difference in the cost of production in this country and in the European countries, represented mainly in the difference of the cost of labor. The French trade agreement permits the importation of the finished product which represents approximately 80 percent labor. The price the cherry grower receives for his cherries is ultimately determined by the price the consumer pays for the finished product. All cherries in brine, either domestic or foreign, must ultimately meet this foreign competition as a finished product. A 20-percent reduction on cherries in brine, which are worth about 10 cents a pound, would have meant a reduction in the price of the finished product of approximately 2 cents a pound. We are informed that the candied or finished cherries sell for about 30 cents a pound, and therefore a 20-percent reduction would mean a reduction of 6 cents a pound. In view of the difference in the cost of labor in European countries and in this country, this reduction will throw open the door to the importation of manufactured cherries, will deprive the home grower of his market, and will add to the surplus crop of the United States in any year in which a normal crop is produced. All of these facts were presented to the fact-finding committee of the Tariff Commission a year ago.

We, the undersigned members of the Michigan delegation in Congress, protest against the reduction of the tariff on this product.

Yours truly,

ALBERT J. ENGEL.

ROY O. WOODRUFF.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the motion to recess until this evening is adopted, under the previous action of the House the Consent Calendar will be taken up this evening. Will the Smith lobby bill be the first order of business tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. It is the unfinished business before the House until disposed of. The Chair will state, however, and the Chair thinks it is proper to make this statement, that the spirit of the understanding was that tonight the Consent Calendar would be considered.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to propound an inquiry of the gentleman from New York preliminary to withdrawing my objection. I understand that the conference report on the lobby bill is to be disposed of in this session.

Mr. O'CONNOR. So I understand.

Mr. BLANTON. And I understand that if we recess until 7:30 o'clock tonight there will be no bills taken up tonight except those on the Consent Calendar?

Mr. O'CONNOR. If we have that agreement.

Mr. BLANTON. That will be the agreement, will it?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I was going to again present my unanimous consent request to which the gentleman objected.

Mr. BLANTON. If that should be granted and the gentleman should move to recess until 7:30 this evening, we can understand that there will be no other business taken up except bills on the Consent Calendar?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That was the spirit of the agreement.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] that the further consideration of the conference report on the so-called antilobby bill be passed until Wednesday?

Mr. CONNERY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, there is a general agreement that tonight, just the Consent Calendar will be taken up?

The SPEAKER. That has been definitely settled by agreement.

Mr. CONNERY. And now the gentleman is asking consent that this conference report go over until Wednesday?

Mr. O'CONNOR. At the request of the opponents of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that this will be the first order of business on Wednesday?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I could not say that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that it certainly could not come up until necessary business on the Speaker's table is disposed of on Wednesday.

Mr. SWEENEY. Do I understand it is the special order of business for Wednesday and must come up Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. It has been postponed until Wednesday.

Mr. SWEENEY. But it holds its place on the calendar on Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. It is a conference report and is privileged.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

HOW THE WINE INDUSTRY IS AFFECTED BY THE LIQUOR TAX ADMINISTRATION BILL

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the bill H. R. 9185, and to include therein certain tables and excerpts from the hearings before the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we were endeavoring to conserve the time of the House. When the conference report on H. R. 9185, the liquor tax administration bill, was under consideration, therefore, I did not ask for time to address the House on the subject of the bill. This report has now been adopted by the House and in due course will be adopted by the Senate tomorrow. With the permission of the House, I should now like to review briefly the progress of this bill and the other bills which have been incorporated into it.

The majority of the citizens of my own State, California, and of every other State in which grapes are grown and wine manufactured have followed this legislation with the greatest interest. It is true that this bill revises administrative regulations for distilleries and breweries, as well as wine makers, but California, the chief grape-growing State in the Union, is more concerned with the features of the bill which affect the wine industry than anything else. It is my purpose, therefore, for the information of grape growers and vintners generally throughout the country, to review the many changes which will be made by this bill that affect their interests. It may be well to first recount very briefly the legislative history involved.

On the opening day of the Seventy-fourth Congress, January 3, 1935, I introduced H. R. 191, a bill to reduce by 50 percent the internal-revenue taxes on still wines and on brandy used for fortifying purposes. It will be recalled that on the repeal of prohibition the Interdepartmental Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation recommended a tax on wine, starting at 16 cents per wine gallon on wines of not more than 14-percent alcoholic content and increasing in proportion to the alcoholic content.

Realizing that this would be an unbearable tax, I appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means in January 1934 and succeeded in securing the adoption of a compromise proposal which started the tax rate at 10 cents per wine gallon on dry wines and increased proportionately to the alcoholic content. These are the present rates. They were just the best guess that could be made at the time as to what rate of taxation wine could stand. Experience, however, has demonstrated that, while possibly wine could stand a tax of 10 cents per gallon on dry wines, 20 cents per gallon on sweet wines, and so forth, it could not stand that tax as a Federal tax and additional State taxes, which in some cases amounted up to over $1 per gallon, as well. At this point I include an excerpt from the testimony of Judge Marion DeVries before the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate in the hearings on H. R. 191 and H. R. 9185, and a table submitted by him (Hearings, pp. 165–168):

Thereafter I wired Mr. Harry A. Caddow, secretary-manager of the Wine Institute in San Francisco, for a statement on authority of the institute of the fair average selling prices of wines, dry and sweet, naked in the winery in California. In response thereto I was by him advised that the current fair average sales price of dry wines in California is 15 cents a gallon, and of sweet wines 35 cents a gallon naked in the bonded winery or storeroom.

Since the tax must be paid before the wines can be delivered from the bonded winery or storeroom it is obvious that the average market value of, or sales price paid for, bulk wines in California today deliverable in trade and commerce is 15 cents naked in the winery plus 10 cents Federal and 2 cents State tax or 27 cents per gallon. And for sweet wines 35 cents naked in the winery plus 20 cents Federal and 2 cents State tax or 57 cents per gallon.

The actual situation therefore is as follows: The tax is laid upon the wine whether in bulk or in the case at a gallonage rate upon each gallon as it leaves the bonded winery or storeroom. It must be paid before the wine can be delivered out of the bonded winery or storeroom. It is an integral part of the sales price which the purchaser must pay in order to take possession of and move the wines in trade and commerce. The determination of the tax burden upon the vintner who actually pays the tax is arrived at by comparing the tax so paid by him with the price obtained by him for the wine at the door of the bonded winery or storeroom and not by comparing the tax the vintner pays with the retail price received long thereafter by the retailer in the retail markets of the United States. At the door of the bonded winery or storeroom stands the tax collector, so to speak, to collect the tax laid by the gallon upon every wine sale before it is delivered out of the bonded winery or storeroom.

Bulk wines, of which the vast majority of sales consist, if dry, are sold on an average of 27 cents a gallon deliverable at the winery. When, therefore, a buyer comes to the winery and wants to buy dry wines and is willing to pay therefor 27 cents per gallon, the vintner selling the same at that price receives for himself 15 cents only and must pay to the Government 12 cents.

The same is true of the vendor of bulk sweet wines. The State tax in California is 2 cents per gallon upon all wines. The Federal tax is 20 cents per gallon upon sweet wines. The average open-market sales price therefor is 57 cents per gallon, deliverable at the winery. So that when a customer comes to the winery in California prepared to pay for sweet wines 57 cents per gallon, out of that 57 cents received therefor by the vintner he retains but 35 cents for himself and must immediately pay to his partners, the Government, 20 cents Federal tax and 2 cents State tax, or 22 cents. But the vintner of sweet wine has already paid or must pay the Federal Government 6 cents per gallon fortifying tax. So whenever the California vintner receives 35 cents for 1 gallon of sweet wine, the Government actually receives 28 cents and the vintner 35 less 6 cents, or 29 cents. The Government nets 28 cents, the vintner receives 29 cents.

And the vintner must receive these prices and must pay these taxes in order to receive out of his aforesaid open-market sales prices for his own use 15 cents per gallon for his dry and 35 cents per gallon for his sweet wines.

Source of data: Recapitulation of cost figures compiled by B. C. Squires.

In this connection it will be borne in mind that while Mr. Weller's figures relate to cost of marketing the wine as and after it leaves the bonded winery or storeroom, the foregoing figures of Messrs. West and Pearce cover the cost necessary to produce the wine naked in the winery. Therefrom it is shown that when the vintner-grower receives net 15 cents per gallon for his dry wine he receives less than its actual cost to him naked in the winery, and when he receives net 35 cents per gallon for his sweet wines naked in the winery he receives less than 3 percent, if that, above actual cost.

In the fall of 1934 I proposed that, if returned to Congress, I would introduce a measure to cut the existing internal-revenue taxes in half, believing that with this encouragement from the Federal Government, State governments might be likewise encouraged to reduce their taxes to the same level of Federal taxation. This would result in a combined tax rate of not more than 10 cents per gallon on dry wines, 20 cents per gallon on wines containing up to 21 percent alcohol, and 40 cents per gallon containing more than 21 percent alcohol.

To carry out this proposal, H. R. 191 was introduced by me on the opening day of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress. This measure received the approval of the Wine Institute of California and the approval, as well, of New York and other grape-growing States. At the suggestion of New York Representatives, the same tax reduction was also extended to champagnes and sparkling wines. In this suggestion I was only too happy to concur.

During the spring of 1935 the Treasury Department sent down a set of three proposed bills for consideration by the Ways and Means Committee. These dealt with changes in administrative regulations affecting distilling, brewing, and wine interests. Investigation had shown me that there were still additional taxes that burdened the wine industry, so on April 19, 1935, I introduced bills providing for the removal of the first withdrawal and the rectifying tax on vermouth, and for the repeal of the tax on grape concentrate. Both of these measures had received the approval of the Wine Institute through their very able counsel at Washington, who has cooperated with me in an extraordinarily helpful manner from start to finish, Judge Marion DeVries. I should also record the fact that Hon. CLARENCE F. LEA, of the First California District, also appeared before both the Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee and submitted helpful briefs in behalf of this legislation.

Extensive hearings on the three Treasury bills and the vermouth and grape-concentrate bills and the tax-reduction bill were held simultaneously before the Ways and Means Committee, and executive sessions of some length on these bills ensued. As a result, the Ways and Means Committee favorably reported to the House H. R. 191, incorporating therein the vermouth and champagne tax-reduction provisions and a provision eliminating a double tax on liqueurs and cordials, which was evidently an oversight on the part of those who prepared the Liquor Taxing Act of 1934.

The 50-percent reduction of the tax on brandy used for fortifying purposes and the repeal of the tax on grape concentrate as well, together with the administrative changes, were incorporated into the final liquor-tax administration bill known as H. R. 9185, which combined such parts of the three Treasury bills as the committee approved and a number of other suggestions, which I shall speak of later, worked out in conference with Treasury officials by Judge DeVries and myself. These bills were reported separately because of parliamentary reasons, but it is important to remember that both received the unanimous favorable report of the Committee on Ways and Means and unanimous approval of the House, in order to understand that while apparently the House conferees were accepting a large number of Senate amendments to H. R. 9185, in reality they have only been assenting to the Senate's action in combining the two bills in one.

Largely because of the special interest in this legislation that I had taken, Chairman DOUGHTON authorized me to introduce the liquor-tax administration bill in its final form, and the Ways and Means Committee authorized me to report both it and H. R. 191 favorably—Reports Nos. 1817 and 2028, Seventy-fourth Congress. Both bills passed the House late in August 1935, but too near adjournment to be seriously considered by the Senate Finance Committee at the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress. Senator HARRISON, chairman of that committee, however, promised that early hearings would be given on both bills together when the Senate reconvened.

True to that promise, on January 13, 1936, hearings were opened and, because of various new matters which had been brought up during the 5-month recess, continued intermittently through March. The Senate Finance Committee then went into executive session and on May 15, 1936, favorably reported, with numerous amendments, H. R. 9185. In so doing it accepted that portion of H. R. 191 which reduced the tax on dry wines only and incorporated it in H. R. 9185, making no report on the tax bill itself.

With the very able cooperation of Senators JOHNSON and MCADOO the remaining provisions of H. R. 191, covering the tax reductions on other wines, as originally introduced, were incorporated in the present bill on the floor of the Senate. The Finance Committee had rejected the reduction in the tax on fortifying brandy, but a partial concession on the Senate floor led to it also going to conference, where the full 50-percent reduction has been restored, and accepted by conferees.

During the last recess of Congress and during the course of the Senate hearings numerous conferences were held with Treasury officials, and particularly with those of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, over additional amendments which had been suggested by the counsel for the Wine Institute, myself, or others interested. As a result the Senate incorporated the majority of these suggestions in the bill and the conferees have accepted all of them except one.

In addition to the new administrative regulations, an amendment offered by Senators MCADOO and JOHNSON provided that no department of the Government or official thereof shall deny the right of any person to use wine names of foreign origin if the product is of the same type, and when the use of such name is qualified by the name of the State or other locality in the United States in which the product is produced, displayed as conspicuously as the name of such foreign origin. The conferees have accepted this amendment with the elimination of the word "Champagne." This elimination is due to the fact that the question of the use of that word and its modification is now being considered after hearings by the Federal Alcohol Administration. It was the purpose of the conferees in dropping this word from the amendment to leave those determinations as well as those of all such wine names not within the provisions of this amendment to the tribunals of the government having jurisdiction thereof.

Legislative procedure is a complicated matter and many times I have been in receipt of letters and telegrams from many friends at home interested in the wine industry, wondering what had become of the Buck bills, urging haste in passage and ofttimes expressing impatience. Let me remind them that it takes a long time to grind out legislation of as technical and complicated nature as this bill is; to win over the opposition of the Treasury Department for, while it has made many concessions, it has never acceded to the tax reduction. Let me remind them further that though many of these amendments were placed in this bill on the floor of the Senate, the preliminary work was done in consultations and in the hearings.

The tax-reduction features of the bill I have spoken of. They will represent a saving to the grape growers and vintners of the United States of approximately $3,000,000 per year on wines, and according to Treasury figures around $630,000 per year on fortifying brandy. It is my honest opinion that the Treasury will suffer no loss. Experience has shown that the States that have low-tax rates on wine have the greatest wine consumption, and I predict that the increase in wine consumption, if the States can be made to cooperate in this tax program, will result in an actual increase in revenue to the United States Treasury. I here insert a table taken from page 80 of the hearings above referred to showing the population, wine-tax rates, and consumption of wines for several States for the first 10 months of the year 1935, arranged in three comparable groups of relatively low tax-rate States, State-store States with high write-ups, and high-tax States:

[1] Since reduced to 14⅓ cents per gallon.

I also insert the following excerpt from the statement of Judge DeVries contained on page 173 of the hearings, which shows the effect on consumption of wine where tax reductions have been made by the States:

Since said hearings, efforts have been made and statistics collected, insofar as possible by telegraph, to ascertain the exact increase of wine sales before and after tax reductions in the States. It must be obvious that on account of the different dates of tax reductions in the different States that task was difficult, owing to the necessarily incomplete statistical information available. Nevertheless, some striking developments were shown.

Thus, the State of Missouri, effective May 9, 1935, reduced wine taxes per gallon from 40 cents on sweet and 10 cents on dry to 20 cents on sweet and 2 cents on dry wines. The department of liquor control of that State reports that from January 1 to May 9, 1935—4 months—under the 20-cent rate but 50,000 gallons of dry wines were sold, whereas from May 9, 1935, to January 1, 1936—8 months—under the reduced 2-cent rate 594,164 gallons of such wine were consumed. The report further continues that, of fortified wines, not over 80,000 gallons were consumed during 1935 under the 40-cent and 20-cent tax, the exact reverse of usual relative dry- and sweet-wine consumption.

In the State of Wisconsin, during all of 1934 and the first 7 months of 1935—January to July—the wine-tax rate was 25 cents per gallon. During the whole year 1934 there were 308,000 gallons of wine sold in that State. During the first 7 months of 1935 there were 128,000 gallons of wine sold, all under the 25-cent tax rate. In the month of July 1935 the tax rate upon wines in Wisconsin was reduced from 25 cents per gallon to 10 cents on sweet and 5 cents on dry wines, with the result that in the last 5 months of 1935 there were sold 362,168 gallons of wine, or more in 5 months under the low rate than in any year under the higher rate.

In the State of Iowa, moved by the same wisdom that reduced tax rates means increased wine consumption and State revenues, the Iowa Liquor Control Commission reported that during the last 6 months of 1934 with a write-up of 36 cents per gallon, 15,000 gallons of wine were sold for $68,000. During the first 6 months of 1935 under a write-up of 35 cents per gallon, 17,000 gallons of wine were sold for $64,000, that thereafter the commission stated "most drastic cuts were made during the last 6 months" of 1935, during which time 28,000 gallons of wine were sold for $90,000. Wherefrom it is shown that a reduction of the State write-up or tax rate in the State of Iowa constantly increased the State revenues practically doubling the same after drastic cuts during the last 6 months of 1935.

In addition to the 50-percent wine-tax reduction, the elimination of the first withdrawal tax and rectifying tax on vermouth, and the repeal of the grape-concentrate tax referred to previously, the bill provides for the extension of the time within which taxes on fortifying brandy must be paid to 18 months from date of assessment instead of 10 months as at the present time. This will be a great advantage to sweet-wine makers for it will enable them to age their wine longer and to market it in a more orderly fashion.

The filtering, clarifying, and purifying of wines, on bonded winery premises or bonded storeroom premises, are declared not to be rectification, and hence, wines so treated will not be required to pay the rectifying tax of 30 cents per proof gallon hereafter.

The provision that domestic wines may not be mixed, compounded, or rectified with distilled spirits is abolished. This does away with an unreasonable distinction between imported and domestic wines, and it is hoped will open a new outlet for domestic wines.

The duty-free importation of distilled spirits, wines, or malt liquors by residents of the United States who have been traveling abroad is hereafter restricted to an amount of not more than 1 wine gallon per person. The limit has previously been "not to exceed $100 in value." This may be of particular value in restricting importations along the border States.

The distinction between general and special bonded warehouses is abolished and all will in the future be operated as internal-revenue bonded warehouses under the same regulations.

Upon exportation of bonded wines manufactured or produced in the United States on which an internal-revenue tax has been paid, a draw-back equal to the full amount paid shall be allowed, provided the wines have been bottled specially for exportation.

Destruction or denaturation, free of tax, of distillates containing one-half of 1 percent or more of aldehydes, or 1 percent or more of fusel oil removed in the course of distillation, is authorized under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. This is a very important concession for manufacturers of brandy.

The Secretary of the Treasury is permitted to authorize the amelioration of wine by the wine maker and the fortification of wine without supervision of any officer of the United States whenever he determines that such authorization may be made without danger to the revenue.

The provision affecting the use of names of foreign origin has been referred to above. It should be noted in connection with this that the bill makes the Federal Alcohol Administration, now a division of the Treasury Department, an independent unit of the Federal Government. Experience has apparently shown that the Treasury Department should be concerned only with the collection of the revenue derived from distilled liquors, wines, and malt beverages, and that regulatory functions such as the Federal Alcohol Administration exercises should be handled separately.

Finally, a minor change, but one which may be of value in parts of the country where distilled liquors are not favorably looked upon, is the provision that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may provide for the issuance of a stamp denoting the payment of the special-license tax by retail and wholesale dealers' licenses, respectively, as "retail dealer in wines" or "wholesale dealer in wines." Many dealers in semidry territory have objected to being listed as dealers in liquors, as they must be under the present law, even where they only sell wines.

No matter what other legislation I sponsor in the future, it will always be a source of pride and satisfaction to me to know that I not only introduced this legislation, but have been able to assist in its progress into law at every stage; first as a member of the Ways and Means Committee, then in charge of the bills on the floor of the House, later by appearing before the Senate Finance Committee, and finally, as a member of the conference between the two Houses. I am deeply grateful to my colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee who have given their time and attention to the mastery of what is a very technical subject. And, of course, I am deeply appreciative of the action of both House and Senate in approving the measure in its final form.

Through this legislation a measure of justice has been done the grape grower and the wine maker, but I call the attention of those who may not have felt as enthusiastic as I have about the proposed tax reduction to the fact that during the prohibition era, the tax on dry wines was only 4 cents per wine gallon and on sweet wines 10 cents per wine gallon, so this bill has only after all restored the tax rate to that which was in effect during prohibition.

Wine is a temperate drink. It is generally taken with meals; it is an aid to digestion and brings cheer and grace to the table. If there is any truth to the theory which I have been propounding that the reduction in the tax rate on wine will increase consumption, this measure will bring added cheer, health, and happiness to millions of Americans as well as additional prosperity to the grape growers of America.

RECESS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now stand in recess until 7:30 o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House (at 5 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) stood in recess until 7:30 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 7: 30 p. m., by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. WOODRUM].

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

IRRIGATION CHARGES, INDIAN RESERVATIONS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1318) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and adjust irrigation charges on irrigation lands within projects on Indian reservations, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to cause an investigation to be made to determine whether the owners of non-Indian lands under Indian irrigation projects and under projects where the United States has purchased water rights for Indians are unable to pay irrigation charges, including construction, maintenance, and operating charges, because of inability to operate such lands profitably by reason of lack of fertility of the soil, inadequacy of water supply, defects of irrigation works, or for any other causes. Where the Secretary finds that said landowners are unable to make payment due to the existence of such causes, he may adjust, defer, or cancel such charges, in whole or in part, as the facts and conditions warrant. In adjusting or deferring any such charges the Secretary may enter into contracts with said landowners for the payment of past due charges, but such contracts shall not extend the payment of such charges over a period in excess of 10 years.

SEC. 2. Where the Secretary finds that any such lands cannot be cultivated profitably due to a present lack of water supply, proper drainage facilities, or need of additional construction work, he shall declare such lands temporarily nonirrigable for periods not to exceed 5 years and no charges shall be assessed against such lands during such periods.

SEC. 3. Where the Secretary finds that any such lands are permanently nonirrigable he may, with the consent of the landowner, eliminate such lands from the project.

SEC. 4. Where irrigation assessments against any such lands remained unpaid at the time the Indian title to such lands became extinguished and no lien existed and attached to such lands for the payment of charges so assessed and no contract for the payment of such charges was entered into, the Secretary shall cancel all such charges.

SEC. 5. The Secretary shall have power to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. The Secretary shall make reports to the Congress on the first Monday of each regular session, and from time to time thereafter, showing the action taken under the provisions of this act during the preceding year. No proceedings under this act shall become effective until approved by the Congress.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE EASTERN AND WESTERN DISTRICTS OF KENTUCKY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3344, to appoint one additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern and Western Districts of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern and Western Districts of Kentucky. The judge shall be a resident of the State of Kentucky and shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same compensation as the present judges of the respective districts.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It has been suggested that possibly this bill was disposed of in an omnibus bill. Is the Chair advised in the matter?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not advised that it has been disposed of.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRANK WIDEMAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11615, limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection to permit the gentleman from New York to make a statement.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I understand this bill pertains principally to Mr. Wideman, of the Department of Justice. I understand further that the usual provision in reference to counsel not practicing for 2 years after retiring from the Department might inhibit him from practicing. The fact is he had retired from the Department but has been assigned as special counsel in a case. The Attorney General feels that the 2-year limitation should not apply to the date when he gets out of this particular case, which may take years. He feels that this is a special case and that this provision should not apply.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the gentleman from New York know, or any member of the Committee on the Judiciary know, whether this would establish a precedent?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No. I think this is a special case to take care of this situation. Mr. Wideman has retired from the Department but has been assigned as special counsel in a particular case, the Associated Gas & Electric Co. case, I understand. If this provision is not made the 2-year limitation may apply at some later date rather than as of the time he retired from the Department of Justice, for he may be in this case several years.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think I met this gentleman. I was very much impressed with his sincerity.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not know him, but I know the Attorney General has recommended this as a special case to which the usual rules should not apply. I think the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN] is familiar with the situation.

Mr. McLEAN. If the gentleman from New York will yield——

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

Mr. McLEAN. The object of this bill is to make the 2-year inhibition run from the date of Mr. Wideman's resignation from the Department and not from the date when he shall have concluded his activities in connection with this case. This particular situation seems to be one that comes within the suggestion of Attorney General Mitchell in his annual report of 1929, wherein he explained the difficulties of getting a man peculiarly adapted and with knowledge of the particular case. This seems to be a proper exception to the general law on the subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That nothing in sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203), or in section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 99), or in any other act of Congress forbidding officers or employees or former officers or employees of the United States from acting as counsel, attorney, or agent for another before any court, department, or branch of the Government, or from receiving or agreeing to receive compensation therefor, shall be deemed to apply to attorneys or counselors specially employed, retained, or appointed by the Attorney General or under authority of the Department of Justice to assist in the conduct of legal proceedings pertaining to the unpaid tax liability of Associated Gas & Electric Co. and its corporate affiliates and to assist in the conduct of the case of Commissioner of Internal Revenue against Charles E. Mitchell, including all proceedings therein and any other case or proceeding, appellate or otherwise, that may arise out of or pertain to the tax liability of said taxpayers.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the employment of Frank Wideman as an attorney or counselor specially employed, retained, or appointed by the Attorney General or under authority of the Department of Justice to assist in the conduct of legal proceedings pertaining to the unpaid tax liability of Associated Gas & Electric Co. and its corporate affiliates and to assist in the conduct of the case of Commissioner of Internal Revenue against Charles E. Mitchell, including all proceedings therein and any other case or proceeding, appellate, or otherwise, that may arise out of or pertain to the tax liability of said taxpayers shall not be construed to be employment within the meaning of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code of the United States as amended (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203) or section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 99).

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVISION FOR A CIVIL GOVERNMENT OF PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10312, to amend section 40 of the act of March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I understood from the gentleman from Puerto Rico that his desire was to have this bill passed over. I therefore ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

SURVEY OF SAN JUAN RIVER

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3488, to provide for an examination and survey to determine the best utilization of the surplus waters of the San Juan River and to determine the feasibility and cost of storing such waters and of diverting them to the Rio Chama.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] if he has any objection to the amendment that I gave him a copy of this morning?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would have objection to the amendment because I do not think it has a thing to do with the bill in question.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Of course, the gentleman, I know, understands the position I have been put into in connection with this bill. It is one I do not relish a bit.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I appreciate that fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made to determine the best utilization of the surplus waters of the San Juan River, a tributary of the Colorado River, and to determine the best possible use of such waters in the San Juan Basin without injury to the present users of the waters of the San Juan River and by diversion, if feasible, of a portion of such surplus waters to the Rio Chama, a tributary of the Rio Grande River, and to report the results of such surveys and examinations to the Congress as soon as possible. There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the purposes of this act.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado: Page 2, at the end of line 5, change the period to a colon and add the following: "Provided, That $17,500 of the above sum may be expended for a similar examination and survey of the surplus waters of the Animas River, a tributary of the Rio Grande River, with a view to the diversion, if feasible, of a portion of such surplus waters to the Rio Grande River."

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of the Members present for just 2 or 3 minutes.

This is a bill to authorize an appropriation of $50,000 to make a diversion survey of water from the San Juan River to the Chama River in the State of Colorado, and came over here from the Senate. After it got here the people of my State wanted me to oppose the bill because it did not carry an appropriation for the survey of two other rivers, the Animas and Rio Grande, in the State of Colorado, it being understood that the first project was for the benefit of New Mexico and the second would have benefited the State of Colorado.

We had a meeting with a view to getting together on this proposition and met in the office of Senator Hatch, of New Mexico, the author of the pending bill. Senator Hatch was there, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], was there, the Colorado Representatives were there, and we agreed on a division between those two projects of a certain allocation of funds down in the Interior Department by the National Resources Committee.

We made an agreement whereby, if Colorado would throw in for the Hatch bill, the State of Colorado, for its project, would receive $17,500 out of the $35,000 allocated down in the Department to New Mexico. That was agreed to unanimously and the memorandum was in writing. After the Senators and the Representatives had agreed, with the approval of a representative of the National Resources Committee, it was objected to by the State engineer of New Mexico. When that occurred, interested parties in my State put me in what I am frank to say looks to me like a "dog in the manger" position of blocking this whole thing.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to be frank about this. I submitted my amendment to the gentleman from New Mexico and told him if he would accept my amendment to apply $17,500 of the $50,000 provided in this bill, to the Animas-Rio Grande survey, we would relinquish all claim to a split of the $35,000 down in the National Resources Committee, which would have amounted to the same thing. He advised me he was not in a position to agree to that.

I think the Members of the House can see what the fair thing is, and I believe they ought to enforce the agreement. The fact of the matter is Congress would be justified in kicking these quarrels out until the Mountain States have adjusted their own differences. Every one of them is fighting the other. It is high time they got their differences settled without bringing such a small item as this to Congress. I have submitted a fair proposition to you, considering the circumstances in which I find myself in connection with this bill. The gentleman from New Mexico is a fair man. I can invite him to stand on this floor and ask him if he and his Senator, the author of the bill, did not agree in the Senator's office that if this bill was allowed to pass in the House they would agree to a 50–50 split of the $35,000 allocated to his survey by the National Resources Committee, which proposition was thereafter turned down by his State engineer. I am sure the gentleman will not dispute me when I say that.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. This $17,500 that the gentleman speaks of will come out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. This is an authorization, not an appropriation. There is no money appropriated in the bill, but it does authorize an appropriation of $50,000 to make the survey described in this bill.

Mr. RICH. If the survey is authorized the gentleman will come back and want $50,000 to do the work?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Well, the gentleman knows the answer to that as well as I do.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, this bill now before us was submitted to the Reclamation and Irrigation Committee of the Senate and unanimously reported by that committee. It passed the Senate unanimously. It was introduced in the House and referred to the Irrigation and Reclamation Committee. That committee reported it unanimously.

There was a fund of $35,000, just as stated to you by the gentleman from Colorado, that the National Resources Committee had to do with. Insofar as the Senator from New Mexico is concerned and insofar as I am concerned, I see no reason why they should not divide that particular amount as between Colorado and New Mexico, but I submit that has no place in this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman will admit this bill could not be amended by trying to divide some other fund down there in a department.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I say this bill has nothing to do with dividing any fund. This bill is for a specific purpose.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. But that $35,000 is also down there for the same purposes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. For this purpose in part and for some other things in part, but this bill provides for a specific thing, and it should be carried forward for that purpose.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Is it not a fact that if this bill passes the way it is now, your people get the $50,000 in this bill and the $35,000 in the Resources Board allocation and Colorado gets nothing? Is not that the kind of split we are going to get out of this matter?

Mr. DEMPSEY. May I say to the gentleman from Colorado that if this bill passes in its present form, a survey is carried on exactly as provided by the bill. New Mexico does not get any money from it. They simply make a survey to determine what to do with the waters of this river and whether it benefits Colorado or New Mexico or Arizona is aside from the question.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. In reply I would like to state to the gentleman from New Mexico that I believe I know him well enough to be able to say that if this were left to him he would accept this amendment. He does not accept it because he might get some criticism from his own State, which wants all of this money.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The State of New Mexico is not getting any money as a result of this bill. This is used to survey in Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Sure; to get water to transfer to the State of New Mexico—every drop of it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Not from Colorado. If the gentleman from Colorado or his people objected to this bill they should have appeared before our committee and made known their objections, which they did not do, and I ask that the House vote down the amendment, because I think it is improper.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to say further to the gentleman and to the Members of the House that I could have had this bill objected off this calendar and I would not need to have taken the floor. I have been fair enough to New Mexico and fair enough to the gentleman to let this bill come up for consideration and I ask the House to be fair enough to me to adopt my amendment and give our State just one-third of the $50,000 that this bill carries.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that the only fair thing to do is to vote this amendment up and then vote the bill down. We have waited on the Republican side to have these two gentlemen get this matter patched up, because they are both very high-class gentlemen and no doubt have some personal interest in the outcome of this measure because of the interest of their constituents. Since they have failed to agree and since the gentleman from Colorado has made out such a fair case here, I think we ought to support him because it is very evident he is not going to get what he thought he would get and what he understood he was going to get. Therefore, we ought to vote his amendment up and then we ought to vote the bill down because, apparently, they do not need this money, and they cannot agree about this $50,000 or $60,000 or $65,000, and goodness knows Franklin D. Roosevelt needs it and we ought to save this money.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DEMPSEY) there were—ayes 85, noes 6.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum; but if we have any more rumpuses on the Democratic side, I shall not withdraw it.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title of the bill was amended to read as follows: "To provide for an examination and survey to determine the best utilization of the surplus waters of the San Juan River and the Animas River, and to determine the feasibility and cost of storing such waters and of diverting them to the Rio Chama and the Rio Grande."

MEMORIAL TO BETSY ROSS

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 470, to authorize the selection of a site and the erection thereon of a suitable monument as a memorial to Betsy Ross.

Mr. McLEAN, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. RICH objected.

EXTERIOR BOUNDARY OF THE UTE INDIAN RESERVATION, UTAH

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 9156) to define the exterior boundary of the Ute Indian Reservation in the State of Utah, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I want to know if the committee is willing to act favorably on the recommendation of the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of the Budget and strike out the authorization for $650,000. If the committee is willing to strike out that section, I have no objection to the bill, but if it will not strike out that section, I shall object.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, suppose we do this. On page 5, in line 17, after the comma——

Mr. COCHRAN. No; I shall not agree to anything except what the Department recommends and the Bureau of the Budget recommends.

Mr. MURDOCK. I believe this will accomplish the thing that the gentleman is asking for. The tribe of Indians involved have some funds down there to their credit. If we strike out the appropriation from the Treasury and make it from the Indian funds exclusively, does that satisfy the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. COCHRAN. That is what the Director of the Budget recommends.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is what I am willing to do. I am willing to strike out any appropriation from the Treasury, and make it exclusively an appropriation from the funds to the credit of the Indians.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the gentleman will read the letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior he will find that he says:

> The objectionable text is found in section 3 of the bill, beginning with line 14 on page 5, and ending with the word "provided" in line 1, page 6.

Now the gentleman wants to retain that.

Mr. MURDOCK. I am willing to strike any appropriation direct from the Treasury and make it exclusively from the funds of the Indians.

Mr. COCHRAN. All right, let us strike out all after line 14 if you don't want to retain it.

Mr. MURDOCK. On which page?

Mr. COCHRAN. Page 5. I am willing to let the bill go through under those conditions.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman said he wanted to do it and I am willing to do that. Six hundred and fifty thousand dollars is involved here, and you get a revolving fund, and this money can be taken out of that, and you are only increasing the annual appropriation by $650,000.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have stated my position.

Mr. COCHRAN. All right, let us strike that all out.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield long enough for me to make a brief explanation of what I am willing to do and how it may be accomplished without ruining the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. I am merely following the Secretary of the Interior and the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. MURDOCK. The Indians have money to their credit and I am willing to take the language out of the bill that provides for funds out of the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and make the whole amount come out of the Indian funds, and that can be accomplished.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CALIFORNIA INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1793) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the Attorney General of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California", approved May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 602).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. COSTELLO. Yes.

Mr. BURDICK. The only harmful part of the bill is section 4. As I understand it, proponents of the measure are willing to cut out section 4 of the bill, and that is satisfactory.

I do not think it should be passed over, because there is a case pending in the courts now where this legislation is necessary.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I would like to inquire if the only objection the gentleman has is on account of the letter from the Department; and if that is the case, I would like to inform the gentleman that I have a letter from the Secretary saying that if section 4 is stricken from the bill there is no objection to it. I am prepared to offer an amendment to strike section 4 if the gentleman will allow the bill to be considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, unfortunately I have not had an opportunity to see the amendment which is being offered. I have had several communications regarding this proposed legislation opposing the passage of it in its present form. There are several amendments necessary in order to put the bill in satisfactory form, and I believe for that reason I will have to object to its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. COSTELLO. I shall be glad to.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I have no interest in this bill, nor has anybody on our side, as far as I know, but I understand the people interested in this bill have exercised a great deal of patience in an attempt to satisfy all objections, and I believe the gentleman might work a hardship on some innocent people if he would not permit this bill to be passed. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. When I went to my office this evening I found a letter sent to me by messenger from the Secretary of the Interior, in which he says that if section 4 is stricken from this bill it will remove his objections. I have the letter in my hand. I am opposed to the bill with section 4 in it.

Mr. COSTELLO. The only letter I have had was from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated May 4, objecting to the passage of the bill. That letter was sent to me by Mr. Collier, urging me to prevent the passage of the bill at this time. I have received no other communication. There is a great deal of interest in this legislation in the State of California. The legislation provides that the Indians may be able to employ their own attorneys. That in itself would retard the activity of this suit that is now pending before the courts. Another provision which this bill contains at the present time is one to investigate the roll of Indians and check and make sure that all Indians who have any claim at all to share under the judgment in this court would be entitled to come in here.

That investigation of the roll would require a great deal of time and it would be almost impossible to satisfy. Whether this amendment that is being offered at this stage of the proceeding would cure those defects of which complaint has been raised, I cannot say, but I have been informed by different organizations that they would prefer to have this bill not passed at the present session, and let the matter go over until next session. For that reason I feel I shall be obliged to object. I will be glad to withhold the objection if the gentleman wishes to make a statement.

Mr. LEA of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. LEA of California. I am in receipt of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior to the same effect as stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. The Secretary takes the position that if section 4 is eliminated from the bill he will have no further objection to its passage.

As to the 2-year clause providing for the enrollment of the Indians, I would be glad to offer an amendment to reduce that to 1 year and eliminate that unnecessarily long delay involved for that purpose.

Mr. COSTELLO. I do not think that the objections to the provision regarding enrollment would be satisfied merely by reducing the time. In view of the fact that I am not familiar with the nature of the amendments at this time, I believe the best thing would be to pass this bill over without prejudice, which would still allow us to consider it again. It might give an opportunity later during the course of the week to call the bill up.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The chances are this will be the last Consent Calendar day.

Mr. COSTELLO. It undoubtedly will be the last Consent Calendar day, but still it would give an opportunity to look at the amendments and it could be called up by unanimous consent during the week.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Would the gentleman agree that if we passed it over now we could call it up the last thing before we close tonight? Would the gentleman agree to that?

Mr. COSTELLO. I have had several communications from California objecting to the passage of this bill. I do not like to jeopardize their interests by passing the bill at this time unless I know exactly the nature of the amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

PUBLIC WELFARE DEPARTMENT FOR PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12119, to amend sections 13 and 19 of the act of March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I understand this bill is in the same category as the other Puerto Rico bill, and consequently I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF KANSAS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3434, to provide for the appointment of one additional judge for the district of Kansas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2047, to promote the general welfare of the Indians of the State of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act to promote the general welfare of the Indians of the State of Oklahoma, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States, acting through the Congress, hereby readmits, reacknowledges, and assumes continued responsibility for the guardianship of our Indian citizens and, in exercising such guardianship, does hereby pledge such Indian citizens of all tribes that it is and will be the continuing policy of the Government to establish justice for and to promote the general welfare of the Indians of the United States.

SEC. 2. Pursuant to the general policy set forth in section 1 hereof, the Government, acting through the Congress, hereby declares it to be for the best interest and general welfare of the Indians of Oklahoma to provide a plan whereunder all Indians may be accorded all rights, opportunities, and privileges and may eventually assume full responsibility as citizens in the said State and Nation. Pursuant to such policy the following specific things to be done are hereby set forth:

(a) The restricted lands, funds, or other property of the Indians of the State of Oklahoma, as herein provided are to be retained in the custody of the Secretary of the Interior, in trust, save as provided in this act, but nothing herein contained shall be construed as reimposing restrictions on any such property from which the restrictions have previously been removed.

(b) The restricted lands, funds, or other property belonging to competent adult Indians, as herein provided for, shall be relieved by the Secretary of the Interior of all restrictions as rapidly as the best interests of such Indians will permit and justify.

(c) The Government hereby declares its policy to be that the aged, infirm, and incompetent Indians shall have every possible care, assistance, and protection and that the Indian youth shall have educational facilities and advantages to the end that they may assume their place among the citizenship of the State and Nation.

(d) All claims held by any Indian tribe, group, or band against the Government shall be considered and adjudged, and such amounts as may be found to be due any such tribe, group, or band shall be paid and expended as may be provided by law.

(e) Pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (b) of section 2, the Secretary of the Interior at least once during each 4-year period shall cause to be created a competency commission, and such commission shall make a survey and examination of each adult Indian of the State of Oklahoma in order to ascertain whether such Indian is qualified and should have his or her restrictions removed on all or any part of any property, real or personal, of such Indian, and in the event the recommendations of such commission are favorable to the removal of the restrictions in whole or in part the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue patent in fee to such Indians for or otherwise remove the restrictions from such lands, property, and funds, as may be recommended by such commission, and which property and funds are in the possession or under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That such competency commission shall consist of at least one qualified Indian representative of the respective tribe or tribes to be so visited and examined, together with the superintendent or other officer in charge of the respective agency or school having jurisdiction over such tribe or tribes, and one other member to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior for such purpose: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior at any time may exercise the authorities specified in section 7 of this act.

SEC. 3. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to provide adequate educational facilities for the Indian population of the State of Oklahoma, with preference to those of one-quarter or more of Indian blood, as follows:

(a) The present policy of providing funds for the payment of tuition to public State schools for Indian children shall be continued and maintained.

(b) All existing Indian boarding schools shall be continued as now operating until otherwise provided by law.

(c) Funds may be made available for the purpose of constructing, equipping, and maintaining school buildings in such sections as may be deemed necessary for carrying out the policy stated and the intent of this section.

(d) The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make diligent effort to provide adequate educational facilities for all Indian children of school age: Provided, That preference in the boarding schools shall be given to Indian children without means of support, Indian children retarded because of lack of educational facilities, and orphaned Indian children.

SEC. 4. From time to time, as conditions require, funds shall be provided for maintenance of existing boarding and day schools, hospitals, and sanatoria, and for the construction of such additional day schools, hospitals, and sanatoria to provide adequate school and hospitalization facilities for the Indians of Oklahoma, with preference to those of one-quarter or more of Indian blood.

SEC. 5. That when used in this act the term "tribe" shall be construed to mean any Indian tribe, organized band, or group of Indians composed of persons on the classified rolls of the Indian Office or persons containing one-half or more of Indian blood and residing in the State of Oklahoma.

SEC. 6. For the purpose of providing lands for Indians in the State of Oklahoma, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to acquire, through purchase, relinquishment, gift, exchange, or assignment, any interest in lands, water rights, or surface rights to lands, within or without existing reservations, including trust or otherwise restricted lands now in Indian ownership, allotted or inherited, whenever said Secretary deems it advisable to permit the present Indian owner or owners to part with the same or their interests therein. In the sale of any restricted Indian land, pursuant to the terms of this or any other act of Congress, the Secretary of the Interior shall have a preference right, in his discretion, to purchase the same for or in behalf of any other Indian or Indians of the same or any other tribe, at a fair valuation to be fixed by appraisement satisfactory to the Indian owner or owners of such restricted land, or if offered for sale at auction said Secretary shall have a preference right, in his discretion, to purchase the same for or in behalf of any other Indian or Indians by meeting the highest bid otherwise offered therefor. Title to all land so acquired or set aside shall be taken in the name of the United States, in trust for the tribe, band, group, or individual for whose benefit such land is so acquired, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to designate or proclaim the tribe, band, community, or group of Indians for whose benefit such land is so acquired, and said Secretary is further authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to control the use, management, and operation of such lands for the benefit of the Indians, including the assignment of the right to use part or parts of such land by individual Indians, the ownership of any improvements placed thereon by or at the expense of the occupant to remain in such occupant and to be devisable and inheritable under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and not otherwise: Provided, That in accepting title to any individually owned restricted Indian land for the benefit of any tribe or group of Indians, the Secretary of the Interior, in consideration for such conveyance, may assign the same land to or for the benefit of the former Indian owner or owners, for such period or periods as the said Secretary may deem proper, including a further right or power in such former owner or owners to lease such land to third parties, upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as granting or recognizing in any such individual occupant or his or her heirs, any title to any tribal or communally owned lands so occupied, or as giving to the courts of the State of Oklahoma any jurisdiction over any matter affecting the title to, right to use or occupy, or the ownership of any improvements located on any such tribal or communally owned lands; all of which questions are hereby committed to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior. Any restricted land, funds, or other securities belonging to Indians of the State of Oklahoma shall, while held by the Secretary of the Interior, be free from any and all taxes save those provided by existing law.

SEC. 7. That at any time prior to the expiration of the existing period of trust or other restrictions against alienation of any lands, funds, or other property belonging to any Indians of the State of Oklahoma, whether held under a trust, tribal, or other form of patent, deed, or any other instrument containing restrictions against alienation, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion, to extend such trust or other restricted period for such further period or periods as he may deem best: Provided, however, That during such trust or restricted period, or any extension or extensions thereof, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, whenever satisfied that the best interest of the Indian owner or owners of such restricted property, and that of his immediate family, would best be served thereby, may, with or without application from the Indian owner or owners, remove the restrictions in whole or in part, in such manner and under such rules and regulations as the said Secretary may prescribe: Provided further, That before removing the restrictions from any land, funds, or other property, belonging to any adult restricted Indian, without the consent of such Indian, the Secretary of the Interior shall give at least 30 days' notice in writing to such Indian owner to show cause why such action should not be had: Provided further, That in any case wherein a restricted Indian has applied to the Secretary of the Interior for the removal of his or her restrictions on land, property, securities, or funds and such application has been rejected, and in any case wherein the Secretary has acted to remove restriction or issue a patent in fee without the consent of the Indian owner of the restricted property, an appeal will lie to the Federal court under whose jurisdiction the land is located and if the application is for the removal of restrictions on property, securities, or funds only, then the appeal will lie to the Federal court having jurisdiction of the legal residence of the applicant and if the Federal court shall find that the action of the Secretary of the Interior in denying such application was arbitrary, or without due regard to the best interests of the Indian applicant and that of his immediate family such court may, in its discretion, overrule the action of the Secretary of the Interior and the decision of the Federal court shall be final and binding upon the Secretary of the Interior. In all cases where appeals are authorized as provided herein, the applicant is entitled to have a certified copy of all papers, including the application and order of rejection, and such applicant shall pay all necessary expenses in connection with the preparation and certification of such transcript: Provided further, That, in the event an appeal is taken as authorized herein and such appeal is denied by any Federal court, then the costs of such appeal shall be assessed and taxed against the applicant: And provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed as authorizing the removal of restrictions on Osage headrights owned or possessed by persons of Indian blood, which shall remain inalienable, except by will, as now provided by law.

SEC. 8. That the provisions of sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 of the act of January 27, 1933 (47 Stat. 777), entitled "An act relative to restrictions applicable to Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma", be, and the same hereby are, made applicable to all Indians of said State, regardless of tribe or degree of Indian blood, and all such Indians having any restricted lands, funds, or other property shall have the right, at their election, either to create private trusts out of such restricted property, pursuant to the terms of said act, or allow the same to remain subject to supervision of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That it was not intended by the enactment of section 1 of said act to make it retroactive, to extend restrictions on lands other than homesteads of the Indians therein described, or to restrict funds which otherwise were unrestricted after April 26, 1931.

SEC. 9. Any group of Indians residing on any area of tribal land or on land acquired by the United States for the use of Indians shall have the right to organize for its common welfare and to adopt a constitution and bylaws, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. The Secretary of the Interior may issue to any such organized group a charter of incorporation, which shall become operative when ratified by a majority vote of the adult members of the organization voting: Provided, however, That the total vote cast shall not be less than 40 percent of those entitled to vote. Such charter may convey to the incorporated group, in addition to any powers which may properly be vested in a body corporate under the laws of the State of Oklahoma, the right to participate in the revolving credit fund and to enjoy any other rights or privileges secured to an organized Indian tribe under the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984).

The Secretary of the Interior may from time to time delegate and convey to a corporation so chartered, subject to any qualifications that may appear necessary or desirable, any or all powers now vested in the Secretary of the Interior or in the Commissioner of Indian Affairs with respect to the management or control of lands, funds, or other property held or enjoyed by the corporation or its members, the administration of services performed by the Interior Department for such corporation or its members, or the regulation of the conduct or affairs of such corporation and its members. Such action shall become effective when ratified by a majority vote of the adult members of the corporation voting: Provided, however, That the total vote cast shall not be less than 40 percent of those entitled to vote. Wherever the management and control of its funds shall be vested in an Indian corporation, such funds may be deposited in any national bank within the State of Oklahoma or otherwise invested, utilized, or disbursed in accordance with the terms of the corporate charter.

SEC. 10. The Secretary is authorized and directed to establish an Oklahoma Indian Credit Corporation, hereinafter referred to as the "Corporation", to issue a charter to such corporation, defining its powers, and providing for a board of directors to serve without pay and to consist of seven members, one of whom shall be the director of credit of the Indian Credit Administration, and four of whom shall be representative Indians of the State of Oklahoma, and to appoint, at a salary determined by him, a manager for such corporation. In addition to any powers which the Secretary may delegate to such corporation necessary for the proper performance of its functions, such corporation shall be authorized in its charter to purchase stock in and to make loans to Indian cooperative credit, producers, consumers, marketing, and land management associations and to individual Indians as defined in the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That no loan shall be made to any individual unless the establishment of a cooperative credit association in an area reasonably convenient to such individual has been proved to the satisfaction of the corporation not to be feasible: Provided further, That no loan to any individual or association nor purchase of stock shall be made without the approval of the manager of the corporation. For the purposes and expenses of the corporation and cooperative associations organized pursuant to this act, there shall be appropriated, out of the Treasury of the United States, the sum of $2,000,000.

SEC. 11. Any 10 or more Indians, as defined in the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), who reside in convenient proximity to each other may petition the corporation for a charter for a local cooperative association for any one or more of the following purposes: Credit administration, production, marketing, consumers' protection or land management. Upon approval of the petition by the corporation and by the Secretary, the Secretary shall issue to such person a charter defining the powers of such cooperative association, the district within which it shall operate, and the conditions of membership, and prescribing the manner of conducting its business. The provisions of this act, the regulations of the Secretary of the Interior, and the charters of the cooperative associations issued pursuant thereto, shall govern such cooperative associations but in those matters not covered by said act, regulations, or charters, the laws of the State of Oklahoma, if applicable, shall govern. All credit associations shall, and any other cooperative association may, possess voting and nonvoting stock with a par value as fixed in the charter. The nonvoting stock shall be purchased by the corporation or otherwise taken by it in exchange for loans made to the cooperative associations in such proportion to the loans made as may be prescribed in the regulations of the Secretary. The voting stock shall be issued only to members of the cooperative association, and must be purchased by every member thereof to the amount required in the charter of the association; except that every credit association shall require its members to possess stock to the amount of 5 percent of the face value of any loan. Any member may pay for such stock either by cash supplied by him or through assignment to the association of a part of his patronage dividend. In any stock or nonstock cooperative association no one member shall have more than one vote, and membership therein shall be open to all individuals of one-half or more Indian blood residing within the prescribed district. Any Indian, regardless of his degree of blood, who has relinquished to the Secretary title to land and who has been assigned land by said Secretary pursuant to section 6 of this act is entitled to become a member of a land-management association. The officers of all cooperative associations must be approved by the corporation, and all books and accounts of such associations shall at all times be open to inspection by the corporation or the Secretary.

SEC. 12. The corporation shall continue until otherwise directed by act of Congress; and the charters of all cooperative associations organized pursuant to this act shall not be amended or revoked by the Secretary except after a majority vote of the membership. The charters of the said corporation and cooperative associations may convey the right to make contracts, to acquire, hold, and dispose of real and personal property necessary and incident to the conduct of their business, to prescribe fees and charges, subject to the regulations of the Secretary, for loans and other services, to buy and sell stocks in their own or other associations or corporations; and such other powers as may, in the judgment of the Secretary, be necessary and incident to carrying out the powers and duties described in this act. Said corporation and cooperative associations may sue and be sued in any court of the State of Oklahoma or of the United States having jurisdiction of the cause of action, but a certified copy of all papers filed in any action against a cooperative association in a court of Oklahoma shall be served upon the corporation. Within 20 days after such service or within such extended time as the trial court may permit, the corporation may intervene in such action or the Secretary, upon the request of the corporation, may remove such action to the United States district court to be held in the district where such petition is pending by filing in such action in the State court a petition for such removal together with the certified copy of the papers served upon the corporation. It shall then be the duty of the State court to accept such petition and proceed no further in such action. The said copy shall be entered in the said district court within 20 days after the filing of the petition for removal, and the said district court is hereby given jurisdiction to hear and determine said action.

In addition to the foregoing powers the cooperative associations may, by delegation from the Secretary of the Interior, receive the power to manage, operate, and assign lands purchased or acquired by the Secretary pursuant to section 6 of this act and to regulate the leasing thereof and the disposition, use, inheritance, and devise of the improvements placed thereon.

SEC. 13. The provisions of this act are to be considered, held, and construed as supplemental to the rights, privileges, and benefits set forth and provided in the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 994): Provided, That the Indian tribes and Indian citizens of Oklahoma shall have equal rights, opportunities, and privileges under the provisions of the last-mentioned act when applicable: Provided further, That all funds appropriated under the several grants of authority contained in said act for the purchase of land as provided in section 5 thereof; for the purpose of establishing a revolving fund as provided in section 10 thereof; for the making of loans to Indians for the payment of tuition and other expenses in recognized vocational and trade schools as provided in section 11 thereof; are hereby made available for use under the provisions of this act, and Oklahoma Indians shall be accorded and allocated a fair and just share of any and all funds hereafter appropriated under the authorization herein set forth.

SEC. 14. For the purpose of carrying out the several provisions of this act and supplemental to the authorizations contained in the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and all sums appropriated pursuant to this authority shall be expended under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That specific authority is hereby granted to appropriate funds for—

(a) General support and civilization, including education;

(b) For relief of distress and conservation of health;

(c) For industrial assistance and advancement and general administration of Indian property;

(d) For the enlargement, extension, improvement, and repair of the buildings and grounds of existing plants and projects;

(f) For the suppression of traffic in intoxicating liquor and deleterious drugs; and

(g) For the purchase of horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use.

SEC. 15. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 16. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

SEC. 17. This act may be cited as the "Oklahoma Indian General Welfare Act of 1935."

Strike out all after enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to acquire by purchase, relinquishment, gift, exchange, or assignment any interest in lands, water rights, or surface rights to lands, within or without existing Indian reservations, including trust or otherwise restricted lands now in Indian ownership: Provided, That such lands shall be agricultural and grazing lands of good character and quality in proportion to the respective needs of the particular Indian or Indians for whom such purchases are made. Title to all lands so acquired shall be taken in the name of the United States, in trust for the tribe, band, group, or individual Indian for whose benefit such land is so acquired, and while the title thereto is held by the United States said lands shall be free from any and all taxes, save that the State of Oklahoma is authorized to levy and collect a gross production tax, not in excess of the rate applied to production from lands in private ownership, upon all oil and gas produced from said lands, which said tax the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be paid.

"SEC. 2. Whenever any restricted Indian land or interests in land, other than sales or leases of oil, gas, or other minerals therein, are offered for sale, pursuant to the terms of this or any other act of Congress, the Secretary of the Interior shall have a preference right, in his discretion, to purchase the same for or in behalf of any other Indian or Indians of the same or any other tribe, at a fair valuation to be fixed by appraisement satisfactory to the Indian owner or owners, or if offered for sale at auction said Secretary shall have a preference right, in his discretion, to purchase the same for or in behalf of any other Indian or Indians by meeting the highest bid otherwise offered therefor.

The Secretary of the Interior may issue to any such organized group a charter of incorporation, which shall become operative when ratified by a majority vote of the adult members of the organization voting: Provided, however, That such election shall be void unless the total vote cast be at least 30 percent of those entitled to vote. Such charter may convey to the incorporated group, in addition to any powers which may properly be vested in a body corporate under the laws of the State of Oklahoma, the right to participate in the revolving credit fund and to enjoy any other rights or privileges secured to an organized Indian tribe under the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984): Provided, That the corporate funds of any such chartered group may be deposited in any national bank within the State of Oklahoma or otherwise invested, utilized, or disbursed in accordance with the terms of the corporate charter.

"SEC. 4. Any 10 or more Indians, as determined by the official tribal rolls, or Indian descendants of such enrolled members, or Indians as defined in the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), who reside within the State of Oklahoma in convenient proximity to each other may receive from the Secretary of the Interior a charter as a local cooperative association for any one or more of the following purposes: Credit administration, production, marketing, consumers' protection, or land management. The provisions of this act, the regulations of the Secretary of the Interior, and the charters of the cooperative associations issued pursuant thereto shall govern such cooperative associations: Provided, That in those matters not covered by said act, regulations, or charters, the laws of the State of Oklahoma, if applicable, shall govern. In any stock or nonstock cooperative association no one member shall have more than one vote, and membership therein shall be open to all Indians residing within the prescribed district.

"SEC. 5. The charters of any cooperative association organized pursuant to this act shall not be amended or revoked by the Secretary except after a majority vote of the membership. Such cooperative associations may sue and be sued in any court of the State of Oklahoma or of the United States having jurisdiction of the cause of action, but a certified copy of all papers filed in any action against a cooperative association in a court of Oklahoma shall be served upon the Secretary of the Interior, or upon an employee duly authorized by him to receive such service. Within 30 days after such service or within such extended time as the trial court may permit, the Secretary of the Interior may intervene in such action or may remove such action to the United States District Court to be held in the district where such petition is pending by filing in such action in the State court a petition for such removal together with the certified copy of the papers served upon the Secretary. It shall then be the duty of the State court to accept such petition and to proceed no further in such action. The said copy shall be entered in the said district court within 30 days after the filing of the petition for removal, and the said district court is hereby given jurisdiction to hear and determine said action.

"SEC. 6. The Secretary is authorized to make loans to individual Indians and to associations or corporate groups organized pursuant to this act. For the making of such loans and for expenses of the cooperative associations organized pursuant to this act, there shall be appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States, the sum of $2,000,000.

"SEC. 7. All funds appropriated under the several grants of authority contained in the Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), are hereby made available for use under the provisions of this act, and Oklahoma Indians shall be accorded and allocated a fair and just share of any and all funds hereafter appropriated under the authorization herein set forth: Provided, That any royalties, bonuses, or other revenues derived from mineral deposits underlying lands purchased in Oklahoma under the authority granted by this act, or by the Act of June 18, 1934, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and such revenues are hereby made available for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior for the acquisition of lands and for loans to Indians in Oklahoma as authorized by this act and by the Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO, Mr. CLARK of Idaho, Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina, and Mr. TABER objected.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman from California withhold his objection?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill and has the approval of the Post Office Department. Will the gentleman from California kindly tell me his objection to this bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. My particular objection to the passage of the bill is that it takes a group of special-delivery messengers who are not now under civil service and gives them an examination which is not open to all competitors who may desire to compete in the examination. The examination is limited exclusively to this limited group of employees employed as special-delivery messengers, and then confers on them a civil-service status in the Post Office Department. It blankets into the Department a small group by a special examination. It seems to me such bills defeat the very purpose for which the civil service was established and the very basis of entrance into the civil service, which is through competitive examination open to all who desire to compete.

Mr. HAINES. This bill is designed to take care of a certain group of old men who have been a long time in the service. If they do not have this opportunity, they will never have any opportunity to get in the classified service.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, some of these men have been in the service 10 or 15 years. The bill is not retroactive but just gives recognition of service performed in the past.

The regular order was called for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO, Mr. CLARK of Idaho, Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina, and Mr. TABER objected.

There being no further objections, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 4B OF THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT, AS AMENDED

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4132, to amend section 4b of the National Defense Act, as amended, relating to certain enlisted men of the Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, the language in this bill is broad enough to permit the President of the United States to definitely fix the enlisted personnel of the Army. In other words he may provide the number of privates in the Army, the number of first-class privates, sergeants, and so forth, and in that way he may increase by Executive order the enlisted personnel of the Army. I do not believe that is the intention of the legislation, but the language is broad enough to permit that.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. If the gentleman will yield, I may say that is not the intention of the bill. I have prepared an amendment that I propose to offer to make sure the intention as the gentleman has just stated it is carried out; that is, so that there can be no increase in the number of enlisted personnel.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman tell us what his amendment is?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. On page 2, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following language:

Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to authorize any increase in the number of the enlisted personnel of the Regular Army.

Mr. BOILEAU. With the adoption of that amendment I shall have no objection to the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4b of the National Defense Act, as amended, be, and the same hereby is, amended by striking out the present wording and substituting therefor the following:

"SEC. 4b. Enlisted men: On and after July 1, 1936, the grades and ratings of enlisted men shall be such as the President may from time to time direct, with monthly base pay in each grade and pay for each rating as prescribed by law. The numbers in grades and/or ratings of enlisted men shall be such as are authorized from time to time by the President by Executive order: Provided, That nothing in this section shall operate to reduce the pay which any enlisted man is now receiving during his current enlistment and while he holds his present grade and rating, nor to change the present rate of pay of any enlisted man now on the retired list, nor to change existing provisions of law relating to flying cadets: Provided further, That the transportation privileges authorized by section 12 of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1920, shall apply only to enlisted men of the first three grades."

SEC. 2. All laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are repealed as of the effective date of this act.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL of Alabama: Page 2, line 9, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following language:

The selection by the State of lands in lieu of any such protracted school sections shall be a waiver of its right to such sections. Except as herein modified, the provisions of said section 8 of the act of June 28, 1934, shall remain in full force and effect.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to establish and administer additional grazing districts in the State of Arizona pursuant to the provisions and subject to the restrictions of "An act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration; to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development; to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes", approved June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), without regard to the 80,000,000 acres limitation contained in section 1 thereof: Provided, That no such grazing district shall be established until a hearing shall have been held in the vicinity of the proposed district, as provided by said act, to first ascertain the sentiments of the settlers, residents, and livestock owners of the area.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to transfer without cost to the State of Arizona title to an area of surveyed, unreserved, unappropriated, nonmineral public lands within such State equal in acreage and value to section 16, township 17 south, range 20 east, Gila and Salt River meridian.

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, the State of Arizona is authorized to transfer without cost to the town of Benson title to section 16, township 17 south, range 20 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, for school and park purposes. Unless such transfer of title to the town of Benson is made within 1 year after the date of the execution of the deed conveying land to the State of Arizona pursuant to section 1 of this act, title to such lieu land shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 3. The joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the State of Arizona to transfer to the town of Benson without cost title to section 16, township 17 south, range 20 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, for school and park purposes", approved August 24, 1935, is repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STUDIES AND PLANS FOR DEVELOPMENT OF HYDROELECTRIC POWER PROJECTS AT CABINET GORGE ON THE COLUMBIA RIVER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12663, to provide for studies and plans for the development of a hydroelectric power project at Cabinet Gorge, on the Clark Fork of the Columbia River, and a reclamation project for the Rathdrum Prairie area, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN and Mr. RICH objected.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentlemen reserve their objection?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I withhold my objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been amended to meet the objections that were made to the bill in its original form. The bill has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior and also has the approval of the Director of the Budget. The bill has been passed by the Senate and has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. The bill as it stands provides only for the investigation of the possibility of pumping water by a hydroelectric power project in order to rehabilitate four or five irrigation districts which are in distress out in that country. These irrigation districts are now pumping water from various wells and lakes that are going dry. This bill has the support of the Grange and the people all over the northern part of the State of Idaho. It is a very small matter, involving a very minor appropriation to make this examination.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This is just the entering wedge for another appropriation out there.

Mr. WHITE. These reclamation projects are already in existence. The people out there are in distress for the want of water. The wells have gone dry and the lakes are going down.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Why was not this matter incorporated in the general Interior Department appropriation bill in the first instance?

Mr. WHITE. I may say this will come out of the money that has been accumulated in the irrigation fund.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This simply aggravates the agricultural situation as at present existing. It is a piecemeal proposition to crowd in other irrigation projects from year to year.

Mr. WHITE. The agricultural situation in this district is already aggravated and these people are in distress. I hope the gentleman will not object to an investigation, which is all that the bill calls for.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will say to the gentleman that I will go so far as to ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice, otherwise I shall object.

Mr. WHITE. The committee has reported the bill out, and it only calls for an investigation, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman says they are going to get the money out of the reclamation fund. This afternoon we had a bill up here and they said they were going to take the money called for under that bill out of the reclamation fund, although I understand they have spent all the money, and there is now no money left in the reclamation fund.

Mr. WHITE. If that is true, then there will not be anything done about it. It is my information that money is available in the reclamation fund. Let me remind the gentleman that these funds are obtained from the public-land States and do not come out of tax money paid into the Treasury.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT OF JUNE 3, 1916

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4026, to amend the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Alabama tell me whether or not an amendment was proposed by the adjutant generals of the several States?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] has an amendment that he proposes to offer which will take care of the National Guard officers, putting them on a parity with the Reserve officers and the Regular Army officers.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 112 of the National Defense Act, as amended by the act of June 15, 1933 (48 Stat. 161), be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the phrase "except for training".

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "training" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That for the purposes of this section the service of officers, warrant officers, the enlisted men of the National Guard or of the National Guard of the United States while en route to or from or during their attendance at encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises, or at service schools, under the provisions of sections 94, 97, and 99 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, shall be considered as service under a call or order into the active service of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LITTLE ROCK CONFEDERATE CEMETERY, ARKANSAS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4190, to amend the act approved February 7, 1913, so as to remove restrictions as to the use of the Little Rock Confederate Cemetery, Arkansas, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not think the gentleman from Michigan should object to the bill. In 1913 the city of Little Rock gave some land to the Federal Government to be used as a cemetery for the burial of Confederate soldiers only. What the bill would do would be to remove the limitation of burying only Confederate soldiers and let the Federal Government bury all different classes of soldiers in the cemetery. The Federal Government today needs this cemetery to bury different classes of soldiers and is anxious to have the bill passed, and as I say, the only purpose of the bill is to remove the limitation under which only Confederate soldiers can be buried there today.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I hope the gentleman will not object to the bill going over without prejudice, in order that we may have further time to study it.

Mr. HILL or Alabama. I may say to the gentleman that I have no personal interest whatever in the measure, but it is certainly to the interest of the Government to get this land to be used for the burial of World War soldiers, Spanish War soldiers, Union soldiers, and all classes of soldiers. I may say to the gentleman further that adjoining this particular cemetery the Federal Government has another cemetery in which it has been burying all classes of soldiers, but that cemetery today is filled up and the Government must have additional land or otherwise be put to the expense of shipping the bodies of these different classes of soldiers to cemeteries far from where they die and this means additional cost of transportation to the Government.

The bill is absolutely in the interest of the Government. I have no personal interest in the matter, but, as I have said, it is a matter that is entirely in the interest of the Government.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal more space in this park the gentleman from Alabama is speaking about. He is correct in stating that the portion formerly used for Federal soldiers entirely has been completely used up.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think we should consider it a little further and I hope the gentleman will not object to its going over without prejudice. Mr. Speaker, I renew my unanimous-consent request that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BACHELOR OF SCIENCE DEGREES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 11922) to amend the act of May 25, 1933 (48 Stat. 73).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved May 25, 1933 (48 Stat. 73), be amended by changing the period at the end of the act to a colon and by adding the following words: "Provided, That on and after the date of the accrediting of the said academies by the Association of American Universities the superintendents of the respective academies may, under such rules and regulations as the respective secretaries may make, confer the degree of bachelor of science upon all living graduates of the said academies."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF MILITARY POSTS, PANAMA CANAL DEPARTMENT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 10640) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, Panama Canal Department, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. It seems to me that we are getting into rather important legislation when we authorize the construction at military posts of buildings totaling in cost $1,600,000. Personally I have been in favor of a national defense system adequate to protect our natural resources and our people, comparable with any in the world, but it does not seem to me logical for us to be adopting bills which have as their purpose the establishment of military and naval policies by unanimous consent. In order to allow the sponsors of the bill to bring this up in the regular way, so that we may consider it and give every one on the floor an opportunity to be heard and an opportunity to vote on the establishment of a military and naval policy, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Has the gentleman definitely made up his mind that he wants this bill to go over?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have made up my mind to object to it if it does not, because I do not think we have any business authorizing an appropriation for any purpose, to say nothing of establishing a military and naval policy regulating Army posts. We have a bill here now on the calendar to follow, no. 873, providing for an authorization of $21,000,000.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. TARVER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 12511) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, for the same reasons I gave in objecting to the consideration of Calendar No. 872, H. R. 10640, I object to the consideration of this bill.

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE EMPLOYEES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 12244) to amend section 24 of the Immigration Act of 1917, relating to the compensation of certain Immigration and Naturalization Service employees, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 24 of the Immigration Act of 1917 (39 Stat. 893) as amended (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 109), is amended by adding at the end thereof new paragraphs, as follows:

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

STATE OF NEVADA

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3907, for the relief of the State of Nevada.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAMNECK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know something about this bill.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. This bill simply authorizes the reissuance of a check which was lost in transfer.

Mr. LAMNECK. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 3646, as amended, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the chief disbursing officer of the Treasury Department is authorized and directed to issue, without the requirement of an indemnity bond, a duplicate of original check numbered 81257, drawn September 6, 1935, in favor of "State treasurer of Nevada, trust fund" for $3,978.97 and lost after delivery.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTEREST PAYMENTS ON AMERICAN EMBASSY DRAFTS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1896, to provide for interest payments on American Embassy drafts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. WHITE. I will reserve my objection if the gentleman wishes to make a statement. What does this bill provide?

Mr. BLOOM. The bill pays interest on a loan that this Gavernment made in Turkey years ago. It has been recommended by President Hoover. It has been recommended by three Presidents and all their Secretaries of State. It is recommended by President Roosevelt. It is interest on money borrowed by this Government. They are asking for the interest. It was money loaned to this Government during the war.

Mr. WHITE. How much money is involved?

Mr. BLOOM. The interest on it is about $44,000, but it is a debt of this Government. Those people loaned the money to the United States Government. President Roosevelt and President Hoover and all Secretaries of State say that it should be paid. It has passed the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. The principal has been paid?

Mr. BLOOM. The principal has been paid in installments. The Government only borrowed it for 3 days during the war, and they did not pay it until years afterward. The bankers who loaned this money to the Government are asking for the interest, and every one in three administrations has O. K.'d the bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I should like to ask the gentleman who are the creditors?

Mr. BLOOM. The bankers who loaned the money.

Mr. BOILEAU. American bankers?

Mr. BLOOM. No. They are foreign bankers.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is there any way in which this debt could be applied on the American war debt?

Mr. BLOOM. No.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is it from the same countries?

Mr. BLOOM. No. This is from Vienna. The Vienna bank loaned this money through the Embassy in Turkey at that time. I have no personal interest in it, but everyone says it is a just claim of this country and should have been paid.

Mr. REILLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. REILLY. Why has not the claim been paid?

Mr. BLOOM. There was not sufficient money in a certain fund to pay this debt. Our Government borrowed this money for 3 days, and the bankers at that time said they would not charge any interest, but it took years before it was paid. The only reason it was not paid was that in a certain fund the money was not available at that time.

Mr. REILLY. Is it not a general debt of the National Government?

Mr. BLOOM. It is a debt of this Government; yes.

Mr. REILLY. When was it made?

Mr. BLOOM. In about 1915.

Mr. REILLY. And they have had billions in the Treasury since that time.

Mr. BLOOM. But not in this special fund. The money had to come from a special fund to pay for this. The report shows the details.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the principal has been paid I am constrained to object.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12646, to amend section 318 of the Communications Act of 1934.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. MONAGHAN. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman allow the bill to go over without prejudice?

Mr. MONAGHAN. I will consent to it going over without prejudice.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 12646 may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There is no objection.

SEC. 4. That section 4 of said act approved July 3, 1918, is hereby amended as of the day aforesaid by adding at the end thereof the following:

"It shall be unlawful to import into the United States from Mexico, or to export from the United States to Mexico any game mammal, dead or alive, or parts or products thereof, except under permit or authorization of the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with such regulations as he shall prescribe having due regard to the laws of the United Mexican States relating to the exportation and importation of such mammals or parts or products thereof and the laws of the State, District, or Territory of the United States from or into which such mammals, parts, or products thereof, are proposed to be exported or imported, and the laws of the United States forbidding importation of certain live mammals injurious to the interests of agriculture and horticulture, which regulations shall become effective as provided in section 3 hereof."

SEC. 5. That section 9 of said act approved July 3, 1918, is hereby repealed as of the day aforesaid and the following is hereby substituted in lieu thereof:

"SEC. 9. That there is authorized to be appropriated, from time to time, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions and to accomplish the purposes of said conventions and this act and regulations made pursuant thereto, and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized out of such moneys to employ in the city of Washington and elsewhere such persons and means as he may deem necessary for such purpose and may cooperate with local authorities in the protection of migratory birds and make the necessary investigations connected therewith."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANCESTRAL HOME OF JAMES K. POLK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9875, to provide $50,000 for the care, maintenance, and improvement of the ancestral home of James K. Polk, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. TABER, and Mr. RICH objected.

SUPPLY DEPOT AND LABORATORY, POCATELLO, IDAHO

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 366.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to purchase on behalf of the United States such tract or tracts of land in Pocatello, Idaho, including structures thereon, as in his judgment may be suitable for the establishment of a game management supply depot and laboratory for use of the Department of Agriculture, and to pay all costs incident to examining, transferring, and perfecting title to said land, and to construct thereon such building or buildings and to repair, add to, or remodel any existing structures thereon as in his judgment may be suitable for use as a depot and laboratory, and to purchase and install therein such equipment machinery as may be necessary for its efficient use and operation; he is authorized to provide such sidewalks and approaches in and around said premises as may be required. That appropriations made for the administration, protection, maintenance, control, improvements, and development of wildlife sanctuaries, reservations, and refuges under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture shall be available for the purchase, transportation, and handling of supplies and materials for distribution at cost from game management supply depots maintained by the Department of Agriculture to projects specially provided for, and transfers between the appropriations for said purposes are hereby authorized in order that the cost of supplies and materials and transportation and handling thereof drawn from central warehouses so maintained may be charged to the particular project benefited; and such supplies and materials as remain in said depots at the end of any fiscal year shall be continuously available for issuance during subsequent fiscal years and to be charged for by such transfers of funds between said appropriations for the fiscal year then current without decreasing in any way the appropriations made for that fiscal year: Provided, That supplies and materials shall not be purchased solely for the purpose of increasing the value of storehouse stock beyond reasonable requirements for any current fiscal year.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMISSIONED LINE AND ENGINEER OFFICERS OF THE COAST GUARD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12734, to amend an act entitled "An act to distribute the commissioned line and engineer officers of the Coast Guard in grades, and for other purposes", approved January 12, 1923.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate bill 4654 for the House bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the Senate bill identical with the House bill?

Mr. BLAND. It is an identical bill; but I shall offer an amendment to the Senate bill for the reason that the bill at the time it was originally introduced would have met the situation, but Admiral Hamlet retired last Saturday and in order to cover the situation now it is necessary to amend the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to distribute the commissioned line and engineer officers of the Coast Guard in grades, and for other purposes," approved January 12, 1923 (42 Stat. 1130), is hereby amended by striking out the first proviso in that section and inserting the following proviso in lieu thereof: "Provided, That any officer who is now serving or shall hereafter serve as Commandant in the Coast Guard shall, when retired, be retired with the rank of Commandant and with the pay of a rear admiral (upper half) of the Navy on the retired list and that an officer whose term of service as Commandant has expired may be appointed a captain and shall be an additional number in that grade, but, if not so appointed, he shall take the place on the lineal list in the grade that he would have attained had he not served as Commandant and be an additional number in such grade;".

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: Page 1, strike out, in lines 8, 9, and 10, the words "is now serving or shall hereafter serve as Commandant in the Coast Guard shall, when retired," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "who was serving on June 1, 1936, or shall thereafter serve as Commandant of the Coast Guard, shall, when retired, whether before or after the date of the enactment of this act,".

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider and a similar House bill (H. R. 12734) were laid on the table.

SAC AND FOX TRIBES OF INDIANS IN THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10669, authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Sac and Fox Tribes of Indians in the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, due to the fact the author of the bill is not here I think it would be better to pass the bill over.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his request?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The author of the bill has gone home, I may say to the gentleman, but if I can help him out I shall be glad to do so. He put the bill in my charge.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think if the author is not here it would be well to pass the bill over without prejudice.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Possibly I can take care of the situation. What does the gentleman wish to know about the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I wish to know about the merits of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman that as the bill has been reported by the committee I do not want to see it passed. If, however, the gentleman does not object to the consideration of the bill, I shall ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. The Senate bill, I assume, is at the Speaker's desk, inasmuch as it has passed the Senate and was recommended by the Department.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will it cost any money?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. It will cost a small sum to refund the Indians certain money spent in the administration of Indian affairs of other tribes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How much?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Forty thousand dollars. This is for a whole tribe of Indians.

Mr. RICH. Where are you going to get the money?

Mr. BURDICK. May I ask what is the real purpose of taking a——

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio and Mr. RICH objected.

INVESTIGATION OF AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS AND MACHINERY

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 212, to investigate corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, or distribution of agricultural implements and machinery.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Chair advise us what joint resolution we are now considering?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. House Joint Resolution 212, to investigate corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, or distribution of agricultural implements and machinery.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What is the parliamentary situation?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] has asked unanimous consent that the joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman withdraw his request?

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. No. I have asked unanimous consent that the joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADJUSTMENT AND SETTLEMENT OF LOSSES SUSTAINED BY COOPERATIVE MARKETING ASSOCIATIONS

The Clerk called Senate Joint Resolution 38, for the adjustment and settlement of losses sustained by the Cooperative Marketing Associations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution?

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. LAMNECK. I withhold the objection.

Mr. PIERCE. I should like to tell the gentleman a little about this joint resolution. There were many people in the days of the Farm Board out there in the West who held their wheat on account of telegrams and on account of certain requests made by the Farm Board. The Agricultural Committee last winter heard hearings in connection with this bill. I served on a subcommittee that considered the matter, and it was considered very thoroughly. It was our opinion at that time these men had certain rights that should be adjusted.

The Senate has passed this joint resolution. The House has amended it, so that the Court of Claims may consider the matter after an impartial hearing and determine the facts in the case.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES. May I suggest that the Court of Claims is not authorized to render a decision but only to make a finding and a recommendation to the Congress on this long-disputed proposition.

Mr. PIERCE. That is true.

Mr. JONES. The Court of Claims simply makes a recommendation.

Mr. LAMNECK. Then this joint resolution does not permit the Secretary of Agriculture or any other executive officer to pay these losses?

Mr. PIERCE. Not at all.

Mr. JONES. It simply authorizes the Court of Claims to make an investigation and a recommendation.

Mr. LAMNECK. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object. As I view this bill it seems to me those who dealt in this commodity were simply speculating and this is simply an action for loss by speculation.

Mr. PIERCE. No; that is not the testimony that was given before the committee.

Mr. JONES. Most of the farmers were involved in cooperatives, to which the Farm Board had made loans on wheat during the old Farm Board operation. This simply authorizes the Court of Claims to make an investigation of the facts, after which they shall make a recommendation to the Congress. That is all there is to it.

Mr. COSTELLO. There is no question but what they actually sustained a loss.

Mr. JONES. There is no question about that. The Court of Claims is authorized to investigate these losses, the amount thereof, and all the facts connected with the matter to see whether it will recommend that any action be taken. It is purely a recommendation.

Mr. COSTELLO. The result of this would be that the Court of Claims would ultimately find that these men had suffered certain losses.

Mr. JONES. Undoubtedly they would do that.

Mr. COSTELLO. The court would find what the amount of those losses were in each particular instance. They would further find there was no legal ground on which the court could render a decision in favor of these cooperatives. Then the next step would be to present bills to Congress on the basis of this being a moral obligation on the part of the Government.

Mr. JONES. They would find whether or not in their judgment there was a moral and equitable obligation. That is all.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman stated that the Court of Claims would hold in one of its findings that they had no authority to pay these claims. That is not the question involved in this joint resolution, because under the circumstances the Court of Claims would not have authority to find in favor of the claimants. This merely provides for an investigation.

I call the gentleman's attention also to the fact that the Farm Board asked these particular cooperatives to withhold their grain from the market. They were cooperating with the Farm Board, and the only purpose of the bill is to have the Court of Claims determine the facts in the matter and present them to Congress. Under no conditions is the Court of Claims authorized to allow payment of the claims.

Mr. COSTELLO. These losses were sustained due to the fact that they anticipated an increase in the price of their commodities.

Mr. BOILEAU. That will be according to what the Court of Claims may determine. The cooperatives claim they sustained their losses because they were complying with the request of the Farm Board, and that is the meat of the matter in a nutshell. We want the Court of Claims to make a finding and submit it to the Congress.

Mr. JONES. May I state to the gentleman that this matter has been under discussion for a long time, and it seems to me that the Court of Claims, which has the facilities, ought to go into the matter and determine the facts.

Mr. RICH. I object, Mr. Speaker. They tell me this joint resolution would cost the Government $400,000, and where are you going to get the money?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withhold his objection a moment, I should like to state to the gentleman that the language is very clear that the Court of Claims is to make its recommendation to the Congress, and the Court of Claims cannot authorize the payment of one cent. . The facts are in dispute and we want the facts presented to the Congress by the Court of Claims so that the matter may be decided on its merits.

Mr. RICH. Why do they have to have this joint resolution in order to go to the Court of Claims?

Mr. BOILEAU. In order that the Court of Claims may determine the facts. This joint resolution does not authorize the Court of Claims to render judgment.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the passage of the joint resolution.

COMMEMORATION OF THE WINNING OF THE OREGON COUNTRY FOR THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 450, authorizing the erection of a memorial building to commemorate the winning of the Oregon country for the United States.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the author of the joint resolution or some other Member who may have the information state the amount of expenditure contemplated by this joint resolution?

Mr. MOTT. The erection of the memorial at Champoeg, Oreg., which commemorates the establishment of the first government west of the Mississippi, will cost altogether $250,000. The State of Oregon is contributing $125,000 and we are asking the Government to contribute $125,000.

Champoeg, Oreg., was the place where the inhabitants of the Oregon country, which took in the States of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming, met in 1844 and established a government of their own and invited the United States to come in and take jurisdiction over them. The meeting was called at which delegates from the entire population, consisting of half British and half American, met and discussed this matter and took a vote upon it, and this was the establishment of the government.

The next year James K. Polk ran for President with the recognition of the Oregon country and the assumption of jurisdiction by the United States as a part of his platform.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman may recall that a few moments ago, when a bill came up to commemorate the birthplace or residence of James K. Polk, objection was heard on the gentleman's side of the House.

Mr. MOTT. I certainly did not object.

Mr. TARVER. The objection was on the ground that this is not the time to engage in extraordinary expenditures for purposes of this kind. I think the purpose of the gentleman's bill is a worthy one and under ordinary circumstances I would not object, but I do not believe this is a time to begin the expenditure of comparatively large sums of money for purposes that might very well be deferred until a later date, so I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman will withhold his objection a moment, the historical significance of this memorial has been recognized.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. TARVER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

RELIEF OF UNEMPLOYMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12374, to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of unemployment through the performance of useful public work, and for other purposes", approved March 31, 1933.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let us have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. This bill authorizes the employment by the relief organization of destitute prospectors. The Geological Survey sent out prospectors primarily to prospect for war minerals. This puts them on something they are familiar with and can do.

Mr. RICH. In other words, it is a P. W. A. activity hunting for more jobs.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] that after carefully considering the bill I have come to the conclusion that it is a good bill. It does not cost the Government anything, and it merely helps them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the relief of unemployment through the performance of useful public work, and for other purposes", approved March 31, 1933, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 7 (a) The President is further authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe and through the agency of the Works Progress Administration, to provide for employing citizens of the United States who are unemployed in the discovery and development of the mineral resources of the United States and to provide for furnishing the persons so employed with a cash allowance of $1 per day and subsistence and necessary supplies at the rate of $1 per day, and such medical attendance and hospitalization as may be necessary, during the period they are so employed, and, in the discretion of the Administrator, to provide for the transportation of such persons to the places of employment.

"(b) For the purpose of this section the Director of the United States Geological Survey, under the direction of the President, shall designate such areas of the United States, to be known as prospecting areas, as he shall deem best suited to the operations contemplated under this section, having due regard to the geologic structure and the mineral-producing qualities of such lands, and shall supply to the Administrators of the Works Progress Administration such available technical advice as to occurrence and value of minerals as may best assist in directing this work into productive channels."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

AMENDING THE COMMUNICATIONS ACT

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 880, H. R. 12646, to amend section 318 of the Communications Act.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I objected to that bill when it was under consideration and I should like to offer an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar 880. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I believe it is bad policy for us, after passing a bill on the calendar, to return to it. I think the only fair thing to the other bills is to proceed with the calling of the calendar regularly, and much as I dislike to object to returning, I am obliged to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR PROTECTION OF INDUSTRIAL PROPERTY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5805) to effectuate certain provisions of the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, as revised at The Hague on November 6, 1925.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I am frank to say that I do not understand the bill. I do not understand what jurisdiction The Hague has over industrial property in the United States.

Mr. DALY. The United States, in common with a number of European nations, agreed to an exchange of filing of certifications of copyrights and trade marks. In 1925 all of the nations got together and agreed to amend their rules, giving each nation the right to file within 6 months in any other country after the trade mark or copyright was registered within its own country. Every country did that with the exception of the United States. Our rule was 4 months, and this bill is to increase it to 6 months to make it uniform with the rules of the other countries.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is, instead of having to do with industrial property, it has to do with industrial trade marks and copyrights.

Mr. DALY. That is all.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NAVAL AIR BASE AT TONGUE POINT, OREG.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 783, H. R. 10129, authorizing an appropriation for the development of a naval air base at Tongue Point, Oreg.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I objected to returning to Calendar No. 880, I am bound to object to this. If we go back to any one bill on the calendar, we may have to go back to every bill objected to.

Mr. MOTT. May I explain to the gentleman why I make this request?

Mr. COSTELLO. We are going to object to returning to any bill on the calendar.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman who objected to the bill has left the hall.

Mr. MOTT. I know one of the gentlemen who objected to it did so inadvertently.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TARVER. I object.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman object to returning at the end of the call?

Mr. COSTELLO. For the same reason I shall object.

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR THE PROTECTION OF INDUSTRIAL PROPERTY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5806, to effectuate certain provisions of the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property as revised at The Hague on November 6, 1925.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will someone explain the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection comes too late. The Clerk will report the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4887 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 32) be amended to read as follows:

"No person otherwise entitled thereto shall be debarred from receiving a patent for his invention or discovery, nor shall any patent be declared invalid by reason of its having been first patented or caused to be patented by the inventor or his legal representatives or assigns in a foreign country, unless the application for said foreign patent was filed more than 12 months, in cases within the provisions of section 4886 of the Revised Statutes, and 6 months in cases of designs, prior to the filing of the application in this country, in which case no patent shall be granted in this country.

"An application for patent for an invention or discovery or for a design filed in this country by any person who has previously regularly filed an application for a patent for the same invention, discovery, or design in a foreign country which, by treaty, convention, or law, affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States shall have the same force and effect as the same application would have if filed in this country on the date on which the application for patent for the same invention, discovery, or design was first filed in such foreign country, provided the application in this country is filed within 12 months in cases within the provisions of section 4886 of the Revised Statutes, and within 6 months in cases of designs, from the earliest date on which any such foreign application was filed. But no patent shall be granted on an application for patent for an invention or discovery or a design which had been patented or described in a printed publication in this or any foreign country more than 2 years before the date of the actual filing of the application in this country, or which had been in public use or on sale in this country for more than 2 years prior to such filing."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4457, authorizing the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the third circuit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman withhold his request?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will withhold the request.

Mr. WALTER. I do not know of any other circuit where there has been demonstrated greater need for a temporary judge. All the members of the bar in New Jersey, eastern Pennsylvania, and in Delaware have complained for many years, due to the inability of one of the judges to properly take care of the business. He is upward of 82 years of age. He has not been in court for nearly 2 years, with the result that the appellate list is crowded to the extent that it is impossible to have decisions handed down.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the gentleman will have in mind, there were several bills on the calendar creating judgeships which the Committee on the Judiciary, because of the importance of the subject, saw fit to embody in an omnibus bill and bring them out, and they were considered on the floor and each was considered on its merits. We thought those bills were of such importance that they deserved some consideration on the floor. This is a bill providing for the appointment of a judge for even a higher court—the circuit court of appeals.

For the same reasons given when the bills were here to create district judgeships, I am constrained to object, so that we may have more time to consider the subject. I do not want to kill this bill. I realize we are doing things in the last days of the Congress that we might not otherwise do. Having in mind that the reason we are here tonight considering 100 bills on the Consent Calendar is because we have not had a Calendar Wednesday throughout this session, we cannot be blamed too much if we insist that some of these bills of major importance, such as this, be given some consideration so that the membership may assume their individual responsibility in voting for or against these bills.

Mr. WALTER. This bill was very carefully considered and it should have been included in the list of bills when we sought a rule for the district court judges. In some way it was overlooked. However, the need for this is greater than for any of the district court judges, with the possible exception of the one in New York. The gentleman must bear in mind this is a very large circuit. There are upward of 5,000,000 people in this circuit.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am sympathetic with the condition, but I wish the gentleman would see the Speaker some time when suspensions are in order and move to suspend the rules so that we could at least give a little consideration to the merits of the bill.

Mr. WALTER. As far as the merits are concerned, I can only say there are two judges in one of the largest districts in the United States sitting. This bill was passed out of the committee by a unanimous vote. As a matter of fact, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON], a member of the gentleman's side of the House, has been most interested in the passage of this bill. It was he who urged the passage of the bill when it was considered by the committee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, for the time being I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HURRICANE CONTROL IN GULF OF MEXICO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10313, to provide for hurricane control in the Gulf of Mexico and environs during the hurricane season.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute an identical Senate bill, S. 4734.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that the same as the House bill as amended?

Mr. BLAND. This is the same as the House bill when amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the substitution of the Senate bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to the extent facilities of the Coast Guard will permit and within the limits of such appropriations as may be made for such purpose, which are hereby authorized, the Secretary of the Treasury when the Coast Guard is under the Treasury Department, and the Secretary of the Navy when the Coast Guard is a part of the Navy, are requested to patrol the Gulf of Mexico and environs for the purpose of cooperating with the Secretary of Agriculture in furnishing the Weather Bureau data to better enable such Bureau to forecast the size and course of tropical hurricanes.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 10313) was laid on the table.

PILCHARD INVESTIGATION BY BUREAU OF FISHERIES

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 597, authorizing an investigation by the Bureau of Fisheries of the California sardine (pilchard) fishing industry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House joint resolution?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman what it is going to cost to make this investigation?

Mr. BLAND. It it impossible to tell just how far the investigation will have to go. I should say it would not be very expensive. The matter of appropriations will be entirely within the control of the Committee on Appropriations. The work is to be done not by a congressional commission but by an authorized bureau of the Government, the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. RICH. Has the gentleman some idea of the cost? Has he discussed this particular bill with the Bureau of Fisheries?

Mr. BLAND. I do not think they could possibly tell. They will take advantage of the studies that have been made by the California Fish and Game Commission, by Stanford University, and also other commissions, and they will make their own independent research.

Mr. RICH. This is the establishment of another bureau in the Department of Fisheries.

Mr. BLAND. It is not. It is the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. RICH. But some group of individuals will go out there to make this study.

Mr. BLAND. The Bureau of Fisheries will make the study. It will probably necessitate some additional help; but the fishing industry is one of the greatest industries in the United States. There is a serious question as to whether there is depletion and we want the question determined by the Federal Government for conservation purposes.

Mr. RICH. The Congress is not going to help the fishing interests of this country until it stops the importation of fish from foreign countries.

Mr. BLAND. I quite agree with the gentleman; I am willing to see it done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the United States Bureau of Fisheries is authorized and directed to make a complete and scientific investigation of the pilchard (Sardinia caerulea) fisheries and fishing industry along the Pacific coast of the United States with a view to determining the most appropriate method of regulating such industry in the public interest and providing for continuing conservation and wise utilization of the resource, and to report to the Congress the results of such investigation, together with its recommendations.

SEC. 2. In carrying out the purposes of this resolution, the United States Bureau of Fisheries is authorized to cooperate to the fullest practicable extent with the coastal States and other public or private agencies, and for such purpose is further authorized, with the consent of any such State, to utilize any services and facilities made available by such State.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated $10,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, to begin the investigation herein authorized and directed, and there are hereby authorized to be appropriated such additional sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, after "the" insert "United States".

Page 1, line 5, strike out "California sardine (pilchard)" and insert pilchard (Sardinia caerulea) fisheries and".

Page 2, line 4, after "the" insert "United States".

Page 2, line 12, after "directed" insert ", and there are hereby authorized to be appropriated such additional sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution".

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title of the joint resolution was amended to read: "Joint resolution authorizing an investigation by the United States Bureau of Fisheries of the pilchard (Sardinia caerulea) fisheries and fishing industry along the Pacific coast of the United States."

FIRE PROTECTION EQUIPMENT, PASSENGER VESSELS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2127, to amend section 4471 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Gladly. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as amended by the House committee, provides authority to the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection to require sprinkler systems on passenger vessels having accommodations for 50 or more passengers. I have in my possession a letter from J. B. Weaver, Director of the Bureau, stating that as amended he approves the bill. This will be a contribution toward the safety of passenger vessels.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. It is a safety measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4471 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 464), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following new paragraph:

"On and after July 1, 1936, every steamer permitted by her certificate of inspection to carry as many as 50 passengers or upward shall be equipped with an automatic sprinkler system, which shall be in addition to any other device or devices for fire protection. Such automatic sprinkler system shall consist of an arrangement of piping connecting one or more adequate supplies of water (which supplies shall be in addition to any other water supply of the vessel) with a distributing device which is so assembled and located as to discharge and diffuse automatically over all portions of the vessels accessible to passengers and/or crew (except cargo holds, machinery spaces, and when of fireproof construction, toilets and bathrooms) a spray of water which will be effective to extinguish fire. Such system shall be kept at all times in good working condition and ready for immediate use. The Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection shall cause to be made at least once in every 90 days such tests and inspections as insure the proper working of such automatic sprinkler systems. In carrying out the provisions of this paragraph the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection is hereby authorized and directed to prescribe rules and regulations to govern the work of installing automatic sprinkler systems in steam vessels."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all of the language in the bill, commencing with line 7, page 1, and continuing through line 19, on the second page, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"On and after July 1, 1937, every passenger vessel with berthed or stateroom accommodations for 50 or more passengers shall be equipped with an automatic sprinkler system which shall be, in addition to any other device or devices for fire protection, of a type prescribed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors and approved by the Secretary of Commerce. All enclosed portions of such vessels accessible to passengers or crew (except cargo holds, machinery spaces, and when of fire-resisting construction, toilets, bathrooms, and spaces of similar construction) shall be protected by an automatic sprinkler system: Provided, That if after investigation the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection finds in the case of a particular vessel the application of this act is unnecessary to properly protect life on such vessel, an exception may be made. The Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection shall cause to be made suitable tests and inspections as will insure the proper working of such systems. In carrying out the provisions of this paragraph the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection is hereby authorized and directed to prescribe the particular approved type, character, and manner of installation of systems be fitted. The term "type" as herein used shall be considered to mean any system which will give a prescribed or required efficiency and shall not mean some peculiar shape or design and shall not be confined to some brand or make."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a letter from the Director of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection endorsing this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF NAVIGATION AND STEAMBOAT INSPECTION,
Washington, June 2, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT RAMSPECK,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN RAMSPECK: Referring to S. 2127, as amended by your committee, relative to the installation of sprinkler systems on board passenger vessels:

I have read the proposed amendment carefully and consider the act a good one, as amended, and feel that if the act is administered properly by this Bureau it will contribute to the safety of passenger vessels in no uncertain manner, and the latitude given the Bureau, if intelligently used, will prevent undue hardship on the industry without sacrificing the effectiveness of the object of the act.

Yours very truly,

J. B. WEAVER, Director.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11152, to extend the retirement privilege to the Director, Assistant Directors, inspectors, and special agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (b) of section 3 of the act approved July 3, 1926, chapter 801, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 693, subdivision (b)), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"(b) Superintendents of United States national cemeteries, and such employees of the offices of solicitors of the several executive departments, of the Architect of the Capitol, of the Library of Congress, of the United States Botanic Garden, of the recorder of deeds and register of wills of the District of Columbia, of the United States Soldiers' Home, of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, of the State Department without the continental limits of the United States who are United States citizens and not within the Foreign Service as defined in the act of May 24, 1924, and amendments thereof, of the Indian Service at large whose tenure of employment is not intermittent nor of uncertain duration, and the Director, Assistant Directors, inspectors, and special agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, my purpose in speaking at this point on this bill and in urging its passage is to refute certain unfair and improper criticisms recently made against the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and to let the American people know that those few criticisms do not represent the viewpoint of Members of Congress, despite the fact that one or two Members of one of the bodies have engaged in criticisms of one of the finest public officials we have in the Federal governmental service, J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Bureau of Investigation.

Mr. Hoover and his men have done wonderful work and have done it fearlessly. He has stamped out organized and syndicated crime; and the people of America are grateful to him and to the men under him for the character of service they have rendered. He could not do it alone if he did not have the right kind of men under him. While the names of those men are not carried in the press, they are, nevertheless, entitled to as much honor as is Mr. Hoover himself, and Mr. Hoover is the first man who gives to those employed in his Department the honor to which they are entitled and the tribute owed them by an appreciative people.

Criticism, unfair and unwarranted, as I have said, has been directed against him. A silent whispering campaign has been undertaken from some known sources, but the unanimous press of America have editorially commented upon the unfair criticism and have supported Mr. Hoover in the fearless character of work he and his men have performed.

The press of America have unanimously expressed appreciative sentiments of the American people for Director Hoover and the men of his Bureau for purging America of organized crime, of the thorough investigations made, of obtaining evidence necessary for a conviction, and of the arrests of the leaders of organized crime in criminal gangs in America.

There are no words of mine that could add to the praise already given to the men of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. However, what words I can utter in this connection are directed toward those who are engaged in unfair and unwarranted criticism of this fearless public official.

In connection with the able work of the Bureau of Investigation, I might also say that there is complete cooperation and coordination between all of the divisions and the various activities of the Department of Justice. Attorney General Cummings has established an organization in the Department of Justice which commands respect and attention, of which the American people may well be proud. There is complete and entire harmony existing in the entire Department of Justice under the able leadership of Attorney General Cummings, and that particularly applies to the harmony that exists between Attorney General Cummings and Director J. Edgar Hoover. To a great extent, the success of the Bureau of Investigation in its fearless work is due to the constant support given Mr. Hoover and his men by the Attorney General and his assistants.

I cannot let this occasion pass without complimenting all of the assistants of the Attorney General and praising them for the complete harmony which exists in the Department of Justice, and for the fine public service that they are rendering. It is impossible to name all of them, but there is one assistant to the Attorney General, Hon. Joseph B. Keenan, to whom I desire to pay special tribute at this time. Mr. Keenan for over 3 years had charge of all criminal prosecutions for the Department of Justice throughout the country, and he is now occupying the position of Assistant to the Attorney General, a much-deserved promotion in recognition of his able service. During the years he was in charge of the criminal prosecutions he fearlessly performed that work. There was complete harmony between Mr. Keenan and the other branches of the Department of Justice. Mr. Keenan has been succeeded as Assistant Attorney General in charge of criminal prosecutions by Mr. Brien McMahon, who is continuing the same character of work that Mr. Keenan so ably performed.

I am going to briefly refer to some of the accomplishments during the past few years of the Bureau of Investigation, the jurisdiction of which has been greatly enlarged during the past few years by the passage of a number of bills dealing with interstate crimes. The more prominent of these include the Federal kidnaping statute, laws relating to the robbery of banks, organized or operating under the laws of the United States, laws pertaining to the interstate transportation of stolen property, the extortion statutes, and the statute covering interstate flight to avoid prosecution or the giving of testimony in certain cases.

Let me call to your attention some of the accomplishments of the Bureau of Investigation under the leadership of Director Hoover. Since the Federal kidnaping statute was passed in June 1932 there have been 65 cases of kidnaping investigated by this Bureau, and every case has been solved. Literally hundreds of extortion cases have been concluded. During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1935, this Bureau spent a total of $4,626,000, and during that same period of time the savings and recoveries effected in cases investigated by the Bureau amounted to over $38,000,000. In other words, for every dollar spent, the Government and the taxpayers received in return approximately $9. Further, convictions were secured by this Bureau last year in 94 out of every 100 people who were brought to trial. This is an outstanding record of convictions, showing a thorough investigation of the evidence by the Bureau of Investigation and the able manner in which the cases were tried by legal representatives of the Department of Justice. During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1935, the records show 3,717 convictions were secured and over 5,400 fugitives from justice were apprehended as a result of the work of the Bureau of Investigation. As a result of the thorough investigations by this Bureau, covering the period from July 1, 1935, up to the present time, the legal representatives of the Department of Justice have obtained 3,070 convictions.

Among some of the outstanding cases handled during this period were the capture of Alvin Karpis and other dangerous members of the kidnaping gang, the kidnapers of Mr. Edward G. Bremer, of St. Paul; the apprehension and conviction of William Mahan, the kidnaper of that fine young boy, George Weyerhaueser; the capture and conviction of Thomas H. Robinson, Jr., who kidnaped Mrs. Berry Stoll, of Louisville, Ky.; and the capture and return to prison of Sam Coker, a notorious bank robber. As a result of this character of fearless work, organized kidnaping no longer exists.

However, kidnaping has existed since Biblical times, and we cannot be lulled into a feeling of security which will result in the Congress reducing its appropriation to this important activity.

In handling the bank-robbery cases which come within the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Investigation, the number of such robberies has been reduced from an average of 14 a month to about 4 a month. This has been brought about as a result of the prosecutions and convictions of members of organized gangs of bank robbers.

In every other activity that comes within the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Investigation, where violations of Federal laws were involved, the men of the Bureau of Investigation, under Mr. Hoover's leadership, have fearlessly performed the same character of public service.

It is a significant and pleasing fact to note that the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, enjoys the confidence, cooperation, and support of all of the police departments of the United States.

It is also pleasing to note the efficient manner in which the Department of Justice, under Attorney General Commings, is performing its various duties. It is particularly pleasing for me, in speaking in behalf of the pending bill, to provide for the extension of retirement privileges to the employees of the Bureau of Investigation, to compliment Director Hoover and those serving with him upon the great public service they are performing for the American people in enforcing the various laws under the jurisdiction of the Bureau, and especially for the great work they have done in the extermination of organized crime from America. [Applause.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF LANDS IN MONTGOMERY COUNTY, MD.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5168, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to convey certain lands to the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission of Maryland, for park purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey by a good and sufficient deed to the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission, a public agency created by the General Assembly of Maryland, chapter 448 of the laws of the 1927 session of said assembly, all of the following pieces or parcels of land situate, lying, and being in Montgomery County, in the State of Maryland, being a part of a tract of land called "Oatland", designated and described as follows: Beginning for the same at a point at the end of 631.62 feet measured on the last line of a conveyance made the 13th day of December 1855, by John Davidson and wife to James H. CLASSIFIED EXECUTIVE CIVIL SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6679, extending the classified executive civil service of the United States.

Mr. LEHLBACH and Mr. McLEAN objected.

TRANSFER OF LANDS IN MONTGOMERY COUNTY, MD.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I was about to propound a unanimous-consent request with reference to the bill (H. R. 5168) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to convey certain lands to the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, of Maryland, for park, parkway, and playground purposes of Maryland for park purposes, but the services at the fire were a little quicker than my tongue.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, with reference to H. R. 5168, that the provisions of the House bill just passed be substituted for those of the bill (S. 4105) of like import and that the Senate bill be passed in lieu of the House bill, and that the action of the House in passing the House bill be vacated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will return to the consideration of H. R. 5168, vacate the proceedings of the House in connection therewith, and substitute the Senate bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey by a good and sufficient deed to the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, a public agency created by the General Assembly of Maryland, chapter 448 of the laws of the 1927 session of said assembly, all or such part or parts of the following pieces or parcels of land as may now or hereafter be designated by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission situate, lying, and being in Montgomery County, in the State of Maryland, being a part of a tract of land called Oatland, designated and described as follows: Beginning for the same at a point at the end of 631.62 feet measured on the last line of a conveyance made the 13th day of December 1855, by John Davidson and wife to James H. With the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey, by a good and sufficient deed to the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, a public agency created by the General Assembly of Maryland, chapter 448 of the laws of the 1927 session of said assembly, all of that piece or parcel of land situate, lying, and being in Montgomery County, in the State of Maryland, being a part of the area comprising the Bethesda Experimental Station of the Bureau of Animal Industry, designated and described as the east 18 acres. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Maryland desires to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute the House bill for the Senate bill?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Did the Clerk call H. R. 6679, extending the classified executive civil service of the United States?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk called the bill and it was objected to, but in view of what happened, the Chair thinks it should be called again.

CLASSIFIED EXECUTIVE CIVIL SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6679) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman from New Jersey withhold his objection?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I withhold my objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, this bill gives discretionary authority, the gentleman understands, of course, to the President of the United States to bring into the civil service positions which he cannot now bring in by Executive order. This is certainly in line with the gentleman's party platform as adopted at Cleveland, and I hope he will withdraw his objection.

If he has noticed the bill, it provides for a competitive examination.

Mr. McLEAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. McLEAN. This bill will give discretionary power to cover into the civil service all employees of Government corporations organized under the laws of the State of Delaware without any authority of the Congress; is that not true?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not know if there are any such corporations that have Federal employees working for them. It will give authority, of course, to the President of the United States.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There is the Commodity Credit Corporation, which is a Delaware corporation.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CHOICE OF JOINT AND SURVIVORSHIP ANNUITY UPON RETIREMENT BY GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12717, to provide for the right of election by employee, subject to the provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act, of a joint and survivorship annuity upon retirement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this right of election cost the Treasury any more money?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may say to the gentleman from New York it does not cost the Treasury any money except what little incidental expense there may be in connection with the administration of the law in figuring the different plans. There is a little expense of administration, as reported by the Civil Service Commission. This gives the option to the employee when he retires and, of course, it will be necessary to figure out what the retirement will be under the particular plan.

Mr. TABER. Under the actuarial tables the cost to the Government will be the same?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Exactly the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 5, sec. 694 (a)), is amended by striking out all of the second proviso of section 4 beginning with the words "And provided further" and ending with the words "multiple of twelve" and substituting the following in lieu thereof: "Provided further, That any employee at the time of his retirement may elect to receive, in lieu of the life annuity herein described, (1) an increased annuity of equivalent value which shall carry with it a proviso that no unexpended part of the principal upon the annuitant's death shall be returned; or (2) a joint and survivorship annuity of equivalent actuarial value which shall carry with it a proviso that no unexpended part of the principal upon the annuitant's death shall be returned but that such annuity shall be continued upon his death throughout the life of and paid to a beneficiary nominated by written designation duly executed and filed with the Civil Service Commission at the time of his retirement; or (3) a modified joint and survivorship annuity of equivalent actuarial value which shall carry with it a proviso that no unexpended part of the principal upon the annuitant's death shall be returned but that one-half of his annuity shall be continued upon his death throughout the life of and paid to a beneficiary nominated by written designation duly executed and filed with the Civil Service Commission at the time of his retirement; or (4) an annuity payable during his life which shall carry with it a proviso that no unexpended part of the principal upon the annuitant's death shall be returned, with some other annuity payable after his death, provided the total value of the annuity during his life and of the succeeding annuity shall be computed to be of equivalent actuarial value to the annuity which he would have received on a single life plan and provided that this election shall be subject to the approval of the United States Civil Service Commission: And provided further, That no election of an annuity as set forth in items (2), (3), or (4) above shall

BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2712, to promote the efficiency of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the bill explained.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, the necessity for this bill grows out of the passage by a previous Congress of what is known as the Thomas amendment, giving the 40-hour week to certain employees in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which created a very severe administrative problem, because part of the employees did not get the 40-hour week and they have been working 44 hours while the people they are assisting work only 40 hours. They therefore have to stagger the hours. This measure is recommended by the Treasury Department and simply extends the 40-hour week to all employees in this Bureau, and is in line with what we did at the last session of Congress for the postal employees when we gave them a 40-hour week.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the adjustment of regular hours of duty of employees deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Treasury for the efficient administration of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the aggregate weekly earnings of employees of such Bureau whose compensation is fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for full-time service, shall not be less by reason of such adjustment than the aggregate weekly earnings at basic salary rates for full-time service prior to March 28, 1934.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this act, authority is hereby granted to the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the hourly rates of compensation of employees of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing whose compensation is fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to such extent as may be necessary to make the aggregate weekly compensation after such adjustment equal to the aggregate weekly compensation at basic salary rates for such employees for full-time service prior to March 28, 1934.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect as of the 1st day of the first calendar month following the date of its enactment.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That section 23 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1935, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'Where the adjustment of regular hours of duty of employees subject to the provisions of the preceding paragraph requires the adjustment of regular hours of duty of any employee whose compensation is fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, the aggregate weekly earnings of such employee whose compensation is fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for full-time service shall not be less by reason of such adjustment than his aggregate weekly earnings for full-time service prior to March 28, 1934. Full-time service within the meaning of this paragraph shall not be less than 40 hours per week. For the purposes of this paragraph, authority is hereby granted to adjust the hourly rates of compensation of employees whose compensation is fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to such extent as may be necessary to make the aggregate compensation for a 40-hour week equal to the compensation for a full-time week prior to March 28, 1934.'

"SEC. 2. This act shall take effect as of the 1st day of the first calendar month following the date of its enactment."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SEC. 2. EXPENSES OF COMMEMORATING ADMISSION OF STATE OF ARKANSAS INTO THE UNION

The Clerk called Senate Joint Resolution 229, providing for the contribution by the United States to the expense of the celebration by the State of Arkansas of its admission to the Federal Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. TABER. I object.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. TABER. I do not see how I can. If we authorize the expenditure of $200,000 to celebrate the admission of every State into the Union, we will want to go right on down the line.

Mr. TERRY. May I suggest to the gentleman that this joint resolution does not authorize $200,000. This is an authorization for an appropriation of $150,000 by the Federal Government.

Mr. TABER. That is just as bad.

Mr. TERRY. This is something that is done in all the other centennials. We have voted for the San Diego and Chicago and various others and this is the smallest amount ever asked in the House.

Mr. TABER. I think I must object.

Mr. TERRY. I beg the gentleman not to object to this reasonable amount.

Mr. TABER. I feel I must object.

MODIFICATION OF CONTRACT LEASE, PORT OF NEW ORLEANS covering the New Orleans Army base or portions thereof, in the event it appears that full performance of the lessee's obligations under such lease will result in default by, or impose undue hardship upon, the lessee: Provided, That the rental shall not be made lower than the fair rental value to be determined by the Secretary of War from an appraisal by qualified disinterested appraisers, the cost of appraisal to be paid by the Secretary of War from the rental collected under the lease.

Be it enacted, etc., That in the case of any State or States or political subdivision or subdivisions thereof which, prior to the date of approval of this act, shall have constructed and shall have in operation any toll bridges on the approved system of Federal-aid highways within such State or States or political subdivision or subdivisions thereof, and which shall, prior to July 1, 1938, cause any such toll bridge, or toll bridges, to be made free, the Secretary of Agriculture shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of the Federal-aid road funds apportioned to the State not to exceed 50 percent of such amount as may be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture as the reasonable construction cost of any such toll bridge: Provided, That no payment of Federal funds shall be made on account of any such bridge which was not constructed in accordance with plans and specifications which would meet the standards required by the Secretary of Agriculture at the time such bridge was constructed, nor on account of any bridge the construction of which was commenced or completed prior to March 3, 1927: And provided further, That no such payment shall be made which will exceed 50 percent of the reasonable cost of the labor and materials which were actually incorporated in the construction of such bridge, excluding all costs of rights-of-way, property damages, and financing costs, and any amount so paid on account of any such bridge shall be used by the highway department of such State for matching unobligated Federal-aid road funds available to the State for expenditure in the improvement of highways on the system of Federal-aid highways.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

I would like to ask the author of the bill, is this a bill that would let the Federal Government pay 50 percent of the cost of purchasing toll bridges to make them free?

Mr. CARMICHAEL. That is correct.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want to say that is commendable legislation. We in West Virginia are faced with that very problem, and I commend the gentleman.

Mr. CARMICHAEL. I thank the gentleman.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 12745) was laid on the table.

Mr. WHITE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have that bill explained.

Mr. FREY. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been recommended by the State Department. It represents claims of nationals of China, Chile, Nicaragua, and other small countries, none of which is indebted to our country. It has been recommended by the State Department and by the last three Presidents.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. YOUNG. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does not this bill provide for payment to the Government of Austria of some money, and to the Government of Great Britain $24,920?

Mr. FREY. They were all withdrawn.

Mr. YOUNG. It is now on page 2 of this bill.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. There are just a few private claims that the Government is interested in getting settled.

Mr. YOUNG. None of the governments in default of payment of their just debts are beneficiaries under this bill?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That is correct.

Mr. YOUNG. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

With the following committee amendments:

Page, 10, beginning with line 9, strike out all of lines 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to inquire about these amendments. What were the amendments which were just now read? Did they strike out nations that are indebted to our country?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The amendments strike out England and some other countries which we thought were indebted to us in a very large amount, something like $250,000.

Mr. LUNDEEN. If there is any nation in there that is indebted to us that has not been stricken out I would have to object, and that would be the first time I have objected on this floor during all these years.

EUROPEAN WAR DEBTS DUE TODAY

Today, June 15, 1936, we are notified by European nations of another series of defaults in their war debts to the United States. They balance their budgets, they increase their armies and navies for war, but they cannot pay America. I opposed these loans in 1917, 19 years ago. I was scoffed at by the so-called wise, but I was right, and here we are, millions of unemployed, millions on relief. We need this money now due us and they can pay. What are we going to do about it? I am willing to follow the course of Andrew Jackson, who compelled the French to pay their war debt to the United States more than 100 years ago. I commend his state papers to gentlemen of the House. In two speeches in the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses I reviewed his manner of compelling payment of war debts. We need more Jackson Americans in America.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I think the gentleman would be a little late in objecting, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FREY], who is on the subcommittee, says there is none. I have not examined the bill.

Mr. FREY. All of them were stricken out where payments were to the Government itself. The only payments in here are to nationals.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I hope the gentleman gets the distinction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAYMENTS TO THE AMERICAN WAR MOTHERS, INC.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3296, to authorize certain payments to the American War Mothers, Inc.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DIVISION OF COURT AT THOMASVILLE, GA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11614, to amend the Judicial Code to divide the middle district of Georgia into seven divisions by adding a new division to the middle district, and providing for terms of said court to be held at Thomasville, Ga.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsections (d) and (e) of section 77 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 28, sec. 150), is amended as follows:

"(d) The middle district shall include seven divisions, constituted as follows: The Athens division, which shall include the territory embraced on January 1, 1925, in the counties of Clarke, Elbert, Franklin, Greene, Hart, Madison, Morgan, Oconee, Oglethorpe, and Walton; the Macon division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Baldwin, Bibb, Bleckley, Butts, Crawford, Hancock, Houston, Jasper, Jones, Lamar, Monroe, Peach, Pulaski, Putnam, Twiggs, Upson, Washington, and Wilkinson; the Columbus division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Chattahoochee, Clay, Harris, Marion, Meriwether, Muscogee, Quitman, Randolph, Stewart, Talbot, and Taylor; the Americus division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Crisp, Dooly, Lee, Macon, Schley, Sumter, Terrell, Webster, and Wilcox; the Albany division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Baker, Calhoun, Dougherty, Early, Miller, Mitchell, Turner, and Worth; the Valdosta division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Berrien, Cook, Echols, Irwin, Lanier, Lowndes, and Tift; and the Thomasville division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Thomas, Brooks, Colquitt, Grady, Decatur, and Seminole.

"(e) The terms of the district court for the Athens division shall be held at Athens on the first Mondays in June and December; for the Macon division at Macon on the first Mondays in May and November; for the Columbus division at Columbus on the first Mondays in March and September; for the Americus division at Americus on the second Mondays in February and June: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations are furnished for holding court at Americus free of cost to the Government until a public building shall have been erected or put into proper condition for such purpose in said city; for the Albany division at Albany on the first Mondays in April and October; for the Valdosta division at Valdosta on the third Mondays in March and September; and for the Thomasville division on the third Mondays in May and November: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations are furnished for holding court thereat free of cost to the Government at Thomasville."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE OF DISTRICT COURT FOR EASTERN, MIDDLE, AND WESTERN DISTRICTS OF TENNESSEE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3179, to appoint one additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern, Middle, and Western Districts of Tennessee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, for the reasons I have given in other cases of this kind, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

NORTHERN MONTANA AGRICULTURAL AND MANUAL TRAINING SCHOOL

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1871, granting certain public lands to the State of Montana for the use and benefit of the Northern Montana Agricultural and Manual Training School.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill authorizes the conveyance of 500,000 acres of land to the State of Montana for the purpose of establishing a land-grant college. It would seem to me that if we are to authorize the conveyance of half a million acres of land we should give some consideration to it. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

DEATH VALLEY MONUMENT, CALIFORNIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4024, to amend an act of Congress approved June 13, 1933 (48 Stat. 139), entitled "An act to extend the mining laws of the United States to the Death Valley Monument in California."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is impossible to tell from the report on this bill how extensive the bill is. I wish the sponsor of the bill would explain what is intended to be done.

Mr. Speaker, in the absence of anyone to explain the bill, I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

SARATOGA NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 32, to provide for the creation of the Saratoga National Historical Park in the State of New York, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have been consistently opposed to the creation of new national parks because of the tremendous expense involved in their maintenance. I think further consideration should be given to this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT FREE BATHHOUSE, HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11176, increasing the penalty for making false oaths for the purpose of bathing at the Government free bathhouse at Hot Springs, Ark.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish someone would explain the bill. If there is to be a penalty on bathing, I want to know it.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, replying to the inquiry of the gentleman from North Dakota, I may say that this is purely a measure to provide against the perpetration of fraud on the Government in the operation of a free bathhouse in the city of Hot Springs.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act limiting the privileges of the Government free bathhouse on the public reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., to persons who are without and unable to obtain the means to pay for baths", approved March 2, 1911 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 16, sec. 371), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That only persons who are without and unable to obtain the means to pay for baths and are suffering from ailments for which bathing in the water of the Hot Springs Reservation will afford relief or effect a cure shall be permitted to bathe at the free bathhouse on the public reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and before any person shall be permitted to bathe at the free bathhouse on the reservation he shall be required to make oath, before such officer duly authorized to administer oaths for general purposes as the superintendent of the Hot Springs Reservation shall designate, that he is without and unable to obtain the means to pay for baths, and any person desiring to bathe at the free bathhouse on the Hot Springs Reservation making a false oath as to his financial condition shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $25 nor more than $300 and be imprisoned for not less than 5 days nor more than 60 days."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 15, strike out "less than 5 days nor".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12426, authorizing the payment of certain salaries and expenses of employees of the General Land Office.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the bill explained.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I shall move to substitute a Senate bill for the House bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know something about the situation. We have passed the Taylor Grazing Act and cut down the work of the General Land Office. I do not know why we should increase their salaries or personnel.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

MEMORIAL TO DR. SAMUEL ALEXANDER MUDD

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 496, for the erection of a memorial to Dr. Samuel Alexander Mudd.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

CALIFORNIA STATE PARK SYSTEM

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1994, to provide for the selection of certain lands in the State of California for the use of the California State park system.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish somebody would explain the bill. I would like to know something about this exchange, this giving of national lands to a State park system.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. Speaker, this is desert land in the Imperial Valley on the edge of the mountain side covered with desert growth. The State of California and the State Park Commission of California are willing to take it over, and build trails through it, and so and so forth at the expense of the State. The Secretary of the Interior not only has made a favorable report, but recommends the legislation. There is no cost to the Government.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Do I understand that this is now Federal land?

Mr. BURNHAM. Yes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. And title to it will be transferred to the State of California?

Mr. BURNHAM. To the California State Park Commission; but if they do not use the land within a year the title will revert to the Federal Government.

Mr. GRISWOLD. What does the Federal Government receive for transferring these national lands to the State of California?

Mr. BURNHAM. The lands remain there. We do not take a thing away from the Government. The State of California only makes it possible for tourists and others to visit this land.

Mr. GRISWOLD. As I understand the bill, it transfers the title to this land, and that is what I am interested in.

Mr. BURNHAM. Yes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. It transfers title from the Federal Government to the State of California.

Mr. BURNHAM. Reserving to the Government all mineral rights. There is a reversion clause in there also, so that if the lands are not used for State park purposes they revert to the Federal Government.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Whether they will be used for park purposes or not, we are giving some land belonging to the Federal Government to the State of California as a gift.

Mr. BURNHAM. The land has no value for agricultural purposes. It is desert land without any agricultural value. There is desert growth upon these lands and there is fossil remaining thereon that the State of California would like to protect and perpetuate. It is not protected now.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. The State wants to protect and perpetuate the desert foliage and plant life. There are many visitors who come to this desert land, which belongs to the Government, and they take the varieties of cacti off this land and bring it home because they are nice in home gardens. This is making a great inroad on the typical desert plant life of California. The State of California will preserve it because in connection with the desert lands now owned by the State of California, the State has passed laws forbidding gardeners, individuals, and various other people who are interested in plant life, from taking it off the land. We are trying to preserve this growth. There are hundreds of varieties of plant life out there.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I am not objecting to the State of California desiring to preserve that plant life.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I wish the gentleman would not object.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1995, to provide for the selection of certain lands in the State of California for the use of the California State park system.

The lands so acquired to be subject to all conditions and reservations prescribed by this act, including the reversionary clause hereinbefore set out.

There was no objection.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "December", insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That facilities for holding court at Benton are furnished free of expense to the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES OF THE FORT PULASKI NATIONAL MONUMENT, GEORGIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11180, to extend the boundaries of the Fort Pulaski National Monument, Georgia, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the boundaries of the Fort Pulaski National Monument on Cockspur Island,, Ga., be, and they are hereby, extended to include all of the lands on said island now or formerly under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War.

AMENDMENT OF THE WORLD WAR ADJUSTED-COMPENSATION ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3257, to amend the World War Adjusted Compensation Act.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if there is anyone present who can explain this bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I believe I can explain the bill.

The purpose of this bill is to amend the Adjusted Compensation Act so as to apply to some 2,500 provisional officers under the grade of major who were exempted from the original act.

In the Army there were about 2,250 of these men and in the Marine Corps about 60 or 70 and in the Navy about 200. These men were taken into the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, some from the ranks and some from the training camps, without waiting for their commissions to go through in the regular course.

The committee held extensive hearings on this bill and came to the conclusion that this group was seriously discriminated against in the original adjusted-compensation act, and I may say to the gentleman from New York that there is considerable interest among various Members on both sides of the aisle in this particular bill in their desire to correct this very apparent discrimination against a small group of men who constituted some of the best officers who served the United States during the World War.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE] is very much interested in this bill and made a very able presentation of the matter before the committee. The committee was unanimously convinced that the bill should be reported out, and while I can give an explanation I think the gentleman from Tennessee would make a more thorough explanation because of his profound knowledge of the bill, and I think my friend from New York would be pleased to hear from him, and I know he will assist the gentleman in making up his mind with respect to the measure.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I think this was a very unfair discrimination against this group of service men, and in going over the records in the case I found that when the question was up for consideration before the Ways and Means Committee back in 1922 Gen. P. C. Harris at that time appeared before the committee and used this language:

> It is unfair to a great many men; and while it is true they were in the permanent establishment and in for the period of the war, a great many of them resigned immediately afterward. They went to the training camps and selected the Regular Army, because they thought they would get to France quicker, and then immediately resigned when they returned from France. I think that should be changed to include them.

They were in the same category as the other officers who were accorded the benefits of the adjusted-compensation act. They were in the service for the period of the emergency only and while they held this temporary, provisional commission, I think in a majority of the cases they accepted these provisional commissions because they thought it gave them an opportunity to get to the front earlier, and they never had any intention of remaining in the Regular Establishment and did not remain in the Regular Establishment, and later on for all practical purposes they were in the great category of officers of the National Army, and I hope the gentleman will permit the bill to go through.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object. This is a very meritorious proposition.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I may say to the gentleman that I was a member of the subcommittee that considered this measure, and we heard a number of representatives from veterans' organizations, all of whom were unanimously of the opinion that the enactment of this legislation would correct an injustice that has been done to a small group of very worthy officers in the World War.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I remember very distinctly one morning in training camp the top sergeant yelling out, "All of you fellows who want provisional commissions in the United States Army and want immediately to go overseas, take two paces forward."

About two-thirds of the company did so, and a few of them got commissions. A few of us who were not quite so courageous as the others, but who at that time had the same status, later on were given the advantages of this act. Those who were courageous enough to take the two paces forward and were sent overseas immediately were denied the right to compensation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (b), section 202, of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Any individual holding a permanent or provisional commission or permanent or acting warrant in any branch of the military or naval forces, or (while holding such commission or warrant) serving under a temporary commission in a higher grade—in each case for the period of service under such commission or warrant or in such higher grade after the accrual of the right to pay thereunder. This subdivision shall not apply to any noncommissioned officer, nor to any provisional officer of the Army under the grade of major, who was honorably separated from the military service prior to January 1, 1922: Provided, That applications under this act must be made within 1 year from the date of enactment."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, strike out all of line 12, and on page 2 all of lines 1, 2, and 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "This subdivision shall not apply to any noncommissioned officer nor to any provisional, probationary, or temporary officer of the military or naval forces under the grade of major or lieutenant commander, who was honorably separated from the military or naval service prior to January 1, 1922."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice for the purpose of giving further consideration to the advisability of enacting it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 4618) granting the consent of Congress to the Louisiana Highway Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a free or toll highway bridge, or a railway bridge in combination with a free or toll highway bridge, and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at or near Baton Rouge, La.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Mr. DEROUEN. This is an important bill. It is an extension of the same law that we had, which expired. The State has provided the money. It is a free bridge. The bill was unanimously reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House and has already passed the Senate and is now reported back to the House.

Mr. YOUNG. The title of the bill refers to a free or toll bill.

Mr. DEROUEN. It is a free bridge.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman let me explain the bill? That is usual in all those bills. It is a bill that takes care of all of the railroads west of the Mississippi River. It is the form that has been adopted and used all the way through, but it is a free toll bridge. It is similar to the prior law which expired, and so we are asking to be put back where we were before.

Mr. YOUNG. I offer an amendment to strike out the words "or toll" in the title and in the bill.

Mr. DEROUEN. I accept that amendment, insofar as it applies to the title, and no further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Louisiana Highway Commission, an administrative body created and acting under the constitution and laws of the State of Louisiana, to construct, maintain, and operate a free or toll highway bridge, or a railway bridge in combination with a free or toll highway bridge, and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Baton Rouge, in the State of Louisiana, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to strike out the words "or toll" in the title and in the bill wherever they appear.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. YOUNG: Strike out the words "or toll" wherever they occur in the title or in the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That leaves this bill in a terrible condition. The whole of section 2 has to do with the raising of revenue for the retiring of bonds out of tolls. I think it is a rather poor way to legislate. Frankly, I do not know what the bill will read like if we strike out those two words wherever they occur in the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course, that is a pernicious way to amend any bill, to strike out the words "or toll" wherever they appear. That is no way to amend the bill. The way to handle that situation is to vote down the amendment.

Mr. YOUNG. I agree with the gentleman that that is no way to amend a bill, but I will also say it is no way to legislate, to bring in, during the closing hours of a session of Congress, at a night session, a bill to impose toll bridges upon people traveling upon the highways of this country.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

I appreciate the fight the gentleman is seeking to make, but I wonder if he has understood this. The gentleman's fight has been against privately owned toll bridges. This is not the case. This is a State agency. It is seeking the construction of a bridge that is both a highway bridge and a railroad bridge. Somebody has to pay for it. Of course, the railroads should pay for it. If the gentleman wants to strike out the words "or toll", he should strike them out only as to the highway part of the bridge. I think if the gentleman will consider that this is a publicly owned agency and that they will surely take care of their own people down there, the gentleman could well afford to withdraw his objection and still be consistent with his former position.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I quite agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], that the proper way to handle this situation now would be to vote down the amendment.

May I observe also that we should not always be opposed to toll bridges, merely because they are toll bridges. Frequently bridges would never be built if it were not for the fact that anticipatory bonds are issued against tolls. In about 50 percent of the bills which have passed this Congress in the last 6 years, we have provided that tolls shall be collected and that the bonds shall be retired out of the tolls collected. I have in mind at least a dozen bridges that are today giving service over navigable streams which would not have been built were it not for the fact that tolls were charged. We are following exactly the same principle in the collection of gasoline taxes in the several States.

That tax is collected upon this basis—that those who use the highways shall pay the tax. Toll bridges are constructed upon the same theory. We authorize the construction of toll bridges on the same theory—that the people who use the bridges pay for the bridge—instead of providing that the State shall build the bridge and tax all of the people generally for that purpose. There are occasions, and I think probably this is one of them, in which a toll is justified. This is not a private toll bridge. This is a bridge to be constructed by the Louisiana Highway Commission, a commission authorized by the State Legislature of the State of Louisiana to supervise the construction of bridges and for the retirement of bonds from the revenues collected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT LA CROSSE, WIS.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12843, authorizing the State of Wisconsin to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near La Crosse, La Crosse County, Wis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the bill S. 4680 for the House bill. It is an identical Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the State of Wisconsin be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near La Crosse, La Crosse County, Wis., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 12843) was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS DELAWARE RIVER BETWEEN HANCOCK, N. Y., AND BUCKINGHAM, PA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12850, authorizing the Interstate Bridge Commission of the State of New York and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the West Branch of the Delaware River between a point in the vicinity of the village of Hancock, Delaware County, N. Y., and a point in the town of Buckingham, Wayne County, Pa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate 4710 for consideration at this time, the bill being identical to the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes the Interstate Bridge Commission of the State of New York and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania be, and is hereby, authorized to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the West Branch of the Delaware River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the vicinity of Hancock, Delaware County, N. A similar House bill (H. R. 12850) was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS DELAWARE RIVER, BARRYVILLE, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12851, authorizing the Interstate Bridge Commission of the State of New York and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Delaware River between points in the village of Barryville, Sullivan County, N. Y., and the village of Shohola, Pike County, Pa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute S. 4709 in place of the bill H. R. 12851 for consideration at this time, both bills being identical.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Interstate Bridge Commission of the State of New York and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania be, and is hereby, authorized to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Delaware River between points in the village of Barryville, Sullivan County, N. BRIDGE ACROSS HUDSON RIVER, FIFTY-SEVENTH STREET, NEW YORK

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1645, to provide for the creation of a commission to examine into and report the clear height above the water of the bridge authorized to be constructed over the Hudson River from Fifty-seventh Street, New York, to New Jersey, and for other purposes.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. O'CONNOR. All this bill does is to authorize an investigation of the height of this bridge at Fifty-seventh Street across the Hudson River. It is a matter which has been pending here for years. It would bring into New York all the railroads which serve New York. The only opposition to it is from the New York Central Railroad, and a vice president of the New York Central, named Mr. Dougherty, has been very active, lobbying against this bill.

Everybody in New York who is concerned with the west side of Manhattan along Eleventh Avenue is interested in this bill. It would bring into New York the B. & O., which has no access; the Lackawanna, the Erie, and the Lehigh, which have been denied access to New York City because of this railroad combination and the opposition of years which comes solely from the New York Central.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, answering the gentleman from New York, I may say, quoting from the New York Times of June 3 of this year, that there are other objectors than the New York Central. The New York State Legislature has passed a resolution in opposition to this bill. The New York Chamber of Commerce, the Regional Planning Association, the Fifth Avenue Association, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, and the Department of Commerce are opposed to the bill. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KENNEY. Will not the gentleman further withhold his objection?

Mr. PEYSER. Certainly.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, it seems that the only Member of this House in opposition to the bill is the gentleman from New York [Mr. PEYSER].

Mr. PEYSER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is a minority report on the bill signed by other Members.

Mr. KENNEY. Other New York newspapers have recommended this bridge. The New York Sun has recommended it. The bridge will furnish a terminal in New York for railroads that now have their terminii in New Jersey. It was part of the original plan of the Port of New York Authority. It is vital to the entire Nation that this railroad bridge should be built across the Hudson River.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEY. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The opposition from the New York Legislature and the organizations to which the gentleman referred came years ago, not recently.

Mr. KENNEY. Absolutely. They tried to get the Legislature of the State of New Jersey to memorialize Congress to repeal the charter of the bridge, but the Legislature of New Jersey refused to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SIXTH WORLD'S POULTRY CONGRESS

The Clerk called the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 235) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to expend funds of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration for participation by the United States in the 1936 Sixth World's Poultry Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $25,000, or such sum thereof as may be necessary, may be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture from the unexpended funds of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, with a view to expanding the foreign demand for American-bred poultry through participation in the 1936 Sixth World's Poultry Congress, such funds to be used for staging a live-bird and educational exhibit and for the expenses of delegates of the United States to this conference: Provided, That of this sum a sum of $10,000 is hereby made immediately available for assembling, preparing, and shipping the live-bird exhibit and material showing poultry-husbandry methods followed in the United States: Provided further, That no part of the sum authorized to be expended by this resolution shall be used for the payment of expenses of delegates to such conference other than Government and State agriculture college officials.

SEC. 2. The President is hereby authorized and requested to extend to the World's Poultry Science Association an invitation to hold the Seventh World's Poultry Congress in the United States in 1939, and to extend an invitation to foreign governments to participate in and be represented by delegates and exhibits in such congress.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3841, to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc, That (1) the last three sentences of the second paragraph of subsection (e) of section 77 of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", as amended, are hereby further amended to read as follows: "If the United States of America, or any agency thereof, or any corporation (other than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation) the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States of America, is a creditor or stockholder, the interests or claims thereof shall be deemed to be effected by the plan, and the President of the United States, or any officer or agency he may designate, is hereby authorized to act in respect of the interests or claims of the United States or of such agency or other corporation. The expense of such submission shall be certified by the Commission and shall be borne by the debtor's estate. The Commission shall certify to the judge the results of such submission."

(2) That the first sentence of the third paragraph of said subsection (e) of said section 77 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: Provided further, That if, in any reorganization proceeding under this section, the United States is a creditor on claims for taxes or customs duties (whether or not the United States has any other interest in, or claim against, the debtor, as creditor or stockholder), no plan which does not provide for the payment thereof shall be confirmed by the judge except upon the acceptance, certified to the court, of a lesser amount by the President of the United States or the officer or agency designated by him pursuant to the provisions of the preceding paragraph hereof: Provided further, That if the President of the United States or such officer or agency shall fail to accept or reject such lesser amount for more than 90 days after receipt of written notice so to do from the court, accompanied by a certified copy of the plan, the consent of the United States insofar as its claims for taxes or customs duties are concerned shall be conclusively presumed."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That subsection (e) of section 77 of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', as amended, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"(e) Upon the certification of a plan by the Commission to the court, the court shall give due notice to all parties in interest of the time within which such parties may file with the court their objections to such plan, and such parties shall file, within such time as may be fixed in said notice, detailed and specific objections in writing to the plan and their claims for equitable treatment. The judge shall, after notice in such manner as he may determine to the debtor, its trustee or trustees, stockholders, creditors, and the Commission, hear all parties in interest in support of, and in opposition to, such objections to the plan and such claims for equitable treatment. After such hearing, and without any hearing if no objections are filed, the judge shall approve the plan if satisfied that: (1) It complies with the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, is fair and equitable, affords due recognition to the rights of each class of creditors and stockholders, does not discriminate unfairly in favor of any class of creditors or stockholders, and will conform to the requirements of the law of the land regarding the participation of the various classes of creditors and stockholders; (2) the approximate amounts to be paid by the debtor, or by any corporation or corporations acquiring the debtor's assets, for expenses and fees incident to the reorganization, have been fully disclosed so far as they can be ascertained at the date of such hearing, are reasonable, are within such maximum limits as are fixed by the Commission, and are within such maximum limits to be subject to the approval of the judge; (3) the plan provides for the payment of all costs of administration and all other allowances made or to be made by the judge, except that allowances provided for in subsection (c), paragraph (12) of this section, may be paid in securities provided for in the plan if those entitled thereto will accept such payment, and the judge is hereby given power to approve the same.

"If the judge shall not approve the plan, he shall file an opinion, stating his conclusions and the reason therefor, and he shall enter an order in which he may either dismiss the proceedings, or in his discretion and on motion of any party in interest refer the proceedings back to the Commission for further action, in which event he shall transmit to the Commission a copy of any evidence received. If the proceedings are referred back to the Commission, it shall proceed to a reconsideration of the proceedings under the provisions of subsection (d) hereof. If the judge shall approve the plan, he shall file an opinion, stating his conclusions and the reasons therefor, and enter an order to that effect, and shall send a certified copy of such opinion and order to the Commission. The plan shall then be submitted by the Commission to the creditors of each class whose claims have been filed and allowed in accordance with the requirements of subsection (c) hereof, and to the stockholders of each class, and/or to the committees or other representatives thereof, for acceptance or rejection, within such time as the Commission shall specify, together with the report or reports of the Commission thereon or such a summarization thereof as the Commission may approve, and the opinion and order of the judge: Provided, That submission to any class of stockholders shall not be necessary if the Commission shall have found, and the judge shall have affirmed the finding, (a) that at the time of the finding the corporation is insolvent, or that at the time of the finding the equity of such class of stockholders has no value, or that the plan provides for the payment in cash to such class of stockholders of an amount not less than the value of their equity, if any, or (b) that the interests of such class of stockholders will not be adversely and materially affected by the plan, or (c) that the debtor has pursuant to authorized corporate action accepted the plan and its stockholders are bound by such acceptance: Provided further, That submission to any class of creditors shall not be necessary if the Commission shall have found, and the judge shall have affirmed the finding, that the interests of such class of creditors will not be adversely and materially affected by the plan, or that at the time of the finding the interests of such class of creditors have no value, or that the plan provides for the payment in cash to such class of creditors of an amount not less than the value of their interests. For the purpose of this section the acceptance or rejection by any creditor or stockholder shall be in writing, executed by him or by his duly authorized attorney, committee, or representative. If the United States of America, or any agency thereof, or any corporation (other than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation) the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States of America is a creditor or stockholder, the interests or claims thereof shall be deemed to be affected by the plan and the President of the United States, or any officer he may designate is hereby authorized to act in respect of the interests or claims of the United States or of such agency or other corporation. The expense of such submission shall be certified by the Commission and shall be borne by the debtor's estate. The Commission shall certify to the judge the results of such submission.

"Upon receipt of such certification, the judge shall confirm the plan if satisfied that it has been accepted by or on behalf of creditors of each class to which submission is required under this subsection holding more than two-thirds in amount of the total of the allowed claims of such class which have been reported in said submission as voting on said plan, and by or on behalf of stockholders of each class to which submission is required under this subsection holding more than two-thirds of the stock of such class which has been reported in said submission as voting on said plan; and that such acceptances have not been made or procured by any means forbidden by law: Provided, That, if the plan has not been so accepted by the creditors and stockholders, the judge may nevertheless confirm the plan if he is satisfied and finds, after hearing, that it makes adequate provision for fair and equitable treatment for the interests or claims of those rejecting it; that such rejection is not reasonably justified in the light of the respective rights and interests of those rejecting it and all the relevant facts; and that the plan conforms to the requirements of clauses (1) to (3), inclusive, of the first paragraph of this subsection (e): Provided further, That if, in any reorganization proceeding under this section, the United States is a creditor on claims for taxes or customs duties (whether or not the United States has any other interest in, or claim against, the debtor, as creditor or stockholder), no plan which does not provide for the payment thereof shall be confirmed by the judge except upon the acceptance, certified to the court, of a lesser amount by the President of the United States or the officer or agency designated by him pursuant to the provisions of the preceding paragraph hereof: Provided further, That if the President of the United States or such officer or agency shall fail to accept or reject such lesser amount for more than 90 days after receipt of written notice so to do from the court, accompanied by a certified copy of the plan, the consent of the United States insofar as its claims for taxes or customs duties are concerned shall be conclusively presumed. If the judge shall confirm the plan, he shall enter an order and file an opinion with a statement of his conclusions and his reasons therefor. If the judge shall not confirm the plan, he shall file an opinion, with a statement of his conclusions and his reasons therefor, and enter an order in which he shall either dismiss the proceedings, or, in his discretion and on the motion of any party in interest, refer the case back to the Commission for further proceedings, including the consideration of modifications of the plan or the proposed new plans. In the event of such a reference back to the Commission, the proceedings with respect to any modified or new plan shall be governed by the provisions of this section in like manner as in an original proceeding hereunder.

"If it shall be necessary to determine the value of any property for any purpose under this section, the Commission shall determine such value and certify the same to the court in its report on the plan. The value of any property used in railroad operation shall be determined on a basis which will give due consideration to the earning power of the property, past, present, and prospective, and all other relevant facts. In determining such value only such effect shall be given to the present cost of reproduction new and less depreciation and original cost of the property, and the actual investment therein, as may be required under the law of the land, in light of its earning power and all other relevant facts."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to set aside not to exceed 175,200 acres, or so much thereof as he may deem advisable, of the public-domain lands in townships 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 north, ranges 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 east, Mount Diablo meridian, Nevada, as an addition to the Walker River Indian Reservation: Provided, That the said withdrawal shall not affect any valid rights initiated prior to the approval hereof: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall arrange, either by the maintenance of existing stock driveways or otherwise, to permit stock owned by others than Indians to cross the reservation at designated points. ACCEPTANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN THE CITY OF SAN DIEGO, CALIF.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12328, to authorize the acceptance of certain lands in the city of San Diego, Calif., by the United States and the transfer by the Secretary of the Navy of certain other lands to said city of San Diego.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is this bill all about?

Mr. BURNHAM. I may say to the gentleman this bill provides for the exchange of lands by the United States and the city of San Diego. The Federal Government transfers to the city of San Diego some 60 acres of submerged land adjoining the municipal airport which the city of San Diego originally gave to the Government a few years ago. In consideration of this the city of San Diego deeds to the Navy Department of the Federal Government 5 acres adjoining the marine base and 544 acres just back of La Jolla, fine land, which is being used as a rifle range, and it is very urgently needed by the Navy Department. They are very anxious that this bill be passed.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized on behalf of the United States to accept from the city of San Diego, Calif., free from all encumbrances and without cost to the United States, all right, title, and interest in and to the lands contained with the following-described area: Beginning at the intersection of the southeasterly line of Harasthy Street with the mean high-tide line of the bay of San Diego, as said mean high-tide line was established by that certain superior court action no. 35473; thence southwesterly along the southwesterly prolongation of the southeasterly line of Harasthy Street a distance of 159.66 feet to an intersection with the northeasterly Marine Base boundary line; thence north 60°34'59" west along the said Marine Base boundary line a distance of 1929.11 feet to its intersection with the said mean high-tide line of the bay of San Diego; thence in a general southeasterly direction, following along the said mean high-tide line to the point or place of beginning, containing 5.2474 acres of land; also approximately 544 acres of pueblo lands, owned by the city of San Diego more particularly described as follows: The easterly half of pueblo lot of 1300; all of pueblo lot 1309; all of pueblo lot 1310; all of that portion of pueblo lot 1311 lying easterly of Pacific Highway and southerly of Miramar Road; all of that portion of pueblo lot 1314 lying southerly of Miramar Road; all of that portion of pueblo lot 1315 lying southerly of Miramar Road; all of that portion of the westerly half of pueblo lot 1316 lying southerly of Miramar Road; said pueblo lands being according to the map thereof made by James Pascoe in 1870, a certified copy of which map is filed as miscellaneous map no. 36 in the office of the county recorder of San Diego County, Calif.; said lands being desired by the Navy Department for national defense, and particularly for the purpose of establishing and maintaining thereon a rifle range, together with barracks and other structures incident thereto.

The said Secretary of the Navy is also authorized hereby to transfer to the city of San Diego, Calif., free from all encumbrances and without cost to said city of San Diego, all rights, title, and interest of the United States in and to the lands contained within that part of the Marine Corps Base, San Diego, Calif., containing 60.1605 acres, more particularly described as follows: Beginning at the point of intersection of the southwesterly prolongation of the northwesterly line of Bean Street with the combined United States pierhead and bulkhead line, as said combined United States pierhead and bulkhead line was established in 1928; thence north 83° west, a distance of 729.62 feet along the said combined pierhead and bulkhead line to an intersection with the southwesterly prolongation of the southeasterly line of Harasthy Street; thence north 28°49'40" east along the southwesterly prolongation of the southeasterly line of Harasthy Street, a distance of 4,008.27 feet to an intersection with the existing Marine Base boundary line; thence south 60°34'59" east along the said Marine Base boundary line, a distance of 677.88 feet to an intersection with the southwesterly prolongation of the northwesterly line of Bean Street; thence south 28°50'10" west along the southwesterly prolongation of the northwesterly line of Bean Street, a distance of 3,730.02 feet to the point or place of beginning, containing 60.1605 acres of bay area.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ENTRY UNDER BOND OF EXHIBITS OF ARTS, SCIENCES, AND INDUSTRIES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 11767) to provide for the entry under bond of exhibits of arts, sciences, and industries, and products of the soil, mine, and sea, and all other exhibits for exposition purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have had several bills of this nature up for consideration which specifically authorized the entry of these products for exposition purposes. If I understand the present bill correctly, it is a sort of blanket bill which takes in all of these expositions so that henceforth it will not be necessary to give specific authorization for each exposition.

Mr. CELLER. It is limited, of course, to the New York Port Authority. The New York Port Authority, as is known, is an entity set up by State compact between the States of New Jersey and New York with Government approval, the Government having approved the setting up of this port authority. This remains in the building of the port authority, and the exhibitions are to be conducted in the interest of the commerce of the two States. Every safeguard is thrown around the exhibition so as to prevent any miscarriage by way of goods entering without the proper payment of duty.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the products of the exposition in Arkansas and the exposition in Texas come in through the port of New York they would come under this act?

Mr. CELLER. No. This refers only to the New York Port Authority building and is limited exclusively to that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have no objection, and I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 3843, an identical bill, be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That as used in this act:

(a) The term "exhibition" means any permanent exhibition or exhibitions, expositions, fairs, or any temporary exhibition or exhibitions, expositions or fairs of the arts, sciences, and industries, or of the products of the soil, mine, and sea, or of any hobby, or other like pursuits.

(b) The "Port Authority" means the Port of New York Authority, a municipal corporate instrumentality organized pursuant to a compact entered into on April 30, 1921, between the States of New York and New Jersey, and consented to by the Congress of the United States (ch. 77, U. S. Stat. L., vol. 42, pt. I, p. 174), and designated as the municipal corporate instrumentality of the said States for the purpose of effectuating said compact.

SEC. 2. All articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibit or display at an exhibition to be held at any time and from time to time by the Port Authority or by its tenants or licensees in the building known as the Port Authority Commerce Building, located on the block bounded by Eighth and Ninth Avenues, Fifteenth and Sixteenth Streets, Borough of Manhattan, city and State of New York, upon which articles there shall be a tariff, or customs duty, shall be admitted free of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: but it shall be lawful, at any time during or at the close of any exhibition, exposition, or fair held pursuant to this act to sell for delivery at the close thereof any goods or property imported for and actually displayed at such exhibition, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when sold or withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their withdrawal and to the requirements of the tariff laws in effect at such date: Provided further, That the Port Authority shall be deemed, for customs purposes only, to be the sole consignee of all merchandise imported under the provisions of this act, and that the actual and necessary customs charges for labor, services, and other expenses in connection with the entry, examination, appraisement, release, or custody, together with the necessary charges for salaries of customs officers and employees in connection with the supervision, custody of, and accounting for articles imported under the provisions of this act, shall be reimbursed by the Port Authority to the Government of the United States under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that receipts from such reimbursements shall be deposited as refunds to the appropriation from which paid, in the manner provided for in section 524, Tariff Act of 1930: Provided further, That all such articles shall, at the expiration of 2 years, be subject to the import duty then in force, unless the same shall have been sold or exported from this country prior to that time: And provided further, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as an invitation, express or implied, from the Government of the United States to any foreign government, State, municipality, corporation, partnership, or individual to import any articles for the purpose of exhibition at the said exhibitions.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 11767) was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZATION OF SECRETARY OF WAR TO LEND WAR DEPARTMENT EQUIPMENT FOR USE AT THE EIGHTEENTH NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE AMERICAN LEGION AT CLEVELAND, OHIO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11075, to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use at the Eighteenth National Convention of the American Legion at Cleveland, Ohio, during the month of September 1936.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 3997, an identical bill, be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to lend, at his discretion, to the American Legion 1936 Convention Corporation, for use at the Eighteenth National Convention of the American Legion to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, in the month of September 1936, such tents, cots, and blankets, and other available stock out of the Army and National Guard supplies as such corporation may require to house properly Legionnaires attending such convention: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of such property, the same to be delivered at such time prior to the holding of such convention as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the American Legion 1936 Convention Corporation: Provided further, That the Secretary of War, before delivering such property, shall take from such corporation a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of such property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 11075) was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZATION OF ACQUISITION OF LANDS IN THE VICINITY OF JACKSONVILLE, FLA., AS A SITE FOR A NAVAL AIR STATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11501, to authorize the acquisition of lands in the vicinity of Jacksonville, Fla., as a site for a naval air station and to authorize the construction and installation of a naval air station thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire the estimated cost of the authorization carried in this bill?

Mr. SEARS. This bill does not carry an appropriation of one single dollar. The city of Jacksonville gives to the Government 1,400 acres of land, and if it is not used by the Government in 5 years this land reverts back to the city.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Along with the authority to acquire the land it authorizes the installation of a naval air station there. What will the naval air station cost?

Mr. SEARS. It will not cost a thing unless approved by Congress.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I know that.

Mr. SEARS. Usually they put in there $5,000,000 or more shall be spent, but nothing can be spent on this unless the Congress authorizes the expenditure.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Of course, I know that an appropriation will have to be passed including this money.

Mr. SEARS. I doubt if it will cost anything.

Mr. UMSTEAD. May I ask the gentleman from Florida if this is not an authorization for the establishment of another naval air base in the State of Florida?

Mr. SEARS. Only if the Navy Department authorizes it.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Has the Navy Department approved this site as a proper one for the location of a Navy air station?

Mr. SEARS. I may say this was unanimously reported by the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Has it been approved by the Navy Department?

Mr. SEARS. It has not been approved directly by the Navy Department. I hope my colleague will not object.

Mr. UMSTEAD. In view of the statement just made by the gentleman, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

COAST GUARD STATION ON LAKE ST. CLAIR, MICH.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12494, to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station on Lake St. Clair, Mich.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to establish a Coast Guard station on Lake St. Clair, Mich., at such point as the Commandant of the Coast Guard may recommend.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, the establishment of a Coast Guard station on Lake St. Clair, Mich., has not only the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury but also such legislation is in accord with the program of the President.

A distance of 25 miles spaces the nearest temporary Coast Guard station at Trenton, Mich. Detroit, with a population of 1,750,000, is second only in size as a Great Lake city to that of Chicago, which latter city has three life-saving stations, while Buffalo and Cleveland each have one.

Adjoining Detroit to the east are the four beautiful residential villages of Grosse Pointe, Park City, Farms, and Shores, which, together with the village of St. Clair Shores, have a combined lake-shore line of 15 miles. The United States customs office indicate a boat registration out of Detroit and this aforesaid district in the neighborhood of 15,000, and the necessity for such a station is readily apparent.

The Detroit River and Lake St. Clair are a recreational center for lovers of water sports, and the records of drownings since 1931 are in excess of 60 persons. The passage of this legislation will be most deeply appreciated by the people of the fourth largest city in the Nation.

GENERAL PULASKI'S MEMORIAL DAY

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 114 directing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Joint Resolution 187, which is similar to the House joint resolution, be substituted for the House joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 187

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and directed to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all governmental buildings on October 11, 1936, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies in commemoration of the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 114) was laid on the table.

GEN. CASIMIR PULASKI AND OTHER POLISH PATRIOTS WHO FOUGHT FOR AMERICA

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, the pages of American history are replete with the names of illustrious patriots of Polish extraction who came to the New World and joined in the struggle for the development of a new and picturesque nation.

Capt. John Smith, who founded the early English colony at Jamestown, Va., recorded that of his group the most courageous and the hardest working were the Poles. The Dutch, who colonized Manhattan in 1659, brought a young Polish schoolmaster to teach their children. Intelligent, resourceful, diligent, the Polish immigrants in the early days of our country played a definite part in promoting the civilization which we enjoy today.

The Polish stock honored their nationality and served their adopted country with distinction during the Revolutionary War, when the independence of the Thirteen Original Colonies was at stake. The same patriotic fighting blood that raced through the veins of the revolutionary heroes flowed with equal vigor in the veins of their relatives in the wars to follow in which the United States found itself engaged. Americanism of the unselfish, sacrificing, uncompromising strain has been exemplified in Polish heroes in every war of this Republic. This is a nation explored and civilized by and constituted of foreigners. Into this "melting pot" of humanity came no sturdier element than the Polish people. Their contributions to Americanism are legion. The ancestors of living American Poles earned through valor and determination their enviable place in our history. Their names are enshrined in the hearts of those who love their country, for they were fighting men who fought not for personal glory but to achieve for their fellow men and for future Americans the establishment of a new and better Republic, where national animosity would cease to exist and where individual opportunity and freedom would be manifest.

GEN. CASIMIR PULASKI

The impressiveness of the contributions made to America by the early Polish patriots is often brought into just prominence. Particularly, however, this Government has been setting aside one especial day, this year October 11, on which we honor the memory of Gen. Casimir Pulaski, who, by virtue of a magnificent military career in the War for Independence, seems to lead the lists of the hundreds of his fellow Poles who have distinguished themselves for extraordinary leadership.

Congress approves a special resolution this year directing the President to proclaim October 11 as a memorial day commemorating the life and the military achievements of General Pulaski.

Count Casimir Pulaski was born in Poland in 1747. He was in his early twenties when his native country was beset by three great European nations who were determined to seize Poland and divide it among themselves. Young Pulaski, already well schooled in military affairs, joined his father, who was a chief magistrate and a member of the nobility, and his two brothers in the war for Poland's independence. Upon the death of his father and one brother and the capture by the enemy of the second, he became commander of the insurgent army. The odds were unconquerable, however, and with the war lost and Poland partitioned, the youthful commander became an outlaw and sought refuge in France. It was there he met Benjamin Franklin, who spun for him the tale of a new country with all that it promised in glamour, adventure, and opportunity, and who described the struggle for independence being made by the colonists. Pulaski needed slight encouragement for his sympathies, for the oppressed and the struggling were inherent. He arrived in 1777 and joined the American forces as a volunteer.

Pulaski and Lafayette fought their first American battle together at Brandywine—Pulaski as a volunteer without command; Lafayette as a general. With General Washington's forces being steadily repulsed, Pulaski asked for 30 horses and 30 men. With this small detachment he rode into the face of the British and saved the day. Four days later Washington appointed him the first general of American Cavalry.

General Pulaski's legion made American history and contributed mightily to the winning of the Revolution. He is known as the father of the American Cavalry. He fought in the thick of the battle at the head of his men, inspired with the cause of American liberty.

On October 11, 1779, General Pulaski's body was lowered to a watery grave after he had succumbed to a bullet wound suffered at the siege of Savannah. He died on the brig Wasp after medical attention failed to rally his courageous body. He fought 2 brilliant years for this Nation, and he died at the age of 31. But no American can forget the service he rendered nor the qualities he represented in true patriotic zeal.

From birth to death, Casimir Pulaski fought for the right of liberty and independence. He rebelled against dictatorial authority. He characterized unrelenting patriotism. It is fitting that Congress recognize the service he rendered, and none of us can afford to forget the principles for which he fought and died.

GEN. THADDEUS KOSCIUSKO

Even the briefest review of famous Polish military figures in American history would be woefully incomplete without the mention of Gen. Thaddeus Kosciusko, who fought for 6 long years with the colonists' forces in wresting independence from England.

Unlike Pulaski, who fought colorfully in the midst of battle, Kosciusko primarily contributed strategy and engineering skill. At Washington's direction, he laid the plans of battle and the fortifications for the war in the North during the early years of the conflict. His defense along the Hudson and the victory at Saratoga marked the turning point of the war. Upon Burgoyne's defeat, the colonists took new courage and with Kosciusko's cunning and brilliance in maneuvers, the road to victory became apparent. Before the war ended he left for the South, where he fought as a soldier as well as an engineer. In 1782 he led his forces in conquering Charleston, S. C. Shortly thereafter he returned to Europe, where he aided his countrymen in fighting their enemies—Russia and Prussia. He was imprisoned by the Czar, but 2 years later released. Following his release, he came again to America, where he was received with great honor. Congress then belatedly awarded him a pension and properly acclaimed his services during the Revolution.

Thaddeus Kosciusko was born in Poland and came to America for the express purpose of converting his military genius and engineering skill to the advantage of the colonists. Inbred in his courageous nature was the love of liberty and the persistent opposition to all that savored of tryanny. America's fight became his personal fight, for here were another people like his own for generations past, struggling to be self-contained and self-governed.

Kosciusko died in Europe under less dramatic circumstances than Pulaski, but like his fellow countryman, he fought a hard fight for a good cause. His name long will be revered.

OTHER POLISH MILITARY LEADERS IN AMERICA

While Pulaski and Kosciusko head the list of Polish patriots who fought in the American cause, Poland gave scores of other notable soldiers who deserve to be remembered for their courage in battle and in many cases for their very lives sacrificed that this Nation might be established.

Capt. Joseph Baldeski served as an original member of Pulaski's Legion, where he acquitted himself creditably. He likewise served as a paymaster during the Revolution.

Maurice August Beniowski likewise joined Pulaski's forces, although only shortly before the general's unfortunate death.

The names of Polish military figures dot the entire history of the Revolutionary War: Col. Michael Kowacz, Lieutenant Colonel Botzen, Maj. John Jolereski, M. Kotkowski, Maciej Rogowski, John Zielinski, John K. Mieszkowski, Lt. August Krystyn, Lt. George Elholm, Michael Grabowski, George Uzdowski, Corp. Robert Pesko, Sgt. Donder Rozanowski, Capt. Andrew Malick, Sgt. Simon Balyca, Capt. Peter Bakut, Lt. Joseph Dolo, and Joseph Gabriel are included among the Army's courageous. In the Navy during the Revolution, the records reveal an abundance of Polish-born sea fighters, such as Felix Miklaszewicz and Samuel Hrabowski.

During the Civil War 5,000 Poles participated. This represented about one-sixth of the Polish population in the United States. Four thousand fought with the Union forces, but on both sides is recorded the exceptional valor of the Polish soldiers. Capt. Konstanty Bledowski was the first Union man to fall in line of battle. Gen. Wlodzimierz Krzyzanowski advanced from the ranks to his high position and fought in the Battles of Bull Run and Chancellorsville and with General Meade at Gettysburg. He is credited with stopping Gen. Stonewall Jackson and is undoubtedly the outstanding Polish hero of the Civil War. Other Poles who distinguished themselves in that bloody conflict were Cavalry Capt. Joseph Karge, Capt. Alexander Bielaski, Capt. Joseph Gloskowski, Lt. Julius S. Krzywoszynski, Capt. W. Kossak, Col. George Sokalski, Capt. Louis Zychlinski, Capt. Maurice Kraszynski, and Adj. Wladyslaw Leski, all of whom served with the Union forces. With the Confederacy fought Gen. Kaspar Tochmann, Col. Vincent Sulakowski, Capt. Peter K. Stankiewicz, Capt. Leon Jastrzembski, Col. Arthur Grabowski, and many others.

Forty thousand Poles fought with the American doughboys in France during the World War. To recount the Polish heroes of that war would fill volumes.

There are today approximately 4,000,000 Poles in America. Their forbears helped to settle America, fought for America, and died with honor on the battlefields of a new and great nation. The blood of many nationalities has been shed upon this land, but none has more nobly and unselfishly been given than that of the great Polish patriots.

EMPLOYMENT IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 612, for the purpose of increasing and financing employment in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I feel obliged to object.

YAKIMA INDIAN RESERVATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11800, to reimpose a trust on certain lands allotted on the Yakima Indian Reservation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby imposed on the lands allotted on the Yakima Indian Reservation on which the trust expired December 17, 1928, a trust for a period of 10 years from the date of enactment of this act, but otherwise on the same terms and conditions and subject to the same provisions and limitations as that which so expired.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the period of trust on lands patented to Indians of the Yakima Reservation, Wash., upon which the said trust was inadvertently permitted to expire December 17, 1928, or at any other time prior to the approval of this act, is hereby reimposed and extended to July 9, 1942: Provided, That further extension of the period of trust may be made by the President, in his discretion, as provided by section 5 of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L. 388), and the act of June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L. 326)."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRODUCTION TAX ON LEAD AND ZINC

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11221, to amend the last two provisos, section 26, act of Congress approved March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1225–1248).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last two provisos in section 26 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1225–1248), be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows: "That the State of Oklahoma is authorized, from and after the passage of this amendment, to levy and collect a gross production tax upon all lead and zinc produced on said lands in an amount not to exceed the present rate of three-fourths of 1 percent on the gross value thereof. In accordance with the uniform policy of the United States Government to hold the lands of the Quapaw Indians while restricted and the income therefrom free from taxation of whatsoever nature, except as said immunity is expressly waived, and, in pursuance of said fixed policy, it is herein expressly provided that the waiver of tax immunity herein provided shall be in lieu of all other taxes of whatsoever nature on said restricted lands or the income therefrom, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be paid out of the individual Indian funds held under his supervision, belonging to the Indian owner of the land, the gross production tax so assessed against the royalty interests of the respective Indian owner in an amount not to exceed the rate hereinabove set forth: Provided, however, That such tax shall not become a lien or charge of any kind or character against the land or other property of said Indian owner."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 7, after the word "other", insert the word "State".

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3784, to extend the benefits of the Adams Act, the Purnell Act, and the Capper-Ketcham Act to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following acts, to wit, an act entitled "An act to provide for an increased annual appropriation for agriculture experiment stations and regulating the expenditure thereof", approved March 16, 1906, and known as the Adams Act; an act entitled "An act to authorize the more complete endowment of agricultural experiment stations, and for other purposes", approved February 24, 1925, and known as the Purnell Act; and an act entitled "An act to provide for the further development of agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefit of the act entitled 'An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts', approved July 2, 1862, and all acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture", approved May 22, 1928, and known as the Capper-Ketcham Act, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the Territory of Alaska.

SEC. 2. To carry into effect the above provisions for extending to the Territory of Alaska to the extent herein provided the benefits of the said Adams Act and the said Purnell Act, the following sums are hereby authorized to be appropriated: For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, $5,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, $7,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, $10,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, $12,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, $15,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, $17,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, $20,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, $22,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945, $27,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, $32,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, $37,500; and thereafter a sum equal to one-half of that provided for each State and Territory under the said Adams Act and the said Purnell Act: Provided, That no appropriations shall be made under this act until annually estimated as to funds and amounts by the Secretary of Agriculture, the estimates to be based upon his determination of the ability of the Territory of Alaska to make effective use of the funds in maintaining agricultural experiment stations.

SEC. 3. To carry into effect the above provisions for extending to the Territory of Alaska, to the extent herein provided, the benefits of the said Capper-Ketcham Act the following sums are hereby authorized to be appropriated: For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, $2,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, $5,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, $7,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and annually thereafter, $10,000: Provided, That no appropriations shall be made under this act until annually estimated as to funds and amounts by the Secretary of Agriculture, the estimates to be based upon his determination of the ability of the Territory of Alaska to make effective use of the funds: And provided further, That whereas the said Capper-Ketcham Act provides that "at least 80 percent of all appropriations under this act shall be utilized for the payment of salaries of extension agents in counties of the several States to further develop the cooperative extension system in agriculture and home economics with men, women, boys, and girls", the several established judicial divisions of the Territory of Alaska, as the same shall exist from time to time, shall be considered as counties for the purpose of complying with the provisions of this act until a subdivision of the Territory of Alaska into counties is effected.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COAT OF ARMS OF SWISS CONFEDERATION

The Clerk called the bill (S. 4667) to prohibit the commercial use of the coat of arms of the Swiss Confederation pursuant to the obligation of the Government of the United States under article 28 of the Red Cross Convention, signed at Geneva July 27, 1929.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, incorporated or unincorporated company, or association within the jurisdiction of the United States to use, whether as a trade mark, commercial label, or portion thereof, or as an advertisement or insignia for any business or organization or for any trade or commercial purpose, the coat of arms of the Swiss Confederation, consisting of an upright white cross with equal arms and lines on a red ground, or any simulation thereof: Provided, That no person, corporation, or association that actually used or whose assignors actually used a design or insignia identical with or similar to that described herein for any lawful purpose for 10 years next preceding the effective date of this act shall be deemed forbidden to continue the use thereof for the same purpose.

CANAL ACROSS FLORIDA

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, it is expected that the House will on tomorrow or Wednesday vote on the conference report on the deficiency bill. In this item will probably be included a vote to appoint a special board to make further examination of the canal across Florida. The Senate added an amendment to the deficiency bill which authorizes the President to appoint a special board of disinterested engineers to further examine and report on the project. If the report is favorable, then the President is authorized to make expenditures of relief funds, not to exceed $10,000,000, to carry on the work on the Florida canal.

The President began the Florida ship canal because he undoubtedly believed it to be a great project, justified on all grounds. It was recommended to him by a special board comprising both Army engineers and engineers of the Public Works Administration. The project is sound and is worthy in itself of your support.

Great progress is being made by the Board of Army Engineers on this project. About $6,000,000 has been allocated and expended from relief funds on it. You will find in the Speaker's lobby adjacent to the House floor several photographs and drawings clearly showing the great achievement which is being made by the Army engineers in the prosecution of this great project. I invite your attention to these pictures and drawings and urge each of you to study them before the vote is taken.

When completed one ship every 48 minutes throughout the year will pass through the canal. Average transit per year will be 11,000 ships. Dead-weight tonnage per year will be 90,000,000. Average saving per voyage: (a) Coastwise, 2 days; (b) foreign, one-third day. Only ships which would use the Canal are considered and indicated. This traffic is approximately twice the traffic of the Suez Canal and one and one-third times the traffic of the Panama Canal. The great benefits to all America are obvious.

I introduced the survey bills which began the project, and have labored earnestly for it during the 12 years which I have served here. The more I learn of it, the more I am convinced that it is the most important project before the American people today, and will carry lasting benefits to the citizens of every State in the Union. The benefits which will accrue from it to the American people exceed by far the $125,000,000 or $130,000,000 which will be required to complete it.

The canal will be completed. It is my purpose to discuss it at greater length when the amendment reaches the floor of the House; therefore, I shall not take much of your time today.

PROTECTION OF INDUSTRIAL PROPERTY

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill H. R. 5806, to effectuate certain provisions of the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, as revised at The Hague on November 6, 1925, Calendar No. 900, was passed this evening and at the same time immediate consideration of the bill S. 1795, a similar Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill H. R. 5806 was passed and to substitute therefor the bill S. 1795, a similar Senate bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4887 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 32) be amended to read as follows:

"No person otherwise entitled thereto shall be debarred from receiving a patent for his invention or discovery, nor shall any patent be declared invalid by reason of its having been first patented or caused to be patented by the inventor or his legal representatives or assigns in a foreign country, unless the application for said foreign patent was filed more than 12 months, in cases within the provisions of section 4886 of the Revised Statutes, and 6 months in cases of designs, prior to the filing of the application in this country, in which case no patent shall be granted in this country.

"An application for patent for an invention or discovery or for a design filed in this country by any person who has previously regularly filed an application for a patent for the same invention, discovery, or design in a foreign country which, by treaty, convention, or law, affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States shall have the same force and effect as the same application would have if filed in this country on the date on which the application for patent for the same invention, discovery, or design was first filed in such foreign country: Provided, That the application in this country is filed within 12 months in cases within the provisions of section 4886 of the Revised Statutes, and within 6 months in cases of designs, from the earliest date on which any such foreign application was filed. But no patent shall be granted on an application for patent for an invention or discovery or a design which had been patented or described in a printed publication in this or any foreign country more than 2 years before the date of the actual filing of the application in this country, or which had been in public use or on sale in this country for more than 2 years prior to such filing."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

INTEREST PAYMENT ON AMERICAN EMBASSY DRAFTS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 879, S. 1896, to provide for the interest payments on American Embassy drafts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BOEHNE, for 3 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. DEEN, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts, indefinitely, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

JO BYRNS—A FRIEND OF MAN

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, there is an indefinable loneliness about this historic chamber these days. Those of us who have sat here day after day through the rigors of winter and the heat of summer attending to the duties of legislation are stunned and saddened by a poignant realization that one around whom all of our affections were entwined has suddenly gone away, leaving a tremendous vacuum. The House of Representatives plods wearily on, but its dramatis personae has been weakened by the loss of its principal actor. The House in action nowadays is like the play of Hamlet, with Hamlet omitted.

As a member of the press gallery and a Representative in the Congress it was my good fortune to know Jo BYRNS for 28 years. Our acquaintanceship began when he first entered Congress and it developed into the warmest affection. Soon after I became a Member of the House I learned that with characteristic devotion he was reaching out to find ways to help me.

When the committees were reorganized at the beginning of my second term he conferred with Speaker John N. Garner in regard to my committee assignment. When I heard that such a conference was taking place I knew I was "in the hands of my friends", to use a trite political phrase. The outcome was that he found an opening for me on the great Committee on Appropriations and, to make my cup of happiness full and overflowing, he placed me on the subcommittee of which he himself was chairman—the one having jurisdiction over appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments.

When he informed me that I had been selected to go on the Appropriations Committee and on his own subcommittee (of which I have since become chairman by operation of the law of seniority) I responded with a sincere, though, I fear, somewhat profuse expression of my gratitude, closing with the statement:

I want you to know how much I appreciate the opportunity to serve under you on your great committee.

He stopped me, very gently—

You are not going to serve under me.

He said—

You are going to serve with me. We are all equals on this committee.

It seemed to me that was about the finest exhibition of noblesse oblige I had ever known, and it was so genuinely characteristic of Mr. BYRNS. He was singularly gifted with the common touch. Not only did his heart beat in rhythm with the heartbeats of 125,000,000 people but, as we look backward in intimate perspective on the life of this good man, we cannot fail to be impressed how kind and thoughtful he always was in trying to be of service to Members of this House. Some Speakers have been called czars. He was not a czar but a comrade. It seems to me that he was a sort of father confessor to all of us. We could go to him with our little personal problems and he was always sympathetically interested. He had the welfare of every one of us on his mind and heart, and that gripped us to him with hoops of steel. It was as if at yonder rostrum, where he presided, there was always spread a feast of love and the invitation was—

Whosoever will, may come.

His attachments knew no dividing "center aisle." Republicans as well as Democrats enjoyed the warmth of his true affection. I do not think he had an enemy on earth. Unlike other Speakers, he had the peculiar gift of being able to quell partisan ebullitions without leaving a sting. All of us have seen this trait exemplified time and time again. Mr. RICH, the good, honest, hard-fisted, forthright, fighting gentleman from Pennsylvania would jump to his feet, let us say during consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

"For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania arise?" the Speaker would inquire.

I arise to ask the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, the majority leader, whether Jim Farley can tell us where we are going to get the money to pay all these bills.

By the time he reached the phrase "where we are going to get the money" the voice of the gentleman from Pennsylvania would mount to high crescendo. Mr. BANKHEAD, the Democratic leader, not being able to read Jim Farley's mind, especially at long range, would observe discreet silence and let the Speaker handle the situation.

The Speaker would bring down his gavel with a bang that would wake up all the babies in the galleries and would dispose of Mr. RICH in summary order by saying with determination:

The gentleman is not recognized for that purpose. The gentleman will take his seat.

The unrecognized but triumphant Mr. RICH would take his seat, having got in his shot without recognition. Likely as not the two would be seen later in the lobby with the Speaker's arm around his militant friend from Pennsylvania, for, despite their political differences, Mr. RICH was his friend, holding him in the highest respect. And so, too, was BERT SNELL the Speaker's friend, and JOHN TABER and ALLEN TREADWAY and JOHN ROBSION and JOE MARTIN and CARL MAPES, and all the other big men on the Republican side of the chamber. They knew Speaker BYRNS as a real man, with a great big heart, and were glad and proud to be included in his encircling friendship.

I believe the last person to be received by Speaker BYRNS was a constituent of mine—Rev. Carleton W. Atwater, pastor of the great congregation of the First Baptist Church of Indianapolis. I shall never forget that visit. On the afternoon of the day the Speaker died the distinguished minister, on a flying trip to Washington, called at my office and some unexplainable urge prompted me to suggest that we go over to the Speaker's office to pay our respects to Mr. BYRNS.

A cheery "Come over" was the response I received over the telephone, and soon we found ourselves being entertained by Speaker and Mrs. Byrns at the Speaker's private office, just off of the Capitol rotunda. The Speaker and Mr. Atwater talked for a long time, and very pleasantly, about religious matters and with special reference to a mutual acquaintance, Dr. W. F. Powell, a Baptist minister of Nashville, to whom the Speaker referred in terms of genuine affection. If we could have known at that moment that within 72 hours Dr. Powell would be preaching Mr. BYRNS' funeral sermon, how shocked we would have been.

Suddenly during the conversation the Speaker took my hand and said to the minister from my home city:

I want you to know that I love your Congressman.

When finally he escorted us to the door he was still holding my hand. We went from the Speaker's office straightway to the Senate Chamber and as we passed the huge grandfather clock that stands like a sentinel at the entrance of the Senate wing I noticed that the hands pointed to 4:30. An hour later the Speaker was fatally stricken at his apartment in the Mayflower Hotel.

I cannot bring myself to a realization that Jo BYRNS is dead. Rather does it seem to me that the beautiful verse of our Hoosier poet, James Whitcomb Riley, applies with special appropriateness to our friend who has gone before us:

I cannot say and I will not say that he is dead—he is just away;
With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand, he has vanished into an unknown land.

His call from Earth to the higher and better life was tragically sudden, but for one of such nobility of character whose days were crowded with good deeds, as his had been, it was a beautiful way to die. He did not need any time to wrap the draperies of his spirit about him before he entered the presence of the Great King. May the Lord temper our grief and give us vision to see the stars shine through our cypress trees. Good-bye, old friend. Our simple faith tells us that we will know you and love you again after we have crossed the borders of the blessed summerland. Until then God bless you and keep you.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILLS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, it was announced today that tomorrow, Tuesday evening, the House will consider the Private Calendar. The first bills to be called are the omnibus claims bills.

Had it not been for the death of our beloved Speaker these bills would have been called Thursday evening, June 4.

In anticipation of the call on that day I placed in the RECORD a brief statement in reference to some of the bills we will be asked to pass tomorrow, Tuesday evening.

The purpose of my remarks is to call to the attention of the Members to my extension of June 3.

On page 8874 of the RECORD of that date Members will find a brief analysis of 25 bills. When I point out that probably several million dollars are involved in those bills surely Members will agree that they are worthy of more than ordinary consideration.

I express the hope that the Members will read my remarks of June 3. It will be a few moments well spent and be beneficial to the taxpayers of your district, who must pay their share of every private claims bill we pass.

OUR AGRICULTURAL PROBLEM

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Speaker and colleagues of the House, beclouding issues and misleading people are easy tasks. This is especially true when the problems are of a complex economic and social character. The complexity of our agricultural problems has made it easy for those who have personal or political ends in view to carry on a campaign raising false issues and disseminating insidious misinformation. These carping critics have taken and are taking full opportunity to "farm the American farmers."

A farmer, in the ordinary sense of the word, is one who cultivates the land to produce real and needed products for man's consumption.

But who are these "farmers of the farmer"? What are their methods, and what are their objectives? They need no tools of agriculture, but only the spoken and written word, a seed supply of false information, and a keen desire for personal or political capital. They carefully cultivate each sprouting seed of distrust, fear, and hatred which they have planted within the minds of those whom they profess to champion. Their objective is plain; those false prophets hope that in so doing they can again "reman the citadels."

Nebraska is almost entirely an agricultural State, a typical prairie State. All my life I have been engaged in farming. I know and all Nebraska farmers know that the future of agricultural and general American prosperity depends upon the establishment of agriculture on a basis of equality with industry. The 30,000,000 of our farm population constitute the largest single group in the United States. Not only are they the producers of foodstuffs, but they are also the largest single group consuming the products of labor and industry. Without restored and maintained agricultural purchasing power there can be no national prosperity. The realization of this truth has brought about, since March 1933, the first honest and extensive program for the betterment of agriculture that has ever been attempted by this Government. Much has been accomplished and much remains to be done. The advances have not been without a struggle. Opposition has been incessant and will continue.

Since 1900 agriculture has swept through an almost complete cycle in its development. During this same period the United States has witnessed a complete change in its national economy. We have seen the rise and fall of world markets and our transition from a debtor to a creditor nation. In 1900 there were 5,737,372 farms with an acreage of 838,592,000 acres. In 1930 there were 6,371,640 farms with an acreage of 986,771,000 acres. In 1900 Nebraska had 29,912,000 acres in farm land and in 1930 she had 44,709,000 acres, or an increase of nearly 50 percent.

Throughout and shortly following the World War our farmers found an adequate market for their goods. This was due to a dislocation of production in war-torn Europe and to the huge loans made by our Government to foreign powers, thus enabling them to buy on the American market. This temporarily stimulated foreign market, together with increased domestic consumption during the boom days, enabled the farmers to increase production and acreage planting. Some 5,000,000 acres of virgin prairie first felt the plow during this era. Farm production soared. Take the case of wheat, for example. From 1901 to 1905 our average wheat production was 630,354,000 bushels. From 1926 to 1930 it was 866,624,000 bushels, and in 1931 it was 932,221,000 bushels. Gross farm income, one of the best barometers of farm prosperity, shows a 1909 income of $6,000,000,000 and an average from 1923 to 1930 of eleven and a half billion dollars.

Thus far, we have looked at what are called those good old days prior to the depression. It was a period when the frail ship of our national economy rode rapidly toward the falls without any attempt to guide the craft into safer and less spectacular water. With careless hands on the wheel, our boat plunged over the falls—crumbling like the paper profits of Wall Street and scattering the occupants over the shoals of depression. Those 12 long years from 1921 to 1933 were the days of the "forgotten man", and the "forgotten man" was the American farmer. Agriculture led the way into the abyss, pulling after it the entire economic structure. Let us observe the process and its results and bear in mind that during those last 4 long years every blow fell without any attempt upon the part of the administration to check the course of ruin or to avert the mad stampede.

Several primary factors, each influencing the other, vitally affect agriculture. They are the barometers of agricultural economics, and even the least schooled can see the full significance of the facts.

We all know the story of falling farm prices when wheat tumbled from $1.58 to 31 cents, corn from $1.02 to 19 cents, rye from 98 to 21 cents, oats from 62 to 13 cents, cotton from 23 to 5 cents, hogs from $12 to $2.68, and cattle from $9.75 to $3.28. Those falling farm prices brought ruin to our farmers and forced them to sell their products at far below cost of production, yet not one effective move was made to prevent this condition. I mention this now lest we forget.

Falling farm prices produced falling gross farm incomes. These figures speak for themselves:

	United States	Nebraska
1929	$11,941,000,000	$451,841,000
1930	9,454,000,000	381,809,000
1931	6,968,000,000	248,176,000
1932	5,324,000,000	166,905,000

This decrease of 50 percent in the income of our largest consuming group brought an inevitable decrease in demand for industrial products, because the margin available after taxes and interest were paid was cut down still more. It meant farm mortgage foreclosures, increased bank failures, and increased unemployment.

Let us now see what was happening to our foreign markets during these years. Here again the cold figures tell the story of the dropping barometer of prosperity. They tell the story of vanishing foreign markets while an administration stood idle, making no effort to stop the fall or restore the losses.

	Exports of domestic agricultural products	Imports of competitive agricultural products for domestic consumption
1928	$1,863,000,000	$961,000,000
1929	1,693,000,000	1,017,000,000
1930	1,201,000,000	699,000,000
1931	821,000,000	446,000,000
1932	662,000,000	296,000,000

Prepared by Foreign Agricultural Service Division. Compiled from Foreign Commerce and Navigation and official records of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Now let us turn to two very important factors which largely resulted from the causes shown and which in themselves intensified the general collapse. They are farm-mortgage foreclosures and bank failures.

	Farm mortgage foreclosures per each 1,000 farms	Bank failures
1929	15.7	71
1930	18.7	88
1931	28.4	357
1932	38.8	322
1933 (January and February)	(1)	[2] 435

[1] No accurate figures; estimates for 1932 are approximately correct for these months.
[2] Prior to bank holiday.

We have observed falling farm prices, falling farm income, falling foreign markets, increased farm foreclosures, and increased bank failures during those 12 years. Let us now observe the trend in agricultural and industrial production for those same years:

	Agricultural production	Industrial production
1928	104	112
1929	101	119
1930	101	95
1931	107	80
1933 (January and February)	97	62

To those who bewail any attempt upon the part of the farmer to regulate supply and demand, these figures should be illuminating. They show that agriculture, despite falling demands and below-cost-of-production prices, made no attempt to adjust supply with demand by curtailing production. The farmer could not increase consumption because he was already selling for far below what it cost to raise his products. On the other hand, industry reduced its production 50 percent from 1928 to 1933, plowing under industrial products and plowing labor out into the ranks of the unemployed. I have heard many persons complain that the curtailment of crops was a sin against God, a deprivation of the necessities of life from those who are unemployed, and the supreme example of false economic doctrine. I have never heard those charges made against industry, yet the reduction in industry was four times as great as that in agriculture under the A. A. A. Mr. Ford would not make a car to sell at $500 if it cost him $700 to make it; the same is true of every other industrial leader, no matter how badly the goods he produces might be needed.

We have surveyed the period of despair, the period of inactivity, and the period which brought about the greatest peacetime catastrophe ever faced by our country.

On March 3, 1933, the hesitation and inaction was dropped. The problems were squarely faced, and a drive against the forces of depression was started. There were three primary challenges relating to agricultural recovery: (1) To increase farm purchasing power through increased farm prices; (2) to strengthen and restore the domestic and foreign market for American farm products; (3) to prevent farm foreclosures and preserve farm homes for farm families.

On every front great advances have been made. Direct action replaced hesitation and indecision. It is true that not every step taken has produced a forward march. Mistakes have been made; some have been corrected and others remain to be corrected. Perfection—that goal of all advance—comes slowly and could not be expected to rise like Phoenix from the ashes of a complete economic break-down. Let us see how far we have come in 3 short years.

To get a complete and fair picture of the results of the last 3 short years we need only compare the readings of our prosperity barometers with those of 1932. Let us see what happened to farm prices.

	Average price paid to the producer in 1932	Average price paid to the producer in 1935
Wheat	$0.388 per bushel	$0.864 per bushel.
Corn	$0.281 per bushel	$0.774 per bushel.
Rye	$0.286 per bushel	$0.518 per bushel.
Oats	$0.182 per bushel	$0.393 per bushel.
Cotton	$0.058 per pound	$0.116 per pound.
Cattle	$4.07 per hundredweight	$6.24 per hundredweight.
Hogs	$3.72 per hundredweight	$8.50 per hundredweight.

Those prices speak for themselves, and in spite of the worst drought in history, followed by a short crop, gross farm income has been increased every year under the present administration. Only a small part of the increase has been due to rental and benefit payments. In the drought areas particularly those payments represented the difference between a total loss and a bare living. Increased farm prices produced increased gross farm income.

Gross farm income

	United States total	Rental and benefit payments	Nebraska, total	Rental and benefit payments in Nebraska
1932	$5,324,000,000		$166,905,000
1933	6,256,000,000	$271,000,000	184,636,000	$5,944,000
1934	7,266,000,000	594,000,000	194,545,000	38,232,000
1935	8,110,000,000	480,000,000	[1]	[1]

[1] No official figures available; unofficial estimate for Nebraska total is $250,000,000.

The gross farm income gains shown in those figures for the last 3 years represent an increase of approximately $3,000,000,000, or 52 percent, over that of 1932.

With the utmost frankness and honesty, let us see what has happened to our foreign trade in agricultural products during the past 3 years. In order to place the full facts before you I wish to insert two brief charts from which we can draw the essential information:

CHART I

	Exports of domestic agricultural products	Imports of competitive agricultural products for domestic consumption
1932	$662,000,000	$296,000,000
1933	694,000,000	377,000,000
1934	734,000,000	450,000,000
1935	748,000,000	623,000,000

1930	1,468,000,000	769,000,000	699,000,000	130,000,000	569,000,000

1935	1,106,000,000	483,000,000	623,000,000	134,000,000	489,000,000

[1] Competitive agricultural imports include imports similar to agricultural products commercially produced in the United States or directly substituted to a significant extent for domestic agricultural products.

Foreign Agricultural Service Division. Compiled from Foreign Commerce and Navigation of the United States and official records of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

One could talk all day on the subject of foreign trade. The statistics have been given in the charts, and it is only necessary here to point out three or four striking facts which can readily be seen. From chart I it is evident that every year since this administration took office our agricultural exports have increased. Chart II illustrates three fundamental facts: (1) Decreased exports are found in the same years as decreased imports; (2) increased exports occur in the same years that our imports increase; (3) in years of greater farm prosperity our imports of agricultural products are greater than in years of adversity.

The present administration has inaugurated the policy of making reciprocal-trade agreements. Only one of these agreements has been effective long enough to justify either criticism or praise. If those agreements produce benefits, they can and should be continued; if they produce economic disadvantages, they can and should be repealed. They represent an attempt to stimulate our foreign trade. Persons who are so prone to criticize at this early date are very much like those who laughed at Fulton's steamboat, Wright's airplane, and who predicted that the horseless buggy would never run.

The expansion of our foreign trade has long been a subject of study and heated dispute. There are many possibilities in the export-subsidy plan, and every one of them should be accepted. The theory that subsidies are the final solution is open to grave doubt. No country which establishes or has established a quota on American goods will allow one more bushel of our produce to enter her boundaries than is allowed by her quota restriction. We could subsidize to the point of giving our goods away and not be able to export more than our quota. Right now trade agreements appear to be the only method of removing those quota and preference restrictions. Knowing our own objections to having foreigners "dump" on our markets, we cannot expect them to look with favor toward our dumping on their markets.

Let us now see what has happened to the twin barometers of farm mortgage foreclosures and bank failures in the last 3 short years.

	Farm mortgage foreclosures per 1,000 farms	Bank failures
1932	38.8	[1]77
1933	28.0	3
1934	21.0	1

[1] Including January and February, 1933.

These figures are amazing. They represent thousands of farm homes saved for American farm families. They represent safety for the small savings of millions of laborers, as well as safety for the investments of our more economically prosperous classes.

Advances have been made on every front during 3 short years. We have come a long way, and we will go further. Constructive criticism leads to progress; destructive criticism leads only to indecision and retreat. The absurdity and untruths of the false prophets should be made clear to everyone. You cannot build on such a foundation.

Regimentation of the farmers has been repeatedly cited as a criticism of the farm program. As one of those supposedly regimented, let me give my personal reaction, as a farmer, to this charge. A contract was offered me for my consideration. There was no compulsion, as I was given the opportunity to sign or reject the contract. Like all other contracts, it specified that I should perform certain acts to meet its terms. The Government contracted to make payment upon proof of my having complied with the terms imposed on me by the contract. Every farmer was given the same opportunity. Those who signed did so in good faith, and the Government carried out its part of the contract in good faith. If that voluntary cooperation is regimentation, then industry and labor have been regimented since the dawn of the contract system.

Changed conditions have produced a need for a forward-looking policy. Carping critics who advocate a return to conditions which no longer exist are simply "farming the American farmer" to promote and advance their personal, selfish interests. The effects of the war, scientific and "technolitical" advancements, intense nationalism resulting in increased trade barriers—these and many other factors have brought about changes which we must face. We cannot hope to regain our foreign markets by discriminating against our potential customers. We cannot restore purchasing power by enslaving agriculture. A complete and full accord, based upon understanding and trust, between our Government, the farmers, the laborers, and the industrialists is necessary. We cannot retreat! We must go forward if agriculture is to be given equality and if depression is to be banished from our land.

JOSEPH WELLINGTON BYRNS

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, JOSEPH WELLINGTON BYRNS, a Christian gentleman and a statesman extraordinary. We may truly say of him that he was a man of the people and for the people. A man in whom "the elements were so mixed" that he was not only kind, courteous, sincere, and efficient, but broad and deep and sound in all his deliberations.

It was my privilege to know JOE BYRNS as a colleague and as Speaker of the House of Representatives. To know JOE BYRNS was not only to like him but to admire him for his fine qualities. One of these fine qualities that radiated from his personality is expressed in Banks' stanza:

I live for those who love me,
And for those who know me true;
For the heavens that shine above me,
And the good that I can do.

Mr. BYRNS gave his first address after he had announced himself officially as a candidate for Speaker of the House in Washington Square, Perryopolis, Pa., my home town, at 11 a. m. September 20, 1934. Although he was in my town less than 2 hours, yet he made a lasting and favorable impression upon the hundreds who gathered there to hear him.

JOE BYRNS was a big man with a big soul. We read in history how Washington at Valley Forge was found praying for the success of the Continental troops. It is also recorded that Abraham Lincoln walked the floor for hours, appealing to his Lord and Master for guidance in the Civil War struggle. But we have it from the lips of his beloved wife, Mrs. Julia Woodard Byrns, that for 38 years every night before retiring he asked his Lord and Master for strength and guidance. No wonder JOE BYRNS is mourned by the whole Nation.

OLD-AGE PENSION

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, old-age pension should be called "old-age compensation", because any person who has worked at a useful occupation from the age of 20 to the age of 60 has produced enough wealth to take care of himself or herself for the rest of his or her life. If such a person finds himself or herself in financial distress and without the means of a comfortable livelihood, then it is because someone appropriated this wealth, or rather misappropriated it.

We have now arrived at a stage in our civilization where we realize that as a Nation we can safely restore to the aged part of the wealth which they created—part of the wealth taken from them by overzealous individuals and corporations. This is not a pension, it is not charity—it is a compensation for useful labor performed or for wealth actually created or produced.

While our Federal Government and the various States now realize that it is for the best interests, peace, and security that the aged be comfortably provided for, yet whenever this question comes up before the National Congress or the various State legislatures, it has been niggardly dealt with, dealt with as if it were a charity to unworthy people rather than compensation for services rendered.

In fact, the Federal Government, as well as the States, require a pauper's oath from the aged in order to give them just a dribbling of that which is theirs, which they are entitled to, and which they themselves have created or produced, but which under our financial system has been taken from them, generally without their consent and without fault on their part.

In the distant past, as well as more recently, the combined energies of the world were required to produce the necessities of life. Nations became great because of an abundance of raw materials and sufficient labor to change these raw materials into finished products, but even then there was usually a scarcity of some of the necessities. Saving and thrift became the watchword of the day.

Now, however, owing to machines, to mechanical inventions, and chemical discoveries, all this has been changed. We suddenly find that we have an abundance for all. Our problem no longer is how to produce more nor fear that the morrow may not bring plenty, but rather how to distribute the things that we have and that are essential to our well being.

According to the Department of Agriculture in Washington, we have too much of everything. We have too much to eat, and too much cotton and wool for clothing. Too much leather for shoes, and too much sugar and coffee. We have so much of everything that that Department entered upon its mad orgy of destroying and restricting the production of these essentials of life in the midst of hunger, want, and rags. The bureaucrats in the Department of Agriculture believe in the doctrine of scarcity. They believe that there is an overproduction, while intelligent people know that there never was an overproduction, but that our trouble is underconsumption and maldistribution.

In fact, there is an overproduction of just one thing, and that is an overproduction of ignorance. We are afflicted at present with national insanity. So that I may not be misunderstood when I use the word insanity, I mean just plain, ordinary craziness—a national mental disease—a mental defectiveness. That kind of a national mental condition that will permit the destruction and curtailment of food and clothing when we still have millions who could use that food and that clothing—when thousands are gradually dying from malnutrition.

In place of destroying this food and clothing and other essentials of life, why not distribute it to those who helped to create it and need it? Why does Congress not pass a decent and intelligent old-age-pension bill, which is the Townsend plan reduced to writing? Such bill would provide the machinery for the distribution of our so-called surplus and overproduction. It would compensate the aged for part of the wealth they have created. Such a bill would make it unnecessary for the aged to continue in industrial competition with the youth of this Nation. It would to a large extent solve our unemployment problem. It would give to those who have toiled for 40 years a needed and deserved rest for the remainder of their life. It would add to the health and well-being of the Nation. It would give peace and contentment where now all is doubt, uncertainty, insecurity, and mental suffering.

We all know that this Nation is still in agony. We all know that we still have some 20,000,000 on a disguised dole system. We all know that in spite of all the statements to the contrary by politicians for political reasons that mortgage foreclosures on city and farm homes are continuing and that thousands are being evicted from their homes. We all know that there are still 12,000,000 unemployed, whose condition is becoming more wretched and pitiful every day. This situation could be remedied if Congress were not hamstrung by the "gag and shackle rule" which the Members have not yet seen fit to blot out and abolish.

I regret to say that official Washington does not know what is going on in this Nation. It seems deaf and blind to the appeals of the men and women who have made this Nation what it is. The trouble is not with Members of Congress but with the bureaucrats in charge of this Government. These do not understand and cannot be made to understand the situation as it exists. The trouble is that Washington is too close to Wall Street—too intimately associated in the past with the special privileged, selected few who have amassed the greater part of the wealth of this Nation in their hands.

I know that if Congress were left free to act, that a majority could and would get together and put an end to hunger, want, and rags in the midst of plenty. Unfortunately, however, under the "gag and shackle rule" the majority are not permitted to and cannot function as they should. Unfortunately, because of the corroded patronage system, the majority are kept from doing that which they in their hearts know they ought to do.

MISSISSIPPI AND THE NEW DEAL

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, the Seventy-fourth Congress is rapidly drawing to a close. With it the first term of the Roosevelt administration likewise ends. Since I took the oath of office with the advent of this Democratic administration, I hope that it may not be considered inappropriate to briefly call attention to some of the outstanding achievements of the Roosevelt administration, and with particular reference to its effect upon the great State of Mississippi and the Sixth Congressional District, which I, through the indulgence of my people, have had the honor to represent. My desire to point out the accomplishments of this administration, together with its beneficent benefits to my own people, is accentuated by the fact that my service in the House has been contemporaneous with that of that great leader of the country and of Democracy, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, and the further fact that this great leader goes to the people of this country this fall, asking for a vote of confidence.

CONTRAST OF CONDITIONS IN 1932 AND 1936

Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Democratic administration of the affairs of this Government during the past 3½ years has in nowise been perfect. I am fully aware, moreover, of the fact that some mistakes have been made, that some things have been done that should not have been done, and that other measures for the common weal could possibly have been enacted into law that were not enacted. But I have long since learned that mortal men do not model perfectly. I have observed in the years that have gone by that the lot of man is to expect much more than he receives. It has been my observation that when man accomplishes one-half or more of what he undertakes to accomplish his efforts indeed have been worth while. Progress, like distance, beauty, knowledge, or any other abstract substance, is a comparative thing. Therefore, if one would appraise the 3½ years of the Democratic administration, he must do it by comparison. The natural thing to do in this instance is to compare this administration with the preceding one.

In 1932 it appeared that the whole economic structure of this country had collapsed. There were in excess of 14,000,000 people out of gainful employment. Business houses of long-established reputation were daily entering the bankrupt court. Banks were failing in alarming numbers because of lack of confidence. Credit was unobtainable. Farm produce was not bringing the cost of production. Cotton had declined 61 percent to 5.9 cents per pound. Wheat had declined 59 percent to 48 cents per bushel. Homes and farms were falling under foreclosure and the auctioneer's hammer. Confidence was destroyed. Hunger was rampant. Our people were desperate.

This was the picture of the United States in 1932 when the people went to the polls and by an overwhelming vote selected Franklin D. Roosevelt to lead them out of the slough of depression.

Today, after almost superhuman efforts through 3½ years of labor on the part of the President and of a sympathetic Congress, a new picture presents itself to the American people. Today unemployment has decreased sharply, and employment is continuing to increase. The demand for agricultural products has increased, and the farmer is receiving around 11 cents for his cotton and 84 cents for his wheat. Industry is reaching a new peak. Credit is becoming easier. Money is cheaper. The banks are stabilized. Confidence has been restored. The average American citizen can face the future with renewed hope and determination.

Despite the critics of President Roosevelt, the Congress, and the New Deal, the country is making progress. My own native State and my own congressional district have prospered under the New Deal administration. With your indulgence I should like to cite some statistics, which I have caused to be compiled, reflecting the substantial and concrete benefits derived by the people of my district and State, from the Federal Government under this administration and during my brief tenure in office, with the hope that they may prove enlightening and beneficial.

And in addition to the expenditures and benefits listed in the foregoing table, an appropriation for $65,000 has been made available and the contract has been let for a new Federal building at Pascagoula, Miss. We have every assurance that an approximately similar amount will be made available within the next few days for a Federal building at Picayune, Miss. I might also add that the Soil Conservation Service established a joint soil-conservation project in Covington and Jones Counties, Miss., at a cost of $64,287.12 to the Federal Government.

This table does not give many other benefits received which might also be mentioned. For instance, the Federal Government under the Roosevelt administration has expended in the State of Mississippi through the Civilian Conservation Corps, $22,286,000; through the National Youth Administration, $427,500; through the Social Security Board, since enacted in February of this year, $224,926; through the Veterans' Administration in disability compensation and insurance, $26,422,409. An enormous sum was also apportioned to Mississippi out of the Federal highway funds.

SEA-FOOD INSPECTION

Moreover, in the past 3 years the sea-food industry of the country, which is a substantial industry on the Mississippi Gulf coast, has been increased. Under a law passed in the Seventy-third Congress and as amended in the Seventy-fourth Congress, the sea-food industry has been placed on a parity with the meat industry. And henceforth the Federal Government will supervise the packing of sea foods, furnishing inspection service for that purpose. This means not only the saving of many thousands of dollars per annum by the Mississippi sea-food industry for inspection service, but it means also that the consumption of sea food by the public will be increased and these delicacies will be popularized among the consuming public.

STARCH PLANT

Under this administration a starch plant for the production of commercial starch from sweetpotatoes has been established in Jones County, Miss. This is the only factory of its kind in the United States and is the only venture of its kind that has ever been sponsored by the Federal Government. Millions of bushels of sweetpotatoes can be produced in South Mississippi annually. If the plant at Laurel, Miss., produces the starch commercially at a price that is profitable to both the producer of the potatoes and the industry, it means that the farmers of South Mississippi will have another cash crop in addition to cotton. It holds untold possibilities for the development of our cut-over lands and the improvement in living conditions in our rural communities. It means, of course, that if the plant can be operated profitably by the Government, private industry will take up its development and these plants will be located wherever potatoes can be grown profitably. The Federal Government up to this date has expended approximately $200,000 on this project.

COAST GUARD ACTIVITIES

In addition to maintaining Coast Guard craft along the Mississippi coast line at Pascagoula, Biloxi, and Gulfport for the protection of life, shipping, and property, the Federal Government has established a Coast Guard air base at Biloxi, Miss., the hangar for which cost $119,200. Suitable barracks at a cost of $120,000 are now under construction. To maintain this Coast Guard service off the Mississippi coast cost $498,416.97 in 1933; $349,584.06 in 1934; $305,649.19 in 1935; and for the first 9 months of the fiscal year 1936, $217,675.30.

HATTIESBURG COURT DISTRICT

Realizing the inconvenience caused many of the citizens of the northern part of the Sixth Congressional District in attending Federal court, when business required their attendance, this administration has established a special division of the southern Federal court district of Mississippi, to be known as the Hattiesburg district. It comprises the following counties: Covington, Forrest, Greene, Jefferson Davis, Jones, Lamar, Lawrence, Marion, Perry, and Walthall.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Time will not permit a discussion of all of the major benefits derived from this administration or the laws enacted, but there is one outstanding piece of legislation to which I desire to call particular attention. Many of us have been, and are still, keenly interested in the subject of old-age pensions and general social security. During this Congress, a law known as the Social Security Act was passed, providing for assistance to the aged and the crippled. The law is in no sense what we wanted, but it was the best we could get under all of the circumstances. Under its provisions it will be necessary for the State of Mississippi to match dollar for dollar the Federal Government's appropriation before the people of Mississippi can come under its provisions. I have always thought that this was wrong, and that the question of pensions for the aged should be considered as a national problem. My fight was made on the floor of the House and before the committee to this end. It is my thought that eventually this contention will prevail and an adequate pension system for the aged of the country will be worked out.

EMERGENCY APPROPRIATIONS

No one realizes or appreciates more than I the fact that in order for the country to have made the progress that it has made, in order for my native State and my congressional district to have received the benefits that they have received, an enormous amount of money has had to be appropriated during the 3½ years of this administration. The critics of this administration point out with alarm that these tremendous expenditures call for tremendous appropriations. But it must be borne in mind that this administration, as was pointed out in the premises of this statement, found the country in the depths of an economic morass. It must be borne in mind that this administration has been fighting a war against depression. And it likewise must be remembered that wars cost money. During the late World War the United States did not count the cost of the war. The one purpose was to win the war and save the country and its institutions. The cost of the war was secondary. Billions were spent to win that war. That was a war of destruction waged by the immortal Woodrow Wilson against the enemies of democracy. This is and has been a war of construction waged by the great humanitarian, Franklin Roosevelt. It must likewise be remembered that Federal revenue is easily found under prosperous conditions; and if we are successful in winning this war as we were in the last one, the increased revenues from the increased production and business will soon retire the deficit incurred.

It might not be amiss in this connection to point out that Mississippi pays but an infinitesimal part of the Federal taxes. For instance, the Government statistics show that in the matter of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration taxes and benefit payments, Mississippi paid $619,172.96; Mississippi received in rental and benefit payments under the same program $34,379,868.30. To put it differently, for every dollar the processors of Mississippi paid into the Government Treasury the farmers of Mississippi received in return approximately $35. The manufacturing States paid the taxes—the agricultural States received the benefits. Again, most of the Federal revenue that is derived comes from imports, excise duties, and income taxes. Of the former, Mississippi pays practically nothing, and of the latter, she pays seven-tenths of 1 percent.

This steady flow of revenue from the Federal Government to the State of Mississippi and my congressional district represents the largest amount of Federal funds that has ever come to Mississippi in any like period of time. In fact, in the past 3½ years, I am sure that the figures will bear me out that there has been more money sent into the Sixth Congressional District from the Federal Treasury than has come to that district in the whole time that Mississippi has been a State.

CONCLUSION

This, Mr. Speaker, presents a brief but substantial picture of what the Democratic administration has meant to the country, to the State of Mississippi, and particularly to the people of the district which has given me the privilege of representing them during the past 3½ years. It is not a perfect picture, because Franklin Roosevelt is not a perfect man, because the administration of his measures, enacted at his suggestion by a cooperative Congress, has not been perfect. Unfortunately the constructive and humanitarian measures enacted by the Congress under his leadership have had to be administered by human beings subject to all of the frailties of greed, partisanship, and petty politics. Too often these agencies have become so politicalized that many of these measures enacted for the relief of the people have in many instances largely failed because of the unpatriotic desire of those entrusted with their administration to play politics with human misery. It is not a perfect picture, but it is a picture in contrast.

It presents the difference between chaos and hopelessness in 1932 as compared with reasonable prosperity, hope, and justifiable confidence in the future now. President Roosevelt and the Democratic administration are entitled to the confidence of the people of this country. Surely the masses of the American people never had a truer friend in the White House than the present occupant of that historic mansion. Certainly the State of Mississippi never experienced a more beneficial administration than that which has been in power since 1933. In the years to come, history will record for the benefit of posterity the achievements of this truly great friend of the people and this administration. Monuments of granite and stone will be erected to Franklin D. Roosevelt in every State in the Union. But all of this will not compare with the monuments which a grateful American people have erected to him in their own appreciative hearts. I am happy indeed that back in the dark days of March 1933, when the Republic was facing its greatest crisis since the Civil War, my path led to Washington as a Representative in the administration of recovery. As arduous as has been the task, it has indeed been a distinct pleasure and a gratifying privilege to have been a part of this history-making administration and to play a humble part in its brilliant record of achievements.

CASH PAYMENT OF BONUS AN ACCOMPLISHED FACT

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the long and hard fight for payment of adjusted-service compensation to the World War veterans comes to an end tonight.

They deserve all the credit in the world for the courageous, up-hill fight they have carried on these many years.

They have had arrayed against them powerful influences that have utilized every conceivable means to defeat the claim of our veterans and deny to them the justice to which they are entitled. For years the opponents of immediate cash payment have conducted campaigns well organized and financed. By speech, mail, radio, and publicity of every kind and character they sent unfair and untrue propaganda throughout the Nation. They sought by every means possible to make what was right seem wrong. They pictured a just demand as a "Treasury raid." They painted a picture of financial despair and distress to create fear among the timid. They sought to discount and discredit the patriotism of our ex-service men. They adopted slogans that were mean and offensive. No stone was left unturned in their effort to find every possible means of creating an unfavorable attitude toward veterans. These forces were relentless and vigorous in their opposition.

All of this was often carried on by individuals who had given no service during the war and in many instances financed by those who had profited most as a result of the war.

It was a combination of wealth, power, and influence that the veterans were called upon to face and battle with in order that the right, truth, and justice of their cause might prevail. They met unequal conditions and surmounted them. With the sword of truth they challenged and conquered. Tonight they are privileged to reap the rewards of their triumphant victory.

On December 30 last it was my privilege to meet in the broadcasting station in Camden, N. J., a large and representative group of veterans and members of auxiliaries connected with veteran organizations. They represented the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Disabled Veterans, Spanish-American War Veterans, and the auxiliaries of each of these organizations. We met together on that occasion to advance the cause of immediate payment of adjusted-service certificates and procure payment legislation at this session of Congress. Tonight they meet in celebration of the accomplishment of that purpose. And I assure you it is a distinct pleasure for me, as one who by spoken word and vote in Congress has always acknowledged the justice of their cause, to join with veterans tonight in their victory celebration. I know of nothing in my whole congressional career that has given me such genuine pleasure as the opportunity I have had to cast my vote in favor of the necessary legislation every time it came before the House and then to see it finally triumph, even over a Presidential veto.

And in this connection I wish to pay a deserved tribute to the veteran organizations and their auxiliaries for the fine, courageous, and intelligent manner in which they and their national organizations have fought unfalteringly, never despairing in the hour of defeat, but ever pushing onward until victory was obtained. There is a debt of gratitude due to these veteran organizations by every ex-service man who will tonight benefit by the payment he will receive. It represents unrelentless toil upon their part over a period of many years, and I am of the opinion that every ex-service man who is not a member of these organizations should show his appreciation of what they have done in his behalf by joining such at the earliest possible day.

What these organizations have already done is but an indication of what can be done in the days to come in behalf of disabled veterans and the widows and orphans of deceased veterans. As veterans value the future welfare of their dependents, they should join and work with these organizations in their effort to care for all such.

I wish I could picture the good that will result from the payment of the bonus. Distress will be relieved; wishes and desires for things long denied will be satisfied; homes will be saved from foreclosure, new homes built, or improvements made to provide a more pleasant place in which to live; relief from debts that have burdened and distressed; opportunities for education will be opened for the ambitious youth within the veteran's home; medical treatments long denied will be supplied; new clothes will appear in place of those now shabby and worn. In fact, the good that will result it is impossible to describe. In a myriad of ways the moneys now received will bring happiness and satisfaction to the recipients and their families.

It will bring benefits not merely to approximately 4,000,000 ex-service men, but to their families as well, and will thereby touch directly 20,000,000, or one-sixth of our entire population. And the benefits will not stop even there. The money will go into every nook and corner of our great country. It will be utilized to pay debts long past due, stop foreclosures, and provide health and the necessities of life for millions. In the expenditure of these funds the merchants, the banks, and small-business men in every community will feel its beneficial effects.

It will mean the expenditure in the First Congressional District of New Jersey, which I have the honor to represent, of almost $7,000,000. Of this amount, the veterans of Camden County will receive $4,826,728.56, and there will be paid to the veterans of Gloucester County $1,354,442.26, and to those of Salem County $704,634.42, making a grand total of $6,885,805.24 that will enter into the channels of trade of the three counties comprising the First Congressional District of New Jersey.

Thus, the immediate payment of the adjusted-service compensation certificates, instead of being for the benefit of a favored few, will result in beneficial effects that cannot be estimated, and that will touch directly or indirectly practically our entire citizenship.

I deeply regret to learn through the newspapers that the Emergency Relief Administration in many sections is reported to have issued orders to take from relief rolls all veterans who receive payment of their bonus certificates. To me it seems cruel and heartless to strip these veterans and their families of these benefits. The meager amount allowed to those on relief for the bare necessities of life does not provide anything for the comfort and enjoyment of life. The bonus money received by the veterans would help supply some of those things that have long been denied, and yet the Relief Administration issues orders that will take all such chance away. Furthermore, it is reported that a warning has also been issued to the veterans by the Relief Administration that before they can hereafter claim any help from relief sources they must be prepared to show how they have expended their bonus cash. In other words, the Relief Administration wants to supervise how the veterans spend their money. No such supervision has been placed over others and there should be no discrimination against veterans. It is our duty to see that the orders of the Relief Administration in these respects are rescinded so that veterans who have long been denied what was due them can supply their families with the worth-while things to be purchased by the use of their bonus cash without fear of losing their relief status.

In conclusion permit me to again express my happiness in the successful termination of the long and hard fight to bring about cash payment of adjusted-service certificates, and also an assurance of a continuing desire to render every service within my power to all disabled veterans and the dependents of deceased veterans to the end that they also may have the justice that is due them.

PUBLIC DEBT

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand an analysis of the public debt of the United States. It is a very illuminating statement of the circumstances and conditions surrounding our Government's financial position. It is more than that, Mr. Speaker, for it shows exactly what the public debt of our Nation means to every man, woman, and child of our people.

I offer this analysis for various reasons, but I am most concerned with the facts herein disclosed for the reason I do not believe that many of our people realize what a gigantic debt has been piled up against us by the waste and cockeyed policies of the Roosevelt administration. These facts the people ought to know before they go to the polls to vote in November.

In presenting this document, Mr. Speaker, I cannot refrain from calling attention to certain statements that have been made by the President in connection with the public debt. Most of us recall how he said in a speech at Atlanta, Ga., that our Nation could stand a public debt of 50 or 60 or even 75 billions. It is recalled as well how he said he made that statement after conferring with some "great bankers." But, Mr. Speaker, he never told us who those bankers were—and he never will because such bankers do not live.

I am reminded further of the shameless attempt made by Franklin Delano Roosevelt to compare himself to Andrew Jackson. You will recall that fifty-dollar-a-plate dinner at the Mayflower Hotel here—that famous Jackson Day dinner. It was there that Franklin Delano Roosevelt attempted to tell the country what a great man he was by paralleling his course and his problems as President with those of President Jackson.

But, Mr. Speaker, Franklin Roosevelt omitted in that speech to recall to his audience of claquers how Andrew Jackson considered our public debt. Andrew Jackson always maintained that a nation, like an individual, should keep out of debt so far as it was possible. Consequently, at the end of Andrew Jackson's administration in 1837, for the first and only time in our history, our Nation had practically no public debt.

It was Andrew Jackson's idea and it is the idea of every sound-thinking person that waste and extravagance by the Government is just as much of a sin as waste and extravagance by an individual. Each must be ready to meet emergencies, and each must be prepared for the time when income falls and expenses go on.

What has Mr. Roosevelt done for us in this regard? I will tell you. He has left this Nation in a position where, if a new emergency arises, and emergencies may arise, our Nation may have extreme difficulty in financing itself.

The outlook for future generations, Mr. Speaker, is not pleasant because of the perfidy of this Roosevelt administration. They face taxes never before known in this country—and the end is not yet because this administration is continuing to spend; continuing to build up political machines in every State and every county of the Union.

It is time to call a halt. The only way that we can call a halt is to get rid of the man who is responsible—Franklin Roosevelt.

I should like to ask this question of every citizen of the United States:

In counting up the money you owe, do you include your share of the public debt? Or is the public debt to you, as it is to many people, merely a sum of money so large as to be incomprehensible, and certainly in no way connected with your individual finances? If you fall into this latter category, you probably will be shocked to learn that, in addition to the obligations you have personally contracted, a debt has been piling up against you of which you have no knowledge, over which you have been afforded no control, and which takes precedence over all other debts. I refer to the $245 which is each citizen's share of the Federal Government's debt.

You have probably been told or have read that the public debt is the highest it has ever been in the history of our country—thirty-one and one-half billion dollars—but has it ever occurred to you that this is your debt? Not, of course, the whole amount, but you, along with every other citizen, must bear your proportionate share. Have you realized that eventually this debt must be paid, and that the only means of paying it is by your money?

Looking at that vague and shadowy term, "the public debt", in this light, you realize that it is not just a term read in the newspapers but that it has a very real and personal meaning to you as an individual. That enormous sum of thirty-one and one-half billion dollars must be collected in some way, and the only way collection is possible is by increasing the share of Government expense which you are bearing.

A PUBLIC-DEBT ANALYSIS

In 1857 the public debt was $28,700,000. In that year each person's share was only $1.01. With the advent of the Civil War the Government naturally was in need of additional funds, and the borrowing necessitated by the war caused the debt to increase many times, until in 1866 it reached the sum of $2,750,000,000. At that time each person's share was $77.69. Then followed a period of retrenchment and a gradual decrease in the debt, with the result that, during the early 1900's, it had been more than halved, and each person's share ranged between $12 and $17. This honest effort of the Government to reduce its indebtedness was interrupted by the World War.

The enormous scale on which the World War was conducted led the Government deeper and deeper into debt until on August 19, 1919, the total debt was $26,594,000,000.

At this time the Government was in the same position as an individual who has had an unexpected illness or some similar emergency, and whose first action on recovering is an attempt to pay his bills and regain a firm financial footing. The same thing is true in the case of governments, for, after all, governments' finances are no different from those of the individual, except in amounts. To the government war can be compared to the unexpected illness or operation, and every honest government follows the same policy as the individual—it attempts to pay its bills and be ready for future emergencies. This policy has been consistently followed by our Government in the past, and it is due to this fact alone that the country has been in a position to weather the crises that have arisen.

No more earnest effort was made in this direction than during the period following the World War. The expenses of conducting the war had been the heaviest in our history, and at its conclusion the public debt was greater than it had ever been up to that time. Those in control of the Government wisely began a program, the primary object of which was to return the country to financial soundness. In 1921 the debt was approximately $24,000,000,000. In 1922 it was reduced a billion dollars. Between 1922 and 1930 almost $8,000,000,000 additional were paid off.

But was this policy continued by President Roosevelt? The facts speak for themselves. In approximately 3 years President Roosevelt has not only undone the work of 11 years of consistent reduction but he has added another ten and one-half billion dollars to the debt. When President Roosevelt took office on March 4, 1933, the debt was $20,937,350,964. By June of 1933, when he had been in office only 4 months, the debt had increased almost $2,000,000,000. In the following fiscal year he added four and one-half billion and in 1935 a billion seven hundred million. From March 4, 1933, to May 15, 1936, there has been a total increase of $10,600,000,000. The debt is now $31,541,000,000, and each person's share is $245.

Nor is this the end. Although the debt is now $5,000,000,000 greater than it has ever been in the history of our country, the spending continues and we are promised a further increase of $3,000,000,000 by June 30, 1936, which will mean a total debt of $34,500,000,000. On that date the Government will owe more than the value of all the farm property in the United States. Can any nation, even one with the resources of the United States, carry such a burden?

Which is the wiser policy—to prepare for future emergencies or to indulge in reckless spending with no thought beyond the present? The Roosevelt administration has followed the latter course and has plunged the country so deeply into debt that should an emergency arise at the present time the country would be in no position to cope with it, and the result might be so serious as to permanently cripple our financial structure. It should be apparent to every thinking man that we cannot continue in this fashion. To do so must lead to ruin and present policies are carrying us far along that road.

To the individual citizen the Roosevelt administration means that between March 4, 1933, and June 30, 1936, his share of the national debt has increased from $167 to $269, and his family's share from $673 to $1,068. In addition to this, he has been helping to pay interest during these years. The interest alone on a debt of this size is over $700,000,000 a year—only $200,000,000 less than the total debt in 1916. As long as the Government continues to spend almost double the revenue it collects, someone must pay the bills. This can be done either by additional taxes now, or by borrowing, which must be repaid through the collection of additional revenue at a later date. In either event, each citizen will ultimately be called upon to pay.

When our citizens fully realize the relation of the national debt to them as individuals—that it is their pocket out of which it must be paid; that they and their families will be deprived of something in order to meet this obligation—then, and then only, will they demand that governmental extravagance stop.

How can Government extravagance be stopped? By demanding that expenditures be reduced and enforcing this demand by placing in office men who will handle Government money, which is in reality the people's money, with the same regard and care they would their own.

REPLY OF HON. JOHN J. M'GRATH TO A RADIO SPEECH BY HON. FLORENCE P. KAHN ON RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. FLORENCE P. KAHN, Congresswoman from California, made a radio speech on April 16, 1936 (duly reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Apr. 20), in which the dust-laden bogey of foreign competition was again paraded before the weary electorate.

Mrs. KAHN is stunned at the increase in importations of agricultural products into the United States, but carefully bases her phobia on statistics most convenient for her purpose—those for January 1936. By implication, the Representative from San Francisco ascribes the dreaded inundation of foreign products to the reciprocal trade agreement policy which the United States has actively pursued since 1934.

Let us examine this most-favored-nation policy of reciprocal foreign trade and see whether it is as heretical as the widow of the late Congressman from California would have us believe. Would the most dyed-in-the-wool Republican maintain that such Americans as Alexander Hamilton, William McKinley, James G. Blaine, and William H. Taft were theoretical internationalists, willing to surrender American markets to the perfidious foreigner? Yet we find that not only the foregoing, but many other Republican leaders, have advocated similar measures to increase reciprocal foreign trade. Among the contemporary Republicans one readily thinks of such individuals as Senator Capper, Henry L. Stimson, Nicholas Murray Butler, Colonel Knox, and Charles Evans Hughes as proponents of reciprocity in our foreign commerce. Even such a Neanderthal Republican as Ogden Mills made the following statement in his speech at Topeka:

> We will have to abandon the present policy of isolation and intense nationalism and to some extent modify recent tariff practices. This may sound strange, coming from an orthodox Republican, but I have never understood that a sound system of protection, based upon the cost of production at home and abroad, if intelligently applied, means the erection of impassable tariff barriers, the destruction of our commerce with the rest of the world, and the sacrifice of the efficient farmer to save the inefficient manufacturer. * * *

But to return to the panicky speech of the lady from California (and if she is depending on such fallacious arguments for reelection her panic is well founded). Mrs. KAHN, after carefully choosing the data best suited for her purpose, lists the following commodities as showing an increased importation for January 1936 as compared with January 1935: Fresh pork, cattle, cheese, horses, turnips, potatoes, milk powder, fresh beef, bacon and hams, wool, and poultry.

Even though one must allow Mrs. KAHN to make an electioneering speech in the campaign year, could she not have been expected to go into the matter far enough to learn that the United States has not in any agreement granted any tariff reductions on fresh pork, milk powder, fresh beef, bacon and hams, or wool. Furthermore, the American producer is amply protected in the reductions granted on cattle, cheese, and potatoes, because the concessions are specifically restricted as to amount or variety.

That the increased importation of agricultural products in 1935 and early in 1936 was largely due to domestic deficiencies resulting from drought conditions, rather than from tariff reductions, will be apparent from the Department of Commerce preliminary statistics of imports for the month of April 1936, in comparison with April 1935. The figures show that importations of the following agricultural articles decreased: Dairy products, butter, cheese, fish, tallow, grains and preparations, corn, wheat, fodder and feeds, vegetables and preparations, fruits and preparations.

It is true that the importations for the same month show increases, for the most part moderate, in the following: Animals; animal and meat products (edible and inedible); hides, skins, and leathers; vegetable oils and fats; cocoa, coffee, tea.

Many of these last-named increased importations, particularly the noncompetitive, colonial products, are traceable to increased buying power on the part of the American consumer rather than to tariff reductions.

While it would be dangerous to draw any generalization from the data for any given month, or even for a particular year, the tendency is already clear. We may safely conclude that the United States Government, in pursuing an enlightened reciprocal-trade policy, is not permitting the nefarious foreign bogeyman to throttle the American farmer and laborer. The present program is merely a realistic recognition of a truism, namely, that we cannot continue to sell abroad unless we are willing to take goods or services in exchange. Both parties gain when they exchange goods or services in which each has special advantages.

As a Representative from a State which has gained numerous benefits from the trade agreement, Mrs. KAHN is proving to be particularly ungrateful. In exchange for the concessions granted the United States, which Mrs. KAHN has sought to magnify out of all proportion, the State of California stands to profit by many concessions granted to the United States in the 14 trade agreements thus far concluded.

Some of the products of California which have received more beneficial treatment abroad are the following: Oranges, grapefruit, canned vegetables, fresh vegetables, figs, raisins, nuts, canned fruits, jams and jellies, honey, rice, grapes, pears, apples, condensed milk, malt extracts, pearled barley, avocados, melons, olives, sardines, salmon, petroleum products, lumber, borax, motion-picture films.

The above list of products represents a very substantial part of the wealth of California. If Mrs. KAHN is basing her claim to reelection on the premise that California has nothing to gain and everything to lose by rationalization of our foreign trade, it is small wonder that she is stunned by the trade-agreements program.

Another statement of Mrs. KAHN's that deserves investigation is the following:

> Closely connected with taxes is, of course, the tariff, at one time one of our great sources of income. What with reciprocal tariffs, most-favored-nation clauses, lower duties, what do we find? Not only income cut off but a tremendous importation of agricultural products.

Income from customs receipts has not been reduced. In fact, customs receipts for the first quarter of 1936 were $18,000,000 larger than for the same period of 1935. This is the result of the increased foreign trade—both imports and exports—and shows that the so-called Trade Agreements Act of 1934 is being carried out with moderation and with due regard for realities. The nonpartisan officials who are administering the trade-agreements policy are proving that a reasonable correction of some of the inequities of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act will go a long way toward restoring our normal channels of international trade, with resultant benefits to all sections and classes in the United States.

In short, we are at last seeing a practical application of that ideal which has been so often discussed but so rarely applied—scientific tariff making. The nonpolitical personnel in charge of the program, together with the specialized knowledge each brings from the sphere in which he is most competent, gives ample assurance that a rational policy of tariff adjustment is far preferable to the log-rolling methods so often applied in the past.

The most-favored-nation policy, which Mrs. KAHN views with such concern, is neither new nor experimental. It has been the cornerstone of American foreign trade for a great many years. Even if it were considered advisable to abandon most-favored-nation treatment, it could not be done without invalidating countless treaties that were concluded long before the present administration came into office. The results of the trade agreements in force demonstrate that the concessions granted by the United States can, in practice, be limited to those countries which show a disposition to be reasonable in their treatment of American trade. This is accomplished by granting concessions only to those countries who are the natural or principal suppliers of the import in question. Such concessions are not extended to countries who discriminate against American commerce or whose policies tend to defeat the purposes of the Trade Agreements Act.

In conclusion let me quote from the writings of a Republican leader whom Mrs. KAHN can hardly fail to admire. I refer to the late William McKinley, who made the following statement in a speech at Buffalo:

> A system which provides a mutual exchange of commodities is manifestly essential to the continued and healthful growth of our export trade. We must not respose in the fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing.

COMMONWEALTH OF INDUSTRY

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the Members of the House to a new industrial philosophy which is embodied in a recently published book entitled "The Commonwealth of Industry, the Separation of Industry and the State", written by my friend, Benjamin A. Javits, noted attorney of New York City, who has handled numerous antitrust cases. I believe that Mr. Javits has formulated an interesting, if not practical, plan for business and for our national economy which may initiate a movement that will mobilize the voters to demand from business what most of them now demand from us—jobs at good wages and economic security.

Such a drive and such a movement on the part of the voters of this country might unite the business elements in an economic structure and tempt them to decide once and for all that they cannot shift their burden and their responsibility to this Congress and to the State political bodies, to deal with the problem of making business serve the public interest. The problem is properly that of industry.

Mr. Javits shows in his book that through the use to which the Federal Declaratory Judgment Act passed by Congress in June 1934, can be put and under certain Supreme Court decisions and Federal statutes, it is possible to develop self-regulation without additional legislation. He points out, and it may be difficult to disprove, how a majority in an industry can control the minority even though the minority may not have entered into any agreement or compact with the majority, as to matters involving fair-trade practices.

Members of this Congress might well profit by reading this book and absorb the doctrine. They might be able in this way to relieve themselves and the other political agencies of our Government of shouldering the problems which business should have assumed publicly a long time ago.

President Roosevelt has spoken of the desirability of establishing an economic constitutional order, and this book seems to point one way in which this can be accomplished outside the realm of politics.

The taxpayers are beginning to protest against larger and larger tax burdens. The idea of the commonwealth of industry, if carried out, would put upon industry the responsibility for full employment and for meeting the needs of the Government to balance its Budget. The plan may well relieve each Congressman of the burden of providing jobs by one means or another for his electorate.

Mr. Javits' philosophy has been briefly summed up in the following 10 political planks, which are a condensation of a much larger political document in his book, which purports, in a political way, to express his industrial philosophy:

1. We believe that it is time to take note of the alterations required in our industrial organization to meet the changes which have already taken place in our industrial life. We favor constructive action to bring our economy into line with our technology; that is to provide work and income for all because the machine can serve all.

2. We believe that the American system of government is designed along lines which both permit and demand self-government for industry.

3. We believe that industry can be managed and operated best by industrial managers, technicians, workers, and farmers organized on self-governing lines and cooperating in the public interest.

4. We favor the immediate organization by industry of a national economic council with self-governing powers and economic privileges. The nucleus for establishing a national economic council shall consist of the trade associations, labor bodies, technical groups, and other organized parts of our economy.

5. The National Economic Council must guarantee to provide work for the entire employable population of the United States at fair wages.

6. We maintain that the political state, as represented by our elected and appointed officials, should no longer interfere with the administration of industry, organized in the public interest, and represented by leaders of every branch of our economy.

7. We believe that under our laws and our court decisions the courts are open to everyone to question industry's right to govern itself at all times.

8. We believe that every man, woman, and child is entitled to a definite consumer value and should have a known credit rating based upon his present and ultimate value to economic society.

9. We demand full publicity for every act of both Government and industry.

10. In order to safeguard our valued liberties and to foster our industrial ingenuity, we believe that industry must develop self-governing democratic forms, which need take no leaves from the books of fascism, nazism, or communism.

I commend the book and its philosophy to the Members of this Congress and the American people. It may mark the beginning of an era when our thinking of the relationship of Government and industry can be chartered on the basis of the separation of industry from the state with the retention of the state's power and control over industry by court review of the actions and policies of business.

We have had Townsend plans and share-the-wealth movements and social-justice groups, but this may be the beginning of a movement that might help the Members of this Congress to discharge their obligation to the electorate without imposing new obligations upon the Government. Instead, the burdens and problems which the Government has been carrying for the last 40 years will be turned over to industry, which will thus have an opportunity to develop a philosophy of its own, an organization of its own that will be truly representative, and a leadership of its own.

ENGLAND'S DUTY IN PALESTINE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, recently grave news reached us from Palestine, where a veritable reign of terror was caused by Arabs in their attacks upon Jews. The record was replete with cowardly and unprovoked assaults upon unprotected Jewish settlers. Twenty-nine Jews have been assassinated and 150 more have been maimed and wounded. Jewish property has been pillaged and wantonly destroyed.

The British authorities, until recently, were unable or unwilling to adopt the proper stringent measures to protect the several Jewish colonies from the savage Arab mobs.

Naturally such news is regarded with deep concern not only by Americans of Jewish origin but by all those who have been watching with sympathy the progress of the Jews in reestablishing their ancient home land.

Great Britain eagerly sought and accepted the mandate over Palestine with its unequivocal provisions relating to the Jewish home-land policy. The project was endorsed by the principal allied powers, and the principles of the Balfour declaration received the unanimous endorsement of the Congress of the United States in a joint resolution passed by both Houses, which resolution was signed by President Harding and received the unqualified approval of American public opinion.

As a result of the mandate, a substantial amount of American capital has been invested in Palestine, and a goodly number of American citizens are residing there in the pursuit of peaceful enterprises. Thousands of Jewish refugees, fleeing persecution, have sought safety in Palestine, all spurred on by the conviction that Great Britain would conduct a beneficient administration in Palestine, assuring protection to life and property.

In the summer of 1929 we received shocking news from Palestine. There occurred a fearful massacre of Jews in Hebron, Haifa, Safed, and other places. Proper protection was not afforded by the British Government. Its duty was to prevent that disaster. At least, it should have done all in its power to prevent recurrence of the outrages against helpless and defenseless Jews. Recent events in Palestine have proved that Great Britain failed to heed the warning. England has been derelict in its duty.

David Ben Gurion, president of the Jewish Federation of Labor in Palestine as well as chairman of the executive of the Jewish Agency, is now in London and is demanding the setting up of proper safeguards. Among other things, he stated that—

> Had the mandatory power taken definite steps to fulfill its obligations under the mandate, and if the successive administrations, especially that of the first high commission, had not yet yielded to terrorist action, even the wildest Arabs would not have dared to employ terrorism against Britain. Unfortunately, the authorities frequently yielded, thus conveying an erroneous impression of the possibility of forcing their hand.

Recently at a gathering I called Great Britain to task for its failure to properly protect the lives and property of the Jews in Palestine against Arab assaults and brigandage. I was severely called to task by former State Senator Nathan Straus, who claimed that England had done its duty. He viewed with complete complacence the murder of the 29 Jews and the wounding of scores of others. He made light of the foul deeds of the Arabs. He had the hardihood to say that we must expect that in all colonizations some of the pioneers may be killed. He sought to draw a parallel between the difficulties of present-day Jews and the many brave bands of Americans who were wiped out by Indians during our colonial era. Of course, such comparison is infantile, if not ludicrous. Certainly, some sacrifice of life and property must be expected, but there should be no unnecessary sacrifice. In the case of our own colonies, there was no mandated imperial nation to guarantee to keep Indians within control.

Great Britain guaranteed protection of life and limb in Palestine. After repeated warnings, England failed to afford suitable protection. Surely someone must complain, even if weak-kneed individuals like Straus quake in their boots—too scared to give outcry.

No one has greater respect for England than I. I recognize the boon England has created for Jews in the espousal of the Balfour declaration and the mandate. Great as England is, when she strays from the path of duty we must yank her back to it.

It is interesting to note, in this connection, the protest filed with Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador at Washington, the other day by a Christian delegation headed by Right Rev. James F. Freeman, Episcopal bishop of Washington. Among other things, the protest contained the following: "Mere compassion and commiseration with the sufferings of these victims of prejudice and persecution are not enough. Bold, practical methods to save these untold millions from total annihilation are now called for."

I presume Straus would have the effrontery to attack Bishop Freeman and his Christian brethren joining in the protest.

Happily, already criticism of England's dereliction has borne some fruit. Jews are now being allowed to arm in self-defense. More protection is necessary. The military defense force at Palestine numbers 7,229. That force should be doubled. There must be made available a greater number of airplanes under the Royal Air Force. A portion of the British Mediterranean fleet should be in the offing at all times, ready for any emergency. Finally, rights of the Jews to arm in self-defense should not be infringed upon. Great Britain must punish the foul wrongdoers, suppress the agitators and do all in its power to prevent a recurrence of the evil.

The Right Honorable William Ormsby-Gore, the new Colonial Secretary, announced a few days ago in the House of Commons that Great Britain has determined, properly, to intervene to stamp out the Arab disorders, and that emergency powers are now being taken by proclamation. Thus criticism has hastened action. Does Straus think pussyfooting would have brought such results?

THE BLACK LEGION

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, for several weeks past our newspapers have been carrying headlines with reference to the so-called Black Legion. Investigations are being carried on in my State of Michigan, where the legion seems to have been unusually active, and the disclosures thus far are indeed shocking to every citizen of the United States who believes in free government and democracy.

We are entitled to know every fact possible as to the organization, activities, and personnel of the Black Legion, and I believe it to be entirely proper to ask that every agency of Government, Federal and State, be called upon to cooperate in rooting out and destroying this obnoxious growth.

There is a place in American cultural and social life for fraternal societies, but there is no place in America for any society such as the Black Legion, which places allegiance to its order and its officers above allegiance to the State. From the facts which we already know, the members of the Black Legion were forced to subscribe to a code which was completely un-American in every respect. The terroristic features of the Black Legion, its implements of torture, and its dealing in death are only a few of its damnable characteristics. Quite as distasteful are its racial and religious prejudices.

Damnable above all is the admission by certain of its members that the organization sought through subversive means to overthrow the existing democracy in the United States. The Black Legion, it appears, has been in Michigan in large part a political organization, taking active part in political campaigns and penetrating through its membership into the law-enforcing agencies.

There is no place in America for a secret political society of any kind which enforces its decrees by fiat upon its membership. Democracy cannot endure without free discussion among the people or without free choice on the part of the electorate. The Black Legion's code was a denial of free discussion and free choice. Its operations have been shrouded in secrecy; its membership coerced by fear of bodily harm or even death.

No true American citizen, I am sure, can feel that the Black Legion has served any useful purpose in our Nation. The real leaders of America, whatever their political faith, will not surely countenance the activity of night riders and dealers in death. Several days ago, on the floor of this House, one of my colleagues from Michigan saw fit by inference to link the present administration with the Black Legion. I realize the importance and absurdity of such talk and I know the membership of this House has the same feeling as I toward that statement. But since the question has been raised here in the House it may be well to put into the RECORD those facts which have been discovered to date. I make no charges and draw no inferences. The disclosures are common knowledge and to each is left his own opinion.

It seems beyond credulity that the Republican Party in Michigan should have any connection with the Black Legion, and I know the rank and file of the Republican Party in my State have no connection. However, certain of the leaders of the G. O. P. in Michigan are not so free from suspicion. According to an account which appeared in the Washington Daily News of May 30, ex-Governor William Brucker, now a candidate for the Republican nomination for the Senate, saw fit to open his primary campaign against Senator COUZENS at the Wolverine Republican Club. It is common knowledge now that the Wolverine Republican Club and the Black Legion were practically one and the same organization. Meetings of the Black Legion were held at the headquarters of the Wolverine Republican Club and it was here that the abduction of Poole, recent victim of mob terrorism, was planned. Furthermore, on the stage with ex-Governor Brucker was Judge L. E. Sharp, who was recently revealed as the sponsor for A. F. Lupp, Black Legion "brigadier general", when the latter obtained a gun permit. Dayton Dean, confessed murderer of Poole, bought the murder weapon from Lupp. Brucker's appearance at the Black Legion was undoubtedly used as a means of enticing members.

How far the ramifications of the Black Legion extend into the Republican Party in Michigan, I do not know, but the public are entitled to know how far the legion's influence has extended. I do not charge any open or willful connivance, but I do know the Vandenberg-Brucker G. O. P. machine, and I have my suspicions.

I am curious too, to learn why no action was taken to uncover the Black Legion when three of its organizers were apprehended last August 1936 by State police. The State troopers reported that guns, robes, and legion literature were found in the organizers' automobile. I should like to know, too, how it happened that L. J. Black, president of the Wolverine Republican Club, and H. Z. Marx, attorney of the club, happened to appear before the prosecutor of Lenawee County, Mich., to ask the release of the three organizers. they did not get the release but they did get a dismissal of the charges on the ground of illegal search.

I should like to know why the Michigan State police did not at this time expose the connection between the Wolverine Republican Club and the legion and at once put an end to the whole sordid story.

It is claimed by certain labor leaders in Detroit that this legion was interfering with the activities of union organizers. It is also claimed that our Republican Governor of Michigan, Frank Fitzgerald, was a member of the legion and if so, undoubtedly knew of its code and program.

It might be interesting, too, to learn who has financed this despicable organization which masqueraded as a vehicle of Americanism, yet stooped to the most cowardly kind of un-Americanism. We have learned in recent weeks much about where the money has come to support and develop these false-front societies; I refer, for instance, to the Farmers Independence Council, organized in Michigan, I believe, to protect the rights of the farmers, yet to which no farmer belongs. I refer, also, to the Southern Association to Uphold the Constitution, organized in Texas, and spreading the most virulent type of racial prejudice. We have learned that these associations were financed by Du Pont and General Motors' money, financed by the same group that support the Liberty League, and that organized the grass-roots convention for the chain-gang Governor of Georgia last spring.

The financing activities of these lords of our economic life has been so widespread we are justified, I believe, in asking what connection, if any, they may have with the Black Legion.

We do not want dictatorship in the United States and we will not have dictatorship so long as our people are permitted to discuss and act freely on matters of public policy. Our democracy is threatened, however, when scheming politicians will stoop to coalition with such organizations as the Black Legion. The threat of the Black Legion is more than a threat to the lives and fortunes of single individuals. It is an expression of an unwholesome influence in America, which is a danger to our very democracy. Years ago Gen. Smedley Butler said that such an organization as the Black Legion was in the making. He was more nearly correct perhaps than many of us supposed. Our task is clear—to destroy forever the Black Legion and the unscrupulous politicians who have carried on its intrigues.

THE RIGHT OF THE COURTS TO PASS UPON THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ACTS OF CONGRESS

Mr. CROSS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, under clause 2 of section 2 of article III of the Constitution there is delegated to Congress in unequivocal language the power to deny to the inferior Federal courts the right to pass on the constitutionality of acts of Congress, and also the right of the Supreme Court to pass upon the constitutionality of an act of Congress on any case coming before the Supreme Court on appeal, so that only a sovereign State can attack the constitutionality of an act of Congress by an original suit in the Supreme Court. On January 28 I addressed this body advocating H. R. 9478, a bill introduced by me to effectuate this purpose. Since then that measure and those of us who endorse it have been attacked by two of our most brilliant and eloquent colleagues, one of whom, Mr. HOLLISTER, hails from the capital of the famous Buckeye State; the other, my distinguished friend, Mr. Cox, from the peanut-clad hills of ancient Georgia. Their zeal and fury was such that Job must have had them in mind when he declared:

> Their necks shall be clothed with thunder. * * * The glory of their nostrils terrible. * * * They shall paw the air and rejoice in their strength. * * * They shall swallow up their enemies with fierceness and rage. * * * The quiver shall rattle against them, the glittering spear and shield.

And so the prophetic brain of Job, looking down the centuries, visioned and depicted in this graphic language what was to happen when these two gallant-plumed knights were to indict as heretics, convict, draw and quarter in your very presence a number of your meekest and most timid colleagues. You heard with what frightfulness their quivers rattled as they thundered through the neck. You saw the terrible glory of their nostrils as they pawed the air and rejoiced in their strength. And then you also saw with what fierceness and rage they swallowed us up. As they made their devastating charges upon us, you saw upon their left arm that mystic shield woven in the silence of the cobwebbed cloisters of our immaculate Supreme Court. Woven under the spell of such incantations as "commerce among the States", and being charged with "Liberty League dynamics", smashes into unconstitutional fragments every law of Congress tending to establish economic and social justice. And then as they were cruelly demolishing us, you saw with what marvelous skill they wielded that famous glittering spear, welded in the occult fires of yonder dread hallowed oracle by the nine black-robed fates as they chanted those magical words "due process of law", and at the touch of which the rights of States vanish as the mist before the sun.

Mr. Speaker, having somewhat recovered from the shock of such "sound and fury" I wish to again in a modest way present some additional reasons why this bill should be enacted into law.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal Government is one of delegated powers, consisting of three coordinating departments, the legislative, executive, and judicial. Of these the Constitution recognizes the legislative as being the most important, delegating to it the power and duty to enact laws exercising their judgment to do so, within the scope of the Constitution, under which the country is to function. The Constitution recognizes the executive as the next in importance, and delegates to it certain rights and prerogatives; while it delegates to the judiciary the duty to construe and pass upon the rights of litigants as they exist under the laws as passed. But there is nothing to be found in the Constitution that any more authorizes the judicial branch of the Government to nullify the acts of Congress than there is for the legislative branch of the Government to nullify the decisions of the courts in rendering judgment between litigants.

A number of the delegates who served in the Constitutional Convention had been educated in England and all of them were versed in English jurisprudence, being as they were, prior to the Revolution, loyal subjects of their mother country. They were familiar with English history and knew how its people had suffered as the result of the Tory courts nullifying the acts of Parliament prior to the Bill of Rights of 1688. They knew since that time no court had dared to nullify an act of Parliament. They never dreamed that the court they were creating would ever dare presume to go back a hundred years and arrogate unto themselves the right to nullify the acts of Congress and thus play the role of the Tory courts that existed in England prior to 1688, and cite as their authority for so doing the very clause, "due process of law", which was transplanted out of the English bill of rights into our bill of rights, and which was placed in the English bill of rights to put an end to the high-handed judicial tyranny of Tory courts in nullifying acts of Parliament. It was to prevent them from depriving citizens of their life, liberty, or property except in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by Parliament.

It is patent had it been intended by the framers of the Constitution that the Court was to have the authority to nullify acts of Congress, the power would not only have been specifically delegated to it but they would never have specifically delegated to Congress the power to deny to the Court the jurisdiction to so do, as is done in unequivocal language in section 2 of article III.

There is nothing that so completely dispels the general impression that the Supreme Court in its decisions are not actuated by their own economic and political views as an examination of the cases in which they have assumed the authority to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional. At the time the now famous case of Marbury against Madison was decided in 1803, it is interesting to note that the judges who composed that Court were disciples of the Federalist Party, which was the exponent of the wealthy class of that day and time and who feared that the representatives of the people might enact laws detrimental to their interests. At the time this decision was handed down the Federalist Party had been defeated and the Democrats, under Jefferson, had come into control of the country. In this case President Adams had appointed Mr. Marbury a justice of the peace of the District of Columbia just before leaving the White House, and Marbury applied for a writ of habeas corpus to the Supreme Court to compel Mr. Madison, Mr. Jefferson's Secretary of State, to deliver to him his commission. Before the case was heard, the law authorizing the Supreme Court to issue a writ in such a case had been repealed, so that at the time the Supreme Court heard the case it had become a moot question, and the Court, under every rule of practice, should have dismissed the application; but the Court seized upon this opportunity in an ex-parte proceeding to get a precedent to hold an act of Congress unconstitutional for the purpose, no doubt, of using it as a precedent to hold any act of Congress unconstitutional which might be passed and that, in their opinion, would be detrimental to the moneyed interest.

In the next case in which an act of Congress was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, in order to do so it again acted contrary to the fixed rule of long settled practice. This was in the notorious Dred Scott case, decided in 1857. When this case reached the Court, it held that the lower court had no jurisdiction. Having so determined, under every rule of practice the case should have been dismissed. But by a divided court it seized upon the opportunity to hold the Missouri Compromise Act of 1820 unconstitutional, and this in the face of the Constitution as it then existed and in violation of the rights of the free States, and held, in effect, that all the States were compelled to permit the institution of slavery. In order to accomplish this purpose they resorted to the fifth amendment of the Constitution, known as the due-process-of-law clause. This clause was placed in the English Bill of Rights in 1688 for the purpose of stopping the life-appointed Tory courts from depriving citizens of their life, liberty, and property, contrary to the procedure provided for them to follow under the laws enacted by Parliament. Up until this case the court had never intimated that this clause authorized them to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional.

Although the Supreme Court under Marshall as Chief Justice in 1803 first assumed the authority to hold an act of Congress unconstitutional, the decisions of the Court during his reign acceded to Congress far broader powers in legislation than is acceded in its more modern decisions. As time passed, the Court, grasping for more and more power, has restricted more and more the rights of Congress to legislate unless that legislation happens to be in accord with their economic and political views. In the case of McCulloch v. the State of Maryland (4 Wheat.), decided in 1819, in which an act of Congress, chartering and setting up what was known as the Bank of the United States, was attacked as being unconstitutional because there was no delegation of power in the Constitution for Congress to set up such a bank with the Government taking one-fourth of the stock, and this so-called Bank of the United States to be operated as a private institution for profit. Chief Justice Marshall, in delivering the opinion, had this to say:

> This could not be done by confining the choice of means to such narrow limits as not to leave it in the power of Congress to adopt any which might be appropriate, and which were conducive to the end. This provision is made in a constitution intended to endure for ages to come, and, consequently, to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs. To have prescribed the means by which Government should, in all future time, execute its powers would have been to change, entirely, the character of the instrument, and give it the properties of a legal code. It would have been an unwise attempt to provide, by immutable rules, for exigencies which, if foreseen at all, must have been seen dimly, and which can be best provided for as they occur. To have declared that the best means shall not be used, but those alone without which the power given would be nugatory, would have been to deprive the legislature of the capacity to avail itself of experience, to exercise its reason, and to accommodate its legislation to circumstances. If we apply this principle of construction to any of the powers of the Government, we shall find it so pernicious in its operation that we shall be compelled to discard it. * * *

The result of the most careful and attentive consideration bestowed upon this clause is that, if it does not enlarge, it cannot be construed to restrain the powers of Congress, or to impair the right of the legislature to exercise its best judgment in the selection of measures to carry into execution the constitutional powers of Government. If no other motive for its insertion can be suggested, a sufficient one is found in the desire to remove all doubts respecting the right to legislate on that vast mass of incidental powers which must be involved in the Constitution, if that instrument be not a splendid bauble. * * *

We think the sound construction of the Constitution must allow to the National Legislature that discretion, with respect to the means by which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution, which will enable that body to perform the high duties assigned to it, in the manner most beneficial to the people.

Where the law is not prohibited (that is, not specifically denied to the Court by the Constitution) and is really calculated to effect any of the objects entrusted to the Government, to undertake here to inquire into the degree of its necessity, would be to pass the line which circumscribes the judicial department, and to tread on legislative ground. This Court disclaims all pretensions to such a power.

In the Legislature of the Union alone, are all represented. The Legislature of the Union alone, therefore, can be trusted by the people with the power of controlling measures which concern all, in the confidence that it will not be abused.

It has been said by some that the Court in this case conceded broad powers to Congress because the legislation was in accord with their economic and political views, and earnestly desired by the major financiers of that day.

In keeping with the broad powers conceded to Congress in this case of McCulloch against The State of Maryland, decided in 1819, is the case of the Veazy Bank v. Fenno (75 U. S.) decided in 1869, where an act of Congress levying a tax of 10 percent upon the circulating notes of State banks and which, of course, was levied for the patent purpose of driving them out of circulation, Chief Justice Chase, in handing down the opinion of the Court sustaining the constitutionality of the act, used this language:

The power to tax may be exercised oppressively upon persons, but the responsibility of the legislature is not to the courts, but to the people by whom its members are elected.

In the so-called Child Labor Case (259 U. S.), decided in 1921, in which an act of Congress was attacked as being unconstitutional because it levied a tax of 10 percent on the net profits of employers who use children in mines and factories, and which act, of course, affected interstate commerce in affecting the price of products produced. Chief Justice Taft held this act unconstitutional, although it was stated in the act that it was "an act to provide revenue, and for other purposes." The act of Congress upheld in the Veazy Bank against Fenno case was attacked on the same ground on which this act was attacked. In the case of the Veazy Bank against Fenno the financiers were anxious that the law be held constitutional, that the circulation of notes of State banks be suppressed, while in the other the employers of children in mines and factories were anxious that the law be held unconstitutional. In this case Justice Clark dissented.

AGRICULTURAL IMPROVEMENT IN KANSAS

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, cash receipts from the sale of principal farm products in Kansas rose from $167,060,000 in 1932 to $265,371,000 in 1935, including $41,242,000 in rental and benefit payments. This is an increase of 59 percent. Cash receipts from Kansas represent approximately 97 percent of the total farm cash income from production.

Price changes on certain selected commodities, which brought about a considerable share of the increased cash receipts indicated above, are shown in table 1.

Commodity	Unit	Aug. 15, 1932	Mar. 15, 1933	Dec. 15, 1935

For the United States as a whole the yearly average price of all groups of farm products increased from 65 percent to 108 percent of the pre-war level during the period 1932–35, an increase of 66 percent. The low point occurred in March 1933, when prices were only 55 percent of the pre-war level, whereas in December 1935 they averaged 110 percent of that level. These figures do not include rental and benefit payments. The gain in exchange value of farm products per unit was somewhat less than the gain in farm prices, since prices farmers pay for commodities used in living and production also advanced about 17 percent during the period. The exchange value per unit of farm products increased from 61 percent of the pre-war level in 1932 to 86 percent in 1935, a gain of about 41 percent.

FARM REAL-ESTATE APPRECIATION

A new appreciation of farm real estate in Kansas has been one result of increased farm income. Voluntary sales and trades of farms increased from 11.6 per thousand for the year ending March 15, 1933, to 16.6 per thousand for the year ending March 15, 1935. During the same period the number of forced farm sales per thousand declined from 61.1 to 48. For the first time since 1920 the decline in value of farm real estate halted in the year ending March 1, 1933, when it stood at a low of 70, the State average value from 1912 to 1914 being 100. From this low of 70 in 1933 the estimated value per acre of farm real estate rose to 73 for the year ending March 1, 1935.

IMPROVED LABOR CONDITIONS ON KANSAS FARMS

On January 1, 1933, the demand for farm labor in Kansas was 57 percent below normal, and the supply was 41 percent above normal. At this time farm wage rates per person, with board, were $16.75 per month. Three years later on January 1, 1936, the farm-labor supply was normal. Demand was only 41 percent below normal; that is, it had improved 37 percent in the 3-year period. Farm wage rates per person stood at $20.25 per month with board, having advanced 21 percent above their 1933 level.

SOIL-CONSERVATION PRACTICES UNDER A. A. A.

Adjustment measures enabled Kansas farmers in 1935 to take more than 2,000,000 acres of land out of the production of corn and wheat, which deplete the soil or expose it to erosion, and to put much of that acreage into the production of erosion-preventing and soil-improving crops such as alfalfa, bluegrass, soybeans, clover, and lespedeza. Contracts under the Agricultural Adjustment Act specifically mentioned "erosion-preventing and soil-improving" crops as among those which might be planted on the contracted acreage.

A marked trend toward increased hay and sorghum acreage for forage is apparent in Kansas. According to the Bureau of the Census the acreage devoted to all hay and sorghums for forage increased 28 percent from 2,769,033 acres in 1929 to 3,546,204 acres in 1934.

DAIRY CATTLE DISEASE ERADICATION

Milk has been an important source of farm income in Kansas. For the past few years about $25,000,000 annually has been returned to milk producers.

Approximately $50,000,000 of Agricultural Adjustment Administration funds have been made available for use in the country as a whole in eradicating cattle diseases, primarily bovine tuberculosis, Bang's disease, and mastitis. This work is being done in cooperation with the Bureau of Animal Industry. As of December 31, 1935, some 815,000 cattle in Kansas had been given the tuberculin test and approximately 79,300 the agglutination test for Bang's disease. Of the $245,000 allocated for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis in this State, $238,955.53 had been expended in operation expenses and indemnities as of December 31, 1935. Kansas was allocated $450,000 for the eradication of Bang's disease, and of this amount indemnities and operating expenses as of December 31 last totaled $366,081.

EXTENT OF FARMER PARTICIPATION IN PROGRAMS

From the inauguration of the adjustment programs in 1933 through January 6, 1936, a total of 414,053 crop adjustment contracts signed by Kansas farmers had been accepted by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. Of this number of contracts, 273,025 were wheat, 139,878 corn-hog, 755 sugar beet, 243 cotton, and 152 tobacco.

Four referenda among producers were held in Kansas during the continuation of the agricultural adjustment program. During the first two weeks of October 1934 corn-hog producers were asked whether they favored an adjustment program for 1935. In this referendum, returns showed that 17,429 contract signers favored a 1935 program, while 19,985 opposed. In the Bankhead referendum, conducted on December 14, 1934, to decide upon the applicability of the Bankhead Act to the 1935–36 cotton crop, 83 votes were cast in the State, of which 53 favored application of the act. A Nation-wide wheat referendum was held on May 25, 1935, in which producers were asked: "Are you in favor of a wheat production adjustment program to follow the present one, which expires with the 1935 crop year?" In Kansas, 82,059 votes were cast by producers, of which 71,768, or 87.5 percent, favored a program and 10,291 votes opposed. The last referendum in Kansas was that conducted on October 26, 1935, in which corn-hog producers were asked whether they favored a corn-hog program for 1936. Official returns indicated that 41,811 producers favored such a program, while 6,997 opposed.

RENTAL AND BENEFIT PAYMENTS

As of December 31, 1935, rental and benefit payments disbursed among cooperating producers in this State from the beginning of the program totaled $86,755,192.42. Of this amount, cotton farmers received $6,529.28, wheat growers $64,646,607.32, tobacco producers $18,417.44, corn-hog raisers $21,858,170.77, and sugar-beet producers $225,467.61.

Funds to provide these rental and benefit payments were raised through processing taxes. As of December 31, 1935, processing and related tax collections at points in Kansas aggregated $27,093,126.34. Processing taxes were collected through the medium of first processors, or converters of the raw products—millers, packers, cotton and tobacco manufacturers—wherever these processing establishments were located. They were paid by consumers throughout the Nation, wherever the processed products were sold.

THE DROUGHT EMERGENCY

Kansas was one of the Midwestern States severely affected by the drought of 1934. In this emergency A. A. A. rental and benefit payments, calculated on the farmers' production during a previous base period rather than upon the current year's production, served as a form of crop insurance. For their 1934 corn crop, reduced to 10,576,000 bushels by the drought, Kansas farmers received only $77,000 at the market; but their rental and benefit payments brought their cash income from the 1934 corn crop to $6,226,000. This was only 20 percent less than they received for their 1932 crop, amounting to 136,197,000 bushels, which was more than 12 times as large.

In 1934 drought threatened Kansas farmers with the loss of thousands of cattle and sheep by thirst and starvation. On June 19, 1934, the Emergency Appropriation Act was approved. It allotted $525,000,000 to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration for financing a drought program to relieve distress in certain areas of the United States. The object of the program was (1) to maintain the foundation for a balanced or diversified farming system in the drought areas, (2) to preserve animals or herds of high-producing quality, (3) to relieve some of the financial load carried by both borrower and lender, and (4) to perform these tasks quickly, efficiently, and economically. The purchase and disposition of cattle was conducted jointly by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the Bureau of Animal Industry, the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation, and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration through the Kansas Emergency Relief Corporation, all cooperating with the Kansas State Agricultural Extension Service. Cooperating with the Bureau of Animal Industry inspectors the Drought Relief Service bought drought-threatened cattle. On August 8, Kansas was designated as an emergency-drought area. Estimates placed the number of distressed Kansas cattle at some 750,000 head. To relieve this situation approximately 530,000 head of cattle, sheep, and goats were purchased under the emergency livestock purchase program at a cost to the Federal Government of about $7,650,000.

In the seed-purchase program the A. A. A. acquired about 18,000,000 bushels of grain for seed in the Nation's drought-stricken areas. The cost to the Government of purchasing and selling this seed amounted to about $19,000,000. The seed later offered for sale was accumulated to meet an emergency and was intended to supplement rather than to supplant locally obtainable supplies. In Kansas alone more than $150,000 were spent in this work. From the sale of 105,000 bushels of seed and screenings to about 27 counties in Kansas under this program approximately $78,850 was received. In addition to the seed-conservation work, about 500 carloads of feed were shipped to Kansas during the emergency.

FARMERS' MONEY GOES TO TOWN

The extent to which increased farm income during the past 3 years enabled farmers to increase their purchases of city-made goods is reflected in several ways.

New automobile registrations in Kansas during the period 1932–35 have been as follows:

1932	17,900
1933	28,500
1934	40,100
1935	59,250

The increase from 1932 to 1935 was 231 percent.

According to Automobile Facts and Figures, a publication of the Automobile Manufacturers' Association, the 1934 retail automobile sales gain in Kansas was greatest in small towns and on farms. From 1933 to 1934 new passenger-car registrations on farms and in towns under 10,000 increased 50 percent, whereas in towns over 10,000 the increase was 18 percent.

New automobile purchases among other things meant an increased gasoline consumption. Consumption rose from 350,554,000 gallons in 1932 to 378,781,000 in 1934, and to 409,941,000 in 1935. From 1932 to 1935, therefore, the increase amounted to approximately 17 percent.

Sales of new, ordinary paid-up life insurance in Kansas increased 13.5 percent from $53,645,000 in 1933 to $60,858,000 in 1935.

Another index of increased business activity, resulting in part from renewed farm purchasing power, is debits to individual accounts. Monthly statements issued by the Federal Reserve System indicate that debits to individual accounts increased greatly from 1933 to 1935. For 1933 debits in the Kansas City district amounted to $7,875,224,000. Preliminary figures indicate that for 1935 they increased to $10,910,670,000, or 38.5 percent over the 1933 figure.

THE PREVAILING WAGE AND RELIEF WORKERS

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, in every relief bill for the past 6 years I have fought for the prevailing wage. I have been criticized and politically chastised for so doing. I believe in the prevailing wage and I have voted against relief bills which did not contain it. In times gone by there were only a few of us who dared to speak in its behalf. But that fight for a principle has shown results. In the last relief bill passed this month we were able to place an amendment in the bill providing for the prevailing rate of pay. I worked and voted for that amendment as an entering wedge toward the prevailing wage. There is a great distinction between the "rate" and the "wage." To increase the rate of pay per hour and then cut the hours of the men on relief until his weekly wage remains as it was before does not help the man on relief or business generally. We need both the rate and the wage.

I have opposed always, to the full extent of my ability, the relief practice of paying the prevailing profit to those who supply materials for relief work and at the same time paying the starvation wage to the relief worker. If the relief worker is to have the starvation wage, then we should pay also the starvation profit to the materialman. It is not fair nor just nor in accordance with American ideals to discriminate between the earnings on money invested and the earnings on labor invested.

I am opposed to our present relief system of paying these people on relief merely enough to keep body and soul together. I am opposed to the system whereby we pay them for 1 week's work just enough so that they may exist and be alive to work another week for a bare existence wage. Under this system the worker on relief becomes little more than a governmental serf. The freedom of which we boast in this country does not mean being dependent upon a Federal agency or a relief supervisor for a meager pittance to keep body and soul together. Under our relief system a man becomes a slave to the fight for bread, and the power that gives him bread holds over him and his loved ones the whip of hunger, from which it is hopeless to escape.

I listen day after day to talk here in Congress about rugged individualism. Where is there any chance for people on relief to exercise rugged individualism? The only kind of individualism they can exercise is a starving individualism, and when they attempt to exercise that they and their families die of the most excruciatingly terrible disease known to man—the pangs of hunger.

People must eat and wear clothes and have fires to keep them warm. We of America have always believed that they are entitled to even more than that. We have believed in churches and lodges and comfortably furnished homes, in education and minor luxuries for everyone. Relief should be only a temporary proposition with only one object in view—the object of maintaining the unemployed and destitute until they can obtain employment in private industry. For that reason private industry should be considered in any relief program, and the ultimate objective of placing the relief worker on a sound economic basis in private industry should be kept always in mind.

The prosperity of the Nation cannot be restored until we restore the purchasing power of the consuming public. We cannot restore that purchasing power while we keep such a vast army as that of relief on a security wage. The men and women on relief do the same kind and class of work as men and women in private industry, but in private industry we pay them a full wage and on relief a security wage. This security wage is misnamed. It is not a security wage because it does not secure anything. It does not secure the purchasing power necessary to bring back prosperity. It does not secure a market for the farmer or the manufacturer, for these millions must have money to purchase their produce or product. It does not secure payment of doctors or hospital bills. It does not secure the payment of life-insurance premiums. It does not secure the education of children or a decent standard of living for American labor. It does not provide a purchasing power sufficient to enable the vast mass of people to live above a bare existence plane. We have progressed since 1932. Purchasing power has increased. How much more could it increase if we provided a prevailing weekly wage for the people on relief and thereby secure all the things I have just enumerated?

There are men who are like the Bourbon kings of whom it was said, "They forgot nothing and they learned nothing." These men who like to call themselves "leading industrialists" have always contended for low wages. They always will. They are the men who for their immediate personal monetary gain would, like the Bourbon kings, plunge a whole economic system into disaster, forgetting that the disaster will eventually take them and their kind into the debacle.

The maximum wage which can be paid to labor on relief in my district of Indiana is $11 per week. Where is there any purchasing power left for a family of five after the butcher, grocer, and baker are paid with such a wage as this? Mr. William D. Anderson, president of the Bibb Manufacturing Co., addressed a Sunday rally of working people on October 1, 1931. Mr. Anderson figured a budget for a working man's family of four. He suggested that the family live on 24 pounds of flour, 8 pounds of potatoes, 4 pounds of lard, and 1 peck of meal, and that they purchase it all by careful buying for $1.39. In 1930, while Mr. Anderson's company was laying off workers and reducing their wages, it paid its regular dividend and distributed $5,000,000 as a bonus to its stockholders. The present relief system is based upon the same theory as Mr. Anderson has—all for money invested. Nothing for labor invested. We should cease to accept the policies of such men as Mr. Anderson in our conduct toward relief workers.

Neither have we any need in America today for the theories of Dr. Thomas Nixon Carver whom Chairman Fletcher, of the National Republican Committee, appointed as the head of the 50 "brain trust" professors employed by the Republican Party for the coming campaign. Dr. Carver, while making a statement lauding the practices of Mussolini and Hitler, advanced the theory of doing away with the unemployed of the Nation through birth control. The birth control was to be brought about, according to Dr. Carver, by limitation of marriage to those who can afford to buy and maintain an automobile.

Neither the Government, the Nation, nor the unemployed on relief need such theories as those of Industrialist Anderson or Republican Brain Truster Carver. What we need is the restoration of purchasing power and not its curtailment. What we need is the return of prosperity which can best be accomplished by payment of the prevailing wage to relief workers and all other workers who are also the great consumers of the Nation.

Under the present relief system we tax private business to maintain the unemployed but we do not pay the unemployed sufficient to allow them by their purchasing power to make private business prosperous.

If business stagnates the taxing assets that provide for relief are destroyed and both business and relief die.

THE GENESIS OF T. V. A.—THE CONSTITUTIONAL AND ECONOMIC BASES OF T. V. A.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, the Federal corporation known as Tennessee Valley Authority is not an emergency measure. When I entered the Congress on March 4, 1921, the question "What shall be done with Muscle Shoals?" was a live and highly controversial problem. This issue was battled back and forth continuously until its final settlement on May 18, 1933. As this is the end of my term as a Member of the House of Representatives, I feel justified in calling attention to some history connected with the origin of T. V. A. Much of that history is recited in remarks of my own, found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 9, 1931. I call special attention to the fact that when Senate Joint Resolution 46 of the Seventieth Congress came to the House of Representatives and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, while the same was under consideration, I offered an amendment by way of substitute for the entire text of the Senate joint resolution, and the language of my amendment is found on page 2037 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 12, 1931, and subsequent pages.

After consideration of the whole matter by the subcommittee, the subcommittee modified in some verbal particulars the language of my amendment and reported the same to the House of Representatives as a substitute for the Senate joint resolution. The House adopted the substitute, and the bill went to conference. The conferees, by House Report No. 1844 of the Seventieth Congress, first session, reported agreement, and that report shows that the conferees agreed upon and adopted substantially the language, the set-up, and corporate organization of the House substitute for the Senate Joint Resolution 46. The Senate agreed to the same conference report, and when the bill went to President Coolidge, he gave it a "pocket veto."

In the next Congress both Houses agreed to a bill almost identical in all respects to the bill which had been agreed upon in the Seventieth Congress, and when this went before President Hoover, he vetoed it in a very vigorous and energetic message. No substantial progress was made in the Seventy-second Congress.

Upon the coming in of the Seventy-third Congress, with President Roosevelt in the White House and a safe Democratic majority in each of the two Houses, it was a foregone conclusion that the Muscle Shoals problem would be settled somehow. Accordingly, on March 9, 1933, Senator NORRIS introduced Senate Joint Resolution 4, and by reference to same, it will appear that he adopted the same corporate organization with substantially the same powers as those included in the bills which had twice passed the House and Senate previously, one of which had received a pocket veto by President Coolidge and the next an affirmative veto by President Hoover. On the same day, March 9, 1933, I introduced in the House of Representatives H. R. 1672, wherein, for the first time, the name "Muscle Shoals" was changed to "Tennessee Valley Development Authority," and subsequently, for brevity, the word "Development" was dropped and the name "Tennessee Valley Authority" accepted.

So far as my memory and research show, this is the first time that the word "Authority" has been used in any Federal legislation to describe a governmental agency with corporate powers and functioning as an arm or agency of the Government. Furthermore, in my bill, H. R. 1672, there was the first proposal to confer upon the Tennessee Valley Authority the power to issue bonds in order to raise money to carry on its activities. I proposed authority to issue bonds aggregating $100,000,000. Later this was cut to $50,000,000. In 1935 another $50,000,000 authority was added, so the power now stands for T. V. A. to issue bonds aggregating $100,000,000, as was originally proposed by me.

On March 9, 1933, my good friend, the Honorable LISTER HILL, from Alabama, introduced H. R. 1609, from which it will appear that he followed substantially the corporate structure and arrangement of power proposed to be conferred by the bills previously vetoed by Presidents Coolidge and Hoover. Subsequently, on April 11, 1933, three identical bills were introduced in the House of Representatives, drawn after frequent conferences between Representative HILL and myself, one bearing the name of Representative Almon of Alabama, one the name of Representative HILL, and one the name of myself. These bills bore the numbers 4859, 4860, and 4861, respectively. These bills were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and, after prolonged hearings and consideration, various amendments were made and a new bill incorporating the amendments adopted in committee was introduced, upon my suggestion and request, by Representative HILL of Alabama, the ranking majority member, and this bill was ordered to be reported to the House of Representatives with a recommendation that it be passed, and I was instructed to make the report for the committee. I respectfully refer those interested in conserving our water-power resources to that report, and I quote the following brief extract from that report as indicating the fundamental economic philosophy back of the whole proposal:

> When this Tennessee Valley development shall have progressed sufficiently for us to learn great lessons as to how best to serve the public, then development will follow in other great interstate and international watercourses. Undoubtedly there are several great areas in all sections of the country that will ultimately be developed by the application of the same principles and policies.
> It is the simple, fundamental American, Jeffersonian, Roosevelt ian proposition of preserving and using for all the people those great sources of wealth conferred by the prolific hand of God upon the masses of the people who settled in this new continent, cleared its fields, opened its mines, navigated its rivers, built its cities, highways, and railroads, established its independence by their sacrifices and sufferings, have maintained its independence in war, and defended its honor at home and abroad at the peril of their lives. In fact, millions have suffered in war, and many more millions have sacrificed and struggled in peace throughout our 150 years to bring this Nation where it is. Something is due these voiceless millions and more is due to the unborn millions. By this measure for the development of the Tennessee Valley, we, the representatives of the dead, of the living, and of the unborn, are fulfilling our pledges to them all, and seeking to make real the fundamental principle of popular government—that of the greatest good to the greatest number.

This bill was passed by the House of Representatives, and when it went to the Senate the Senate struck out all the House language and inserted by way of amendment the language of a Senate bill introduced by Senator NORRIS. Upon this issue there was a laborious conference, but the bill remained substantially as it passed the House, and both Houses approved the report of the conferees; and thus was enacted into law, as Public, No. 17, of the Seventy-third Congress, when the same was approved by President Roosevelt on May 18, 1933, the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933.

On March 18, 1935, I introduced as H. R. 6793, a bill which was submitted to me by the directors of T. V. A. as containing desirable amendments to the act of 1933. This bill failed to meet the approval of a majority of the Committee on Military Affairs, and the same, together with a Senate bill which had passed the Senate and had been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, was tabled in the Committee on Military Affairs. Being unable by sufficient number of votes to take the said bills from the table for further consideration on June 18, after conferences with many members of the Committee on Military Affairs, and in the hope of obtaining desirable legislation, I introduced H. R. 8527, and the same was long and seriously and carefully considered by the committee in executive session. The same having been amended by the committee in many respects in order to bring a bill before the House without having a long list of committee amendments, I was instructed to introduce a new bill incorporating the committee amendments, which I did on June 24, 1935, as H. R. 8632. When this bill was heard in the House of Representatives, numerous amendments were made thereto, and it was then sent to the Senate. In the Senate, the language of the bill was stricken out and the language of a bill which had previously passed the Senate, as before mentioned, was inserted as an amendment by way of substitute. Upon this issue there was a conference, and the conferees finally agreed upon the provisions of a bill which was reported to the House of Representatives and the Senate, respectively. Both Houses agreed to the report of the conferees, and the bill was signed by President Roosevelt on August 31, 1935, as Public, No. 412, Seventy-fourth Congress. After such approval of the conference reports by the House of Representatives, I was informed by Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, by conversation over the telephone, that he greatly approved of the provisions of the bill thus finally worked out after long and tedious labors in the committee, in both Houses, and in conference.

Dr. Morgan, in that conversation, expressed his renewed confidence in parliamentary institutions, and stated that he regarded the bill which the conferees had agreed upon as an improvement upon the bill which he and the other directors had originally drafted and submitted with the request that the same be enacted into law. Dr. Morgan was eminently justified in his comment upon the ultimate wisdom of parliamentary government. It is true that legislation under our constitutional system seems slow and, therefore, seems inefficient to many not acquainted with its processes and its benefits. To every truly Jeffersonian Democrat, to every person thoroughly grounded in his heart and mind in the principles of Anglo-Saxon liberty, and in the conviction that there are two sides to all questions, and that out of debate and controversy, honest men will finally arrive at a wise solution, the statement by Dr. Morgan is not surprising. Since T. V. A. is not an emergency measure, it was highly desirable and, I believe, ultimately highly beneficial, that a full and complete discussion of all phases of the problem should be had, and that all persons having an adverse interest should be fully heard. If the bill had been rushed through by any tactics which its opponents could have fairly described as "steam roller" methods, then resentment would have been general and deep, and the fate of T. V. A. would have been imperiled, but since the matter was thoroughly ventilated, every individual "had his day in court" to voice his views either of approval or disapproval. Since the matter was openly, fairly, and patiently deliberated upon for many weeks all factions seem now fairly well satisfied and seem to accept the result as final. In other words, T. V. A. seems more solidly fixed in the convictions and confidence of an overwhelming majority of the Congress and of the people than ever before.

CONSTITUTIONAL JUSTIFICATION FOR T. V. A.

In the report which I filed by the instruction of the committee on H. R. 8632, being Report No. 1372, of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, I used the language hereinafter quoted as expressive of the fundamental philosophy upon which T. V. A. is predicated. I had previously in the report called attention to the constitutional basis for T. V. A. as resting upon the broad Federal powers of national defense and of regulating interstate commerce, and had assured the Congress of our desire to restrict our proposals to what we felt could and would be finally sustained by the Supreme Court as a reasonable and proper exercise by the Congress of the power to provide for the common defense and to regulate interstate commerce by the improvement of navigable streams and the control of flood waters within navigable streams. Upon these broad constitutional bases must rest T. V. A. Upon these as foundations we have built expressly and deliberately incidental matters, such as the generation and sale of surplus electric energy, made desirable for the sake of economy and efficiency, which grow out of and rest solidly and solely upon these powers of national defense and interstate commerce.

If the basis be constitutional, the superstructure will be sustained.

We think that no court can decide a constitutional question by calculating the percentage of direct constitutional power and of indirect, implied power contained in a Federal enterprise. Therefore, we feel that the Supreme Court when it comes to consider the T. V. A. as a whole, just as it did when it considered the Wilson Dam in the Ashwander case, will hold that Congress had as much right in the exercise of its power and discretion to construct the Joe Wheeler Dam, and the Pickwick Landing Dam, and the Norris Dam, and the Chickamauga Dam, and the Guntersville Dam, and any other dam, as it had originally to erect the Wilson Dam. The fact that the Wilson Dam was started during the World War for the purpose of increasing the supply of munitions and explosives for our armies during that war is not the test of its constitutionality. Congress has the same power to provide for the national defense in advance of war and during the prevalence of peace, that it has during a war itself. In fact, if Congress waited to exercise its power to provide for the common defense until war broke out, it would often be too late and the power would thus be exercised in vain. We may be as near war in 1936 as we were in 1916. The Constitution expressly gives to the Congress the power "to raise and support armies" and "to provide and maintain a navy." These powers are not limited to the existence of war. In fact, the powers were conferred largely to prevent war by warning other nations, through the existence of adequate defense establishments, that attacks upon this Nation would be futile.

GENERATION OF ELECTRIC ENERGY NATURALLY INCIDENT TO HIGH DAMS

By the same token of reasoning, Congress continuously has the power to regulate interstate commerce by making navigable streams more accessible to commerce. A necessary incident to regulating stream flow in navigable streams is flood control. A reasonable, essential, and Constitutional means of managing and operating dams built to promote navigation and to regulate stream flow and to control flood waters, is the installation of water wheels and of electric generators connected with said water wheels for the generation of electric energy. Having generated this most valuable commodity, it is undoubtedly the power of the Congress to provide for the sale of such surplus power as may not be needed.

The generation of power being a natural, physical incident to high dams, such generation of power must follow as a legal, reasonable, and proper incident to the basic, Constitutional power. The State governments could not install any electric generating machinery in a dam built and operated by the Federal Government. Therefore, either the Federal Government must use this valuable power or otherwise it would be completely wasted. This power being worth many millions of dollars a year from all the dams above enumerated, common sense, which is the basis of all law, even of Constitutional law, dictates that Congress shall provide for the use and sale of such electric energy.

POWER TO SECURE NATIONAL DEFENSE EXISTENT DURING PEACE AND WAR

It must be admitted that Congress has as much power to provide for the common defense during peace as it has during war. It is a continuing power. In like manner, the Congress always has the power to regulate interstate commerce. Therefore, Congress has as much power now to build the Joe Wheeler Dam, and the Norris Dam, and other dams, as it had in 1918 to build the Wilson Dam. The Supreme Court cannot fairly say that Congress has the power to build one dam in order to promote national defense, but has no power to build two or three dams, or four dams, to promote the national defense.

It is entirely thinkable that the time may come when every kilowatt of energy generated in the entire T. V. A. system will be needed during a war to provide the munitions and instrumentalities whereby to carry on war. Many of the mineral products necessary for national defense lie close to the dams of the Tennessee Valley. Since Congress has the power to build such number of dams as it may see fit in the interest of national defense and to promote interstate commerce up and down the Tennessee River, and since common sense would not countenance the economic waste of not utilizing the power generated at the several dams, I submit that this piece of permanent legislation setting up T. V. A. will stand the test of its constitutionality when the 18 cases recently inaugurated in the courts below shall finally reach the Supreme Court. While the Court expressly restricts its decision in the Ashwander case to the facts of that particular case, the logic of the Ashwander case would be the same if the Joe Wheeler Dam were now under consideration by the Court. If Congress declared, as it has done in the act of May 18, 1933, that the purpose of building these dams is to improve the navigability of the Tennessee River and to provide for the national defense, then the Supreme Court cannot deny this solemn declaration of fact by Congress. The Supreme Court cannot deny to the Congress the power to do what the Constitution expressly gives it the power to do. The Supreme Court cannot declare that the means chosen by the Congress for the purpose of promoting interstate commerce and for providing for the national defense are inappropriate to the end sought. The appropriateness of the agency and means is a matter for congressional discretion.

CONGRESS AS TRUSTEE OF WATER POWER IN NAVIGABLE STREAMS

I herewith insert that brief extract from the report dated June 26, 1935, on H. R. 8632, above referred to:

For more than 20 years both of the major political parties have repeatedly pledged themselves to the people of the Nation to accomplish conservation of our natural resources for the benefit of all the people, and undoubtedly our potential water power is our greatest natural resource. Like the air through which every man may fly his aircraft, and like the seas upon which every man may sail his seacraft, so the great rivers and lakes are the gift of God to all men in the aggregate, and no man may build a fence around them and claim them exclusively for his own use and for his own enrichment. The Government of all the people must be the trustee of all the people for the protection, the development, and the use in behalf of all the people of these great interstate navigable streams.

All the people who settled this then newly discovered country and their descendants, and all the people who have labored to develop this country and their descendants, and all the people who have fought and suffered to set free and to preserve this Nation and their descendants, have a joint proprietary interest in these great natural resources. Therefore, the Congress as the constitutional agent of the people, has throughout the history of our Nation recognized its obligation to improve these channels of interstate commerce wherever possible, and in these latter years since the uses of electricity have become so numerous and so vital to the well-being of our people, both in cities and in manufacturing centers and in rural sections, Congress has advanced and must continue with the passing years to advance in the discharge of this duty. As trustee for all these people, Congress must see that they receive the greatest benefits possible under the Constitution from the development of this great natural resource.

The power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce in navigable streams is absolute, exclusive, and plenary. So is the power to provide for the common defense. Under these two sovereign powers, if Congress can construct one dam, Wilson Dam, with power-house and navigation locks, what court can say that two such dams, or three or more, are beyond its power? The power being admitted the extent of its exercise is discretionary.

LOW DAMS OR HIGH DAMS IN DISCRETION OF CONGRESS

Believing that the soundness of the reasoning hereinbefore advanced, to wit, that if Congress had the power to construct the dam and power-house at the Wilson Dam during the war, then under the same war power it can in its discretion construct the Joe Wheeler Dam before the outbreak of war, and if it can construct the Joe Wheeler Dam, then it can construct the Pickwick Landing Dam and the Norris Dam and other dams mentioned cannot be fairly and logically disputed. In like manner, Congress in the exercise of its discretion can decide whether or not in aid of navigation it should build low dams without the development of power or high dams of which the development of power is a natural and inevitable consequence according to the law of physics. Since Congress can properly construct either low dams or high dams, and since the production of power incident to a high dam follows according to the law of nature, then the mere insertion of a water wheel to utilize the power which would otherwise be utterly wasted and connecting that water wheel with an electric generator are proper, fair, and reasonable incidents to the building of a high dam. Furthermore, the building of the high dam and the installation of a water wheel and its final connection with an electric generator have been pronounced by Congress in its acts of May 18, 1933, and of August 31, 1935, to be proper preparatory steps incident to the power of national defense, just as the establishment of peacetime of an arsenal or a munitions factory or building barracks for peacetime soldiers may properly be referred to the war-making power.

THE LIMITS OF CONSTITUTIONAL POWER IN SALE AND USE OF ELECTRICITY

But it may be fairly asked, where may this exercise of the war-making power and of regulating interstate commerce, through promoting navigation and flood control, end and cease to be a proper incident to the exercise of admitted constitutional powers? Undoubtedly the line must be drawn somewhere. Certainly it would be an invalid stretch of constitutional power to claim that Congress could go out and establish factories in order to utilize this electric power, and establish distributing plants for the sale to individual householders of this electric energy, or to operate blast furnaces, or a thousand other enterprises that would be regarded as strictly local and intrastate in character and connected with the ordinary business enterprises of the people, and not reasonably connected with the conduct of war or preparation for conducting war. I hold that a fair and reasonable and practical line of demarcation can be drawn at the end of a transmission line where electric energy is sold in wholesale quantities. The length of the transmission line must be variable and its maximum length is determined by the distance to which electric energy may be economically transmitted. The transmission line may be only a few hundred yards long, or may be 250 miles long, all depending on the circumstances. Undoubtedly, and under any circumstances, there is a transmission line from the generator in the power-house out to the switchboard, where the energy is metered to the wholesale purchaser. If, in order to find a purchaser at a fair market price, and to render the Government agency independent of the monopoly control by some private power company, T. V. A. should build transmission lines, then the T. V. A. may and should be allowed to send electric energy over such transmission lines to some point of wholesale delivery.

In this light, and remembering the practical, mechanical, and commercial situation by which the T. V. A. is confronted, such transmission lines for the wholesale delivery of electric energy are as much a part of the dam as are the water wheel and the generator and the switchboard. It would be futile and foolish to authorize the installation of a water wheel and of a generator as natural and physical incidents to the building of a high dam, and then, due to the economic and commercial situation, compel the T. V. A. to sell the electric energy to one buyer only and at a price to be dictated by that single buyer. At the end of the transmission line, whatever the length of that transmission line may be, I admit that the power of the Federal Government not only does cease but must cease and should cease. But the transmission lines, whatever their length, and the switchboards, and the generators, and the water wheels, and the high dams, all constitute integral and essential and inseparable parts of the proper constitutional projects to promote the national defense and to regulate interstate commerce by promoting navigation and exercising the power of flood control. Of course, flood control and navigation are natural, proper, and essential incidents to exercise of the constitutional power to regulate interstate commerce.

Congress has merely exercised its discretion as the means of providing for the common defense and of regulating interstate commerce.

A BUDGET ANNUALLY BALANCED

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle seem to have been having great difficulty in finding citizens from whom they can pluck an additional six-hundred-million-and-odd dollars annually in taxes. They have combed the list of potential taxpayers backward and forward only to find that group after group is already being taxed to the limit of their capacity to pay. It seems that it is a great deal easier to appropriate and spend money than it is to collect it. There is nothing new in this discovery, but it is nevertheless amusing and interesting that gentlemen who have such a profound belief in the magic of a planned economy which they can direct from Washington should have taken so long to learn such an elementary lesson.

For the sake of the record I should like to show what a paltry impression these anticipated new tax receipts will make upon the terrifying deficits which have been run up by an administration which promised to put "our own national house in order" (I am quoting from the President's inaugural address of Mar. 4, 1933), and make "the income balance outgo."

The Democratic platform of 1933 said—

We favor maintenance of the national credit by a Federal budget, annually balanced. * * *

The only annual balancing of the Budget that I have been able to discover has been in the annual promises which the President has made, each holding forth the hope that a balanced Budget was just around the corner.

Instead of income balancing outgo, here is what the official figures (taken from the President's own Budget message of Jan. 3, 1936, and the Secretary of the Treasury's testimony before the Senate Finance Committee on Apr. 30, 1936), show:

	Expenditures	Income	Deficit
Year ending June 30—
1934	$7,105,000,000	$3,116,000,000	$3,989,000,000
1935	7,375,000,000	3,800,000,000	3,575,000,000
1936 [1]	9,882,000,000	3,916,000,000	5,966,000,000
Total	24,362,000,000	10,832,000,000	13,530,000,000

[1] Estimated.

The new taxes contemplated by the legislation now before Congress will cover, it seems, only about one-tenth of the deficit for the current fiscal year. Put another way, in order to balance the Budget we should have to pass a tax bill levying 10 times what we propose to levy now.

I wonder if we can ever succeed in "putting our own national house in order" so long as the Congress has to rely on the type of estimates which the high priests of economic planning have been giving us. The present administration promised adherence to its party platform, which advocated "a Federal Budget annually balanced on the basis of accurate executive estimates." How has this promise been performed? I can name offhand five separate estimates that have been made as to the deficit for the year ending June 30, 1936. Here they are:

On Jan. 3, 1934, President Roosevelt estimated	No deficit
On Jan. 3, 1935, President Roosevelt estimated	$4,529,000,000
On Jan. 3, 1936, President Roosevelt estimated	3,234,000,000
On Apr. 25, 1936, President Roosevelt estimated	3,000,000,000
On Apr. 30, 1936, Secretary Morgenthau estimated	5,966,000,000

I submit that a promise of no deficit for 1936, compared with a performance of nearly a $6,000,000,000 deficit is, on its face, conclusive evidence of a recklessness in finance that can only lead, if the public allows it to continue, to the very danger which Franklin D. Roosevelt pointed out in his message to Congress on March 10, 1935, when he said:

> Too often in recent history, liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policies. We must avoid this danger.

PROMOTE PEACE AND DISCOURAGE WAR BY PREVENTING WAR PROFITS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my own remarks, I am expressing my pleasure at learning that on yesterday Senator TOM CONNALLY, of Texas, on behalf of the Finance Committee, announced that a report from that committee would soon be filed upon H. R. 5529, which passed the House more than a year ago.

Mr. Speaker, I have a very personal interest in this bill. When I was elected to Congress in 1920, one of the principal objects emphasized by me in my campaign was to assist in preventing a repetition of the disgraceful and outrageous profiteering that was practiced during the World War, whereby many thousands of persons became millionaires at the expense of the Government and their fellow citizens. When I entered Congress I immediately began taking every practicable and reasonable step to accomplish this result.

It is true that I did not favor the Capper-Johnson bill, because it contemplated a complete socialization of all of our industry and property and a complete militarization of all our people. I was afraid that if we ever "scrambled the eggs" in this way during war we would be unable to "unscramble" them during the subsequent peace. But I believe it is practicable and feasible to prevent profiteering without destroying our competitive and capitalistic system. For many years I worked to build up sentiment along practical and sane lines. I believe that I was indirectly responsible, by the means aforesaid, for there being planks in the Republican and Democratic platforms favoring legislation to prevent profiteering in time of war. In the same way I feel some responsibility for having inspired and assisted in the legislation setting up the War Policies Commission. I was active in the hearings by that Commission as a member thereof until I was suddenly taken sick on March 17, 1931. In the winter of 1931 and 1932 I was active in assisting to prepare the report of the Commission. I earnestly sponsored H. R. 5529 in the House of Representatives and have been anxiously awaiting action in the Senate. My very great respect for a coordinate body has deterred me from entering into any active campaign for the enactment of this bill by the gentlemen of the Senate, whose responsibility it now is.

Mr. Speaker, I will not be a Member of the next Congress. I am not a candidate for reelection. If I could see this legislation to prevent profiteering enacted into law during the present Congress, it would make me an exceedingly happy man. Of course, that is no reason why the gentlemen of the Senate should hasten legislation along this line, just to please me, but it is proper for me to express my very great interest in the legislation now pending before them.

Mr. Speaker, we are appropriating approximately $1,000,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, for both the Army and the Navy. That sum is not too large; but for us to neglect an agency of preparedness of equal value to the Government in the conduct of war, such as legislation to prevent profiteering and to mobilize industry, when such legislation would not cost us a penny, seems to me strangely inconsistent.

Furthermore, our military and naval preparedness is for the purpose of promoting peace. We have no offensive designs against any other people or nation. We merely desire to be reasonably prepared to prevent aggression upon us by other nations. If other nations know we are prepared to defend ourselves, then they will not encroach upon our rights or violate our policies or invade us. In this way, sane and adequate preparedness on our part promotes and prolongs peace.

But if other nations know that we have legislation such as is contemplated by H. R. 5529, whereby all our industrial, financial, and economic resources will be instantly mobilized in time of war, and whereby profiteering will be prevented, so that our manpower will fight with more zeal and spirit, then such other nations will see that we are doubly prepared and will thus be more surely deterred from provoking war with us.

Therefore, a fit companion to the appropriation of $1,000,000,000 for defensive measures would be the enactment of H. R. 5529, which would be equivalent as a defense measure and as a deterrent of war to another billion dollars. If, therefore, we can get a billion dollars' worth of defense without the cost of one cent, we should take prompt, vigorous steps to accomplish that result, by the enactment of H. R. 5529.

Such legislation as is contained in H. R. 5529 has been the first and primary objective of the American Legion since its organization. Countless organizations—religious, fraternal, social, and otherwise—have endorsed the proposal. It is the well-nigh unanimous sentiment of the American people. If the Seventy-fourth Congress will enact H. R. 5529 into law, it will set up a monument to itself to which all future generations will point and to which the peace-loving and friendly peoples of all the civilized world will point as the beginning of a new era in human affairs, like unto the Declaration of Independence, like unto the Constitution of the United States, and like unto the great humanitarian measures that have been fostered and fathered by the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses.

Indicating the importance of this proposal to stop profiteering in time of war, I call attention to front-page dispatches appearing in all daily newspapers of December 13, 1934.

THE POSTMASTERSHIP PROBLEM

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, one of the most perplexing problems that a Congressman is called upon to solve is the selection of postmasters to be recommended to the President and the Postmaster General for appointment. Every Congressman will, I think, back me up in saying this.

It is often difficult to choose between three eligibles, all of whom have good ratings and are highly recommended by loyal friends. The choice must be made, however, and two of the eligibles—as well as several, perhaps, who failed to land in the eligible class and were rated below the three more fortunate aspirants—are certain to be more or less disappointed. Their friends will be disappointed also, and sometimes many of them are hard to reason with. Then the difficulty of appeasing the ineligibles is often greatest of all, for, as a rule, every candiate feels sure that he or she must have passed the examination.

As a matter of fact, I believe that the Civil Service Commission is very just and impartial in making ratings. Its staff and examiners have generally been in office under both parties and have adopted the policy of showing no favors and of giving percentages that are as accurate as is humanly possible. If a seeker after a postmastership is not listed as eligible by the Commission, it is a pretty safe bet that he or she should not be so listed—that the Commission has merely done its official duty in an entirely impersonal way.

I do not like to disappoint people. There are numerous instances when I think highly of several candidates and should be happy if I could appoint all of them—but that, we know, cannot be done. It would be well if aspirants and their supporters would realize this, take the matter philosophically, and understand that a Representative in recommending one or another person is seldom actuated by anything but the best of good will for the others. If they will mentally put themselves in the Congressman's position they will be less critical.

LABOR, IMMIGRATION, NATURALIZATION, AND VETERANS' BENEFITS

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to have had a part in the adoption of the many measures proposed by our President for the betterment of the workers of the United States.

President Roosevelt and the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses have been in entire sympathy with the laboring men and women of this country. Through the enactment of the Home Owners' Loan Act we saved thousands of their homes. The Federal guarantee of bank deposits has made their life savings secure. The Railroad Retirement Act will help to care for thousands of railroad workers who have reached the evening hour of life. The Wagner Labor Relations Act recognized the principle of collective bargaining so long fought for by the labor organizations of our Nation. The National Reemployment Service has assisted many thousands in finding gainful employment. The Civilian Conservation Corps has taken from the streets hundreds of thousands of sons of laborers and placed them in clean and healthful camps. The Social Security Act guarantees to our aged that their declining years will not be spent in poverty and suffering and sets up a system of unemployment insurance for the future. The Public Works Administration has provided employment for thousands. The apropriations for relief have given effect to the declaration of President Roosevelt that no one in the United States would starve.

In spite of the sincere and honest efforts that have been made, Mr. Speaker, the problem of unemployment has not yet been entirely solved.

THIRTY-HOUR WEEK BILL

By far the most insidious evil of our modern civilization is the appalling unemployment caused by the use of labor-saving machinery. Today cows are milked by machines. Cotton is picked by machine. One tractor pulls 24 plows and thousands of acres are plowed in one operation. Teletype machines supplant thousands of telegraph operators. The dial system does away with the need for hundreds of thousands of telephone operators. The ditch-digging machine, with a crew of 3 or 5 men, can do more work in 1 day than 100 men did before this piece of machinery was invented. These are only a few of the labor-saving devices that cause millions to be without work.

A leading manufacturer of motor cars in 1922 employed 55 men per car manufactured. In 1934 the same manufacturer turned out each car with the assistance of only 8 men. Another manufacturer of automobiles required an average of 4,664 man-hours to turn out an automobile in 1912. In 1923 this manufacturer required only 813 man-hours to produce an automobile. A new furnace for heating metal has increased production per man two and two-thirds times. Forging by machine doubled production per man. A machine for the manufacture of pressed-steel frames operated by one man displaced the labor of 175 men.

We are proud of the inventive genius of our people. We glory that of all the nations on earth, ours has the capacity for producing more goods than almost all the other nations by their combined efforts can produce. During the era of industrial progress the greatness of American industry has been proclaimed throughout the world. But, Mr. Speaker, a social and economic system founded to meet the needs of a society that knew nothing of machines cannot meet the needs of a society that appears to be in danger of destruction by the machines it has invented. Changed conditions call for the adoption of new policies to meet the new conditions. Our enthusiasm for the benefits derived from improved machinery caused us to become unmindful of the hardships of those who toil with human hands. Society must progress; civilization must march forward with a never faltering step. But in that march of progress we cannot let only those take who have the power and let only those keep who can. We must make such modifications in our social and economic structure as will guarantee to the laborers of the United States a just share in the wealth they produce.

America cannot long continue economically half slave and half free. With the number of unemployed estimated at between 7,000,000 and 11,000,000, we find industrial production within striking distance of the peak reached in 1929. We have found that our industrial system, while making thousands of millionaires, made millions of paupers. Pay rolls in December 1934 were only about 60 percent of the total in 1926, but dividends and interest were 150 percent of their total in 1926. Even though the national income had declined by nearly 40 percent from 1926 to 1934, the income enjoyed by those who received dividends and interest was 50 percent higher than in 1926. In 1849 the wage earners' share in each dollar created by manufacture was 51 percent. Today the wage earners' share is only 36 percent. In other words, the share going to profits and overhead and other costs has increased from 49 percent to 64 percent over the 87-year period. On the other hand, due to improved machinery, between 1919 and 1933 the average worker's producing capacity almost doubled; production per worker per hour in our manufacturing industries increase 71 percent, while, as I have said, their share in each dollar created by manufacture dropped approximately 15 percent.

These brief illustrations clearly demonstrate that the machine has displaced the laborer and the laborer's share in the national income that has been lost to him is now going to the man who owns the machine. The result is an over-concentration of wealth in the hands of a very small percentage of our population.

The machine has displaced the man. Does the machine assume the burden of citizenship? Does it maintain the American home, the cornerstone of our civilization? Does the machine take over the burden of taxation? Does it consume the products of man as does the laborer? The inanimate machine, without soul, without intellect, has under our system become a monster that knows no God, grinding in its ever-turning wheels the hearts, ambitions, and ideals of millions of laborers. Are we to continue to permit this monster to be our master and destroy our civilization; or shall we by the adoption of enlightened and humanitarian legislation reduce the monster to a position of servitude in order that it may become an instrumentality serving the best interest of all the people? The American Congress will not shirk its duty. It will adopt a plan that strikes at the very heart of unemployment. This plan is embodied in the 30-hour workweek bill.

The 30-hour-week bill will guarantee to the worker a fair share of the wealth he produces. It will result in a more equitable distribution of the national income. Before the products of industry can be purchased the people must have money with which to buy. The wage earners of this country, including the farmers as wage earners, represent approximately 80 percent of our total ability to consume. The wage earners will buy the products of industry just as soon as they have the necessary purchasing power. The 30-hour-week bill by putting millions of idle workers in gainful employment will work untold benefit to the entire Nation by producing a tremendous increase in our national purchasing power.

The 30-hour-week bill provides briefly that all goods shipped in interstate commerce must be manufactured by plants employing laborers for no more than 6 hours in any one day and no more than 30 hours in any one week. The estimates based on the best available figures are that the adoption of the 30-hour workweek will create jobs immediately for some 3,200,000 workers. The reemployment of these workers will produce an enormous increase in demand for industrial products, and this demand with its cumulative effect over a period of time will lift production to levels never before possible. These new demands upon our producing and service industries will create more jobs and finally reemploy the millions of workers without jobs.

To secure the best possible results and assure the workers that their income will not be reduced with the corresponding reduction in hours, this bill makes it unlawful for any employer to reduce the prevailing wage rate. There are many who will undoubtedly attack this measure as unconstitutional. I urge the passage of this bill immediately. If it is found to be unconstitutional, I urge the immediate adoption of an amendment to our Constitution to give the Federal Government the power to deal with a problem of national concern.

Unless this measure is adopted machines will stay idle. Factories will remain closed. They do not produce simply for the sake of production. Industry produces to sell to customers who can buy, and customers cannot buy when only a few of them are in receipt of wages, and wages which are in many cases insufficient to keep body and soul together. We must recognize the fact that the workers of this country must have a sufficient purchasing power—that is, a fair share of the national income—to enable them to purchase the products of industry.

That the principle of the 30-hour week is practical has already been demonstrated. During the period from July to October 1933, due to the decrease in hours of work brought about by the N. R. A., employment climbed to 75 percent of the 1929 level, and this employment was maintained throughout 1934. During the period of the N. R. A. the average workweek in industry was almost 40 hours. Do we need greater proof that the principle of shortening hours of work and at the same time maintaining a living wage schedule is the proper method to pursue in solving our problem of unemployment?

We are taught that man was made to enjoy the fruits of this earth. Under our present system it would appear that the earth and even man himself was created to be the servant of entrenched wealth and the modern machine. We cannot expect one group of our population to remain prosperous while another group exists in economic slavery. Progressive Americans must dedicate themselves to the task of ending exploitation of the laborers and reaching an economic balance in our national life. The primary step to be taken in attaining these sacred objectives is the adoption of the 30-hour workweek bill. If this Congress will pass this bill it will be placed on the statute books as one of the greatest laws of all times. It will bring to millions of idle workers, prosperity, happiness, and renewed courage.

VETERANS' BENEFITS

The military genius of the soldiers of all our wars stands forth in undimmed luster. In their youth, strength, and love of loyalty they gave all that mortality can give. They need no eulogy; they have written their own history in red on the enemy's breast. When I think of their patience under adversity, their courage under fire, and their modesty in victory, I can well understand why an appreciative people have demanded that our Government enact legislation for the benefit of the sick, wounded, and disabled veterans, and for the benefit of the dependents of those who have heard the sounding of their last reveille.

For a great many years the Congress, without regard to any fixed policy, has enacted pension law after pension law. This has resulted in a conglomeration of inequalities. Veterans protest the inequalities and uncertainties; our taxpayers the cost and inefficiency. The law applying to any particular case is lost in a maze of statutes and regulations and its proper application is always difficult and oftentimes impossible. The result is prolonged adjudication, and a final determination of the merits of a particular case is sometimes delayed for a period of years.

In order to remedy these conditions, I propose the adoption of a uniform national policy with respect to the benefits being paid to our veterans, their widows and dependents. I urge the codification and simplification of all pension laws and regulations. We must enact pension laws that will be uniform as to operation upon the veterans of all our wars. Our Government should have a sound policy applicable to the future as well as the present. Our pension system should be flexible, in order that full justice may be done in every case and in order that benefits may not be denied because under some technical regulation the equity of a particular case cannot be recognized. The simplification of our pension laws would result in a simplification of operative procedure in administration and would mean an annual saving of millions of dollars. We could then provide more liberal benefits for our veterans at no additional cost to our Government. At the present time the whole bill for expenditures by the Veterans' Administration is charged to the veterans, while in truth a large percentage of the funds appropriated are used up in the administration of the pension laws.

A grateful people must not with the passing of the years forget that the most sacred principles of our free Government have been acquired, protected, and perpetuated by the blood of our veterans. We owe them a debt that cannot be paid in money, but insofar as we can show our gratitude by the payment of benefits that will ease the suffering resulting from war, we cannot in honesty and fairness do less than assure them that the benefits provided will be uniform as to all, easily and quickly acquired by those entitled, and secure after granted.

IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

The growth of the United States has been characterized by a spirit of restless activity. We have constantly sought new frontiers to conquer, and beginning with a virile civilization on the Atlantic seaboard we have gradually extended our frontiers until today we have a united people in a nation that stretches from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. The United States was made rich and populous only by the hardy, pioneer spirit of millions of God-fearing people in distant countries who did not hesitate to leave their homelands for a new and strange country where all are guaranteed liberty and equality.

In the colonial period there was no problem of immigration and naturalization. We welcomed all who had the courage to colonize a new continent, and by their very coming to our land we knew that they had the qualities of citizenship that we desired. During the past 50 years we have found it necessary to enact many laws governing immigration and naturalization. Most of these laws have been wise and just. Through their operation we have added strength to our national character. These new citizens have eagerly and without hesitation assumed the burden of citizenship, and our history is colored with their achievements.

The United States by welcoming thousands of immigrants is annually adding new blood to its national body. Americans greet them in a spirit of friendliness and comradeship, for we all know that at some time in the years gone by our forefathers encountered the same difficulties that they now meet.

However, Mr. Speaker, through personal observation in my own district and by official study as a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, I know that the present immigration and naturalization laws in many instances work unbelievable hardship.

The average hard-working alien not only has troubles of an economic sort but he is also caught in a web of conflicting, cumbersome, and rather harsh immigration and naturalization laws. As in the case of the pension system, naturalization law after naturalization law has been passed. It would seem that Congress has passed one law to remedy a particular condition and then on finding that it did not entirely meet the situation, quickly passed another law to fill in. This haphazard policy has left so much to judicial and administrative interpretation that honest and conscientious aliens desirous of becoming citizens of the United States are at a loss to know what their rights are or where to find an understandable statement of those rights. Under the operation of our present system, family ties have been broken, relatives separated, and homes wrecked because some arbitrary ruling or technical interpretation failed to recognize the merits of an application for citizenship that presented to an unbiased mind all the qualifications desired of a good citizen.

I urge, Mr. Speaker, that a thorough and sympathetic study be made of our present immigration and naturalization system to the end that a simple, complete, and understandable codification of these laws may be attained that will assure to our honest alien elements common justice and humane treatment.

THE ECONOMICS OF SCARCITY

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, so much criticism has been aimed at the Agricultural Adjustment Administration because of its policy of an economics of scarcity that an explanation is due many farmers and others who do not understand the reason behind this governmental procedure.

Chester A. Davis, A. A. A. Administrator, in his address at Des Moines, June 3, well explained the position of the organization of which he is in charge. Among other things, he said:

> I think I speak what is in the minds of the farmers of this country when I say that they are strong for the economics of plenty—but they want it practiced clear across the board in the business life of the Nation as well as by the farmers. Why should the farmer be asked to stand alone among the producers of the Nation, operating to the limit of his plant's capacity and throwing his output on the market for what it will bring and then turn around to buy what he needs from industries that really understand the economics of scarcity and know how to apply it because they have practiced it so long?

Mr. Davis appropriately added—

> He could not understand the way of the man's mind who ruthlessly practices in his own business the very principle of production control which shocks him so when the farmers get into it on a much more moderate scale.

The A. A. A. Administrator might also have pointed out that the economics of scarcity program is not necessarily a permanent one, and was adopted as an emergency measure when the country was suffering from the economic stomach ache that was felt around the world. Emergency measures are used to meet unusual conditions. The Roosevelt administration very sensibly maintained that it was unwise and unjust to allow farmers to produce more than they could sell, or, at least, so much that the market would be glutted and they would be unable to get living prices. Therefore, it decided to require restricted production in certain crops, and also to pay the farmers out of Government funds for the losses they would undergo by producing less than the normal amount. The great outcry that arose against this innovation was built around the complaint that the country needed more food and supplies, not less. Granted that this was true on the whole, but what was the use of letting agriculturists raise what they could not sell, thereby making their plight even worse than it already was? The saner way was to curtail production, causing prices to gradually rise, and affording the farmer an opportunity for a better market.

I doubt if many farmers have been greatly deceived by the hub-bub against the economics of scarcity. The average man who tills the soil is intelligent enough to see that the policy is both progressive and practical.

SOME OUTSTANDING ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, as the last session of the Seventy-fourth Congress reaches what appears to be near the close it is only natural for Members to reflect upon achievements as well as the shortcomings of the present session. Moreover, it occurs to me that the good people of the Sixth Congressional District of Oklahoma, who have placed their confidence in me as their Representative, are entitled to know the part their Representative in Congress has had in this important program. Regardless of whether they agree with me, the people are entitled to know my record. And I am glad to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am not ashamed to stand on my record. A record made speaks louder and much more definitely than campaign promises.

HAVE SUPPORTED PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT

During this session of Congress, as well as every other session under the Roosevelt administration, I have given my wholehearted support to the President's recovery program. Like millions of other Americans I have faith in our President; faith in his ability and courage to bring the Government back to the people. One of the greatest compliments that has ever been paid me during my public life was when our late beloved Speaker, while serving as our House floor leader, interrupted a speech that I was making on the House floor to pay me an entirely too generous tribute, a tribute, however, that I value most highly.

FROM THE LATE SPEAKER BYRNS

The following is from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

> Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
> Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield with pleasure to our distinguished leader.
> Mr. BYRNS. I may say, if the gentleman will permit me to do so at this time, that I am sure no Member on this side of the Chamber has supported the President more loyally and more earnestly in all those measures looking to the success of his plan for recovery and restoration of our country to prosperity than the gentleman from Oklahoma. There is no question of his loyalty to the President and to all those things for which the President stands, and I know that the President relies upon the gentleman from Oklahoma as he does upon other leading Democrats of this House in his effort to restore prosperity to the country. [Applause.]

Later, in introducing me to a radio audience, Speaker Byrns was good enough to say, in part:

> Mr. JOHNSON has attained a position of leadership in the House. He is an able, tireless worker both on the floor and in his committee work, and he has won the confidence and esteem of all of his colleagues by his conscientious discharge of the duties devolving upon him and his devotion to the interest of not only his constituents but the people of the entire country.

HAVE SOMETIMES DIFFERED WITH LEADERS

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, although I have been glad to give my enthusiastic support to the New Deal program in the main, I have not hesitated to vote against some measures that were supposed to have the blessing of the administration when those measures did not meet with my approval. Speaking on the floor of this House a few days ago in support of the Frazier-Lemke farm refinance bill, I said:

> I have been glad to follow the leadership of this House when I believed it to be right, but have not hesitated to differ with my Democratic brethren when in my judgment they were wrong.

LIBERTY LEAGUE FIGHTS ROOSEVELT

Just now we are hearing much criticism of the President and his New Deal program. In fact, the Liberty Leaguers have overdone their fight against the President. The Liberty League, with its Du Ponts, Mellons, Mills, and Morgans, are joined, of course, by opposition party leaders and partisan spellbinders. The President, being human, is subject to mistakes, and this Congress, with 435 Members in the House, is also subject to mistakes. But we also know that conditions of the farmer, the laborer, and the average businessman have improved under the New Deal program and that it is absurd for the opposition to say that the recovery thus far made is from natural causes.

NEW DEAL SAVES FARMS, HOMES, AND BANK DEPOSITS

It cannot be denied that the President's banking-reform legislation put teeth in the law, guaranteed bank deposits by the Federal Government, and put a stop to the wholesale closing of banks in every city, town, and hamlet in the United States, and the consequent loss to individuals who had seen their life savings swept away. I was glad to have a part in the passage of this important legislation.

Nor can it be denied that the saving of more than 1,000,000 homes in the towns and cities that were about to be foreclosed could have possibly been brought about from natural causes. It took a vision of the President and the courage of Members of Congress to support this legislation in the face of much bitter opposition, coming mostly from the Republican side of this House.

It is interesting to hear the spellbinders over the radio and on the floor of this House who have the temerity to charge such a beneficial program as extravagance of the New Deal. But the fact is these loans are protected, as a whole, by good and valid security, as are similar loans made by the Farm Credit Administration to more than 1,000,000 farmers, who would have otherwise been sold out by the sheriff.

SHOULD GIVE TENANT FARMERS SQUARE DEAL

In my judgment, the New Deal farm program has not gone far enough, especially in aiding our distressed farmers to refinance their indebtedness, and I feel that the next Congress should and must enact more liberal farm credit legislation, giving longer terms and lower interest rates.

Another farm bill that I have repeatedly urged this session of Congress to pass is the Jones-Bankhead farm tenant bill. This would enable the 130,000 tenant farmers of Oklahoma, many of whom are eking out a mere existence, to live under their own roofs and own their own farms.

ABOUT NEW FARM BILL

The new farm bill that has taken the place of the old A. A. A., that was declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme Court, is in my judgment here to stay. It is based upon soil conservation and the domestic-allotment plan and offers to our people real, practical farm relief. If it is properly administered by the Secretary of Agriculture and his associates, it is bound to bring about better prices for farm commodities and will save millions of tons of precious soil that have been heretofore washed and blown away.

WOULD NOT DARE REPEAL SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

What will undoubtedly go down in history as one of the outstanding measures ever enacted by any Congress is the Social Security Act, passed by the Seventy-fourth Congress. The opposition has criticized this, but it is significant that when our Republican friends held their national convention at Cleveland last week and labored and brought forth their platform, written by the old guard, that points with pride and views with alarm, that they did not go on record as favoring the repeal of the Social Security Act. It is even more significant, incidentally, that they did not devote much space in their platform to pointing with pride to the last 4 years of Republican prosperity under the old deal.

SOCIAL SECURITY IGNORED UNDER OLD DEAL

Be it remembered that early in President Roosevelt's administration he sent a message to Congress demanding the passage of a Social Security Act. Practically every civilized nation on the face of the earth had recognized the justness of such legislation and had enacted it in some form or other. Our Republican friends, when in charge of the Government, not only ignored such proposed legislation but ridiculed the idea. When an old-age-pension bill was introduced during my first term in Congress it was sent to a committee where it was smothered, and leaders then in charge of this House did not show the courtesy or manifest the interest to make any kind of a report on the measure.

LAW MUST BE STRENGTHENED AND LIBERALIZED

When the President's Social Security Act was pending in this House, I worked with the Democratic majority in giving it my support and spoke for the bill during the debate on the measure. I pointed out then that I had openly supported reasonable and adequate old-age pensions in and out of Congress for many years when it was unpopular to do so. I pointed also with considerable pride to the fact that in one of my first speeches made on the floor of this House, during my first term, I advocated Federal old-age security. I also made it plain that I was not satisfied with this legislation as written. I felt then, as now, that the Social Security Act is not the last word, but rather the first word, in this far-reaching program. But when the present Federal law is strengthened and liberalized, it will be done by President Roosevelt and his friends and not by those who have denounced the President as a dictator and called on their followers to support anybody but Roosevelt.

OPPOSES FEDERAL SALES TAX

Let me add that I have consistently opposed a Federal sales tax. I am opposed to it because I know it is a scheme of the very small group that has accumulated most of the Nation's wealth to place the burdens of government on the average citizen who is already overtaxed. A sales tax is fundamentally a poverty tax, and places the burden of government on those least able to pay. I am opposed to a Federal sales tax irrespective of what it may be called or for what it is to be used. I am especially opposed to a hidden sales tax and even more opposed to a pyramided sales tax. On the other hand, I would place the burden of paying for old-age pensions on those most able to pay, by raising income tax, corporation tax, excess-profits tax, gift tax, inheritance tax, undistributed surplus tax, and by taxing the damnable stock exchanges.

This administration, I am glad to say, has regulated the stock exchanges. It has practically stopped inside manipulations and shady and crooked sales transactions. Now it should place a real tax on the stock exchanges, a thing I have advocated for years and shall continue to advocate.

OPPOSES WAR

Having had the bitter experience of serving as a buck private during the World War, I have first-hand information of real war with all of its horrors and heartaches. We now know that the World War did not make the world "safe for democracy." But it did make the world safe for millionaire munitions makers and war profiteers. For years I have vigorously advocated legislation to prohibit future war profiteering. I am glad to say the House during the last session passed the first bill of this kind to eliminate future war profiteering. I sincerely hope that this Congress will not adjourn until both Houses agree on such a measure.

NEUTRALITY ACT TO PROMOTE WORLD PEACE

This Congress took a long, forward, and progressive step toward maintaining world peace when it passed the President's Neutrality Act, during the past session and strengthened and extended the law again this year. If the Neutrality Act prevents or aids in preventing America from being dragged into another war, it is undoubtedly the most important law enacted during the session now drawing to a close. This legislation should materially assist the United States to remain out of entangling alliances in the Old World and thus promote world peace.

MUST ABOLISH OVERLAPPING DEPARTMENTS

More than 2 years ago I suggested to this House that it was time for Members to begin to think about economizing in Government. Again, in the last session of Congress, I stood on the floor of this House and made the same suggestion. In that speech I said in part:

MUST ABOLISH OVERLAPPING BUREAUS

My suggestion that we abolish countless commissions and overlapping boards and bureaus is more urgently needed today than ever. Some of us have gone along with the administration in establishing boards and commissions with the assurance that they were only temporary measures to meet emergencies and that they would soon be abolished. The next Congress cannot side-step that issue. These overlapping, obsolete, and useless bureaus are making government topheavy. The next Congress should abolish many of them.

Mr. Speaker, we have not abolished some of the overlapping bureaus and commissions that I had hoped this Congress would abolish, but I am glad to say that this Congress has appointed a commission of trained men to go into this all-important subject and investigate it thoroughly and report back to the next Congress, and I am hopeful that the next Congress will make some radical changes in the matter of combining and consolidating overlapping bureaus, boards, and commissions.

RECORD SPEAKS LOUDER THAN PROMISES

The record shows that I have made several fights to effect economies in the different departments of government. The records reveal that on February 26, 1936, I made a fight on the floor of this House against the $100,000,000 shelterbelt program and that the House sustained me in that fight. Two days later I took the floor to challenge a $25,000,000 item proposing to buy worthless land for the Forest Service that was about to be wished off onto a magnanimous Congress. Again this House sustained me and thus the taxpayers of America were saved a "cool" $25,000,000. That is a record for economy that speaks for itself. Again I say that a record made speaks louder than campaign promises.

The New Deal has, of course, made mistakes. The President frankly admits that. Most of the mistakes, however, have been made by the emergency New Deal set-ups created to relieve suffering humanity. Those mistakes can and undoubtedly will be corrected. But, admitting mistakes, the New Deal is infinitely better than the Government under Republican rule, when, as someone has said: "Prosperity was 'Hoovering' around the corner."

PEOPLE HAVE FAITH IN PRESIDENT

The people have an abiding faith in Franklin D. Roosevelt. They know his great heart beats in sympathy with the farmer, the laborer, and the average businessman. They know that the Roosevelt administration has gone its limit, especially to give the distressed farmer a square deal. I am glad to have an humble part in helping to formulate such a program.

But Mr. Speaker, we cannot rest on our laurels on what this Congress has accomplished, important as that may be. We must look to the future. Our people have every reason to expect greater accomplishment in the future. One thing is certain, we are not going back to the old "horse and buggy" days in government. We are not going back to the dark days of 1930, 1931, and 1932. The old order has passed. The new day has dawned. And we as Representatives in Congress must keep in step with the procession. We cannot look backward, but must look forward to higher and better things and to far greater achievements.

AN EXPLANATION OF THE NEUTRALITY ACT

Mr. KNIFFIN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the Seventy-fourth Congress, now coming to a close, has been confronted with many serious problems. A Congress is remembered by the legislation it passes. Many Members of this body were aroused by grave indications of an impending European war. Upon investigation we found that the United States has no reason to become involved in international conflict. Acting upon the facts, we enacted legislation to protect the American people. Of all the perplexing problems with which nations are beset, that of maintaining peace surpasses all others in importance. It is a recognized fact that this Congress will be memorable because of its enactment of the Neutrality Act. The passage of this law denotes the first solid step toward peace.

WAR OR PEACE

The matter of war or peace depends largely upon the laws enacted by the legislative branch of our Government. This Congress has shown vision, initiative, and high moral courage in the passage of the Neutrality Act and has realized that the surest way to prevent war is by avoiding the conditions which lead to war. In this respect we have acted boldly and wisely.

MODERN WARFARE

It cost $25,000 to kill one soldier in the late war. Seven millions of men lost their lives. War is brutal. It is the most futile and ferocious of human follies. This generation is thoroughly acquainted with its evil consequences and aftereffects. We know that its deadly germ attacks the blood and bones of a nation. Millions of human beings all around the globe are still suffering and dying as a result of the unprecedented waste of the last war.

Science, which has brought about so many wonderful achievements affecting our daily life and health, has also made war more devastating. Modern warfare, using implements and gases now known, would be of a nature so destructive that we can conceive it only as supernatural. Another general war would usher us into an era of wholesale scientific slaughter in which horror, destruction, and death indescribable would come to men, women, and children.

PRINCIPAL PROVISIONS OF ACT

We have sought through neutrality legislation primarily to keep our citizens out of war, and it is my belief that the people of this country are entitled to an explanation of what we have accomplished.

The principal provisions of the Neutrality Act, which is now a law, consist of an absolute embargo against the sale or export of arms, ammunition, or implements of war to belligerent countries, a prohibition against the making of loans or the extension of credits to any belligerent government, the exclusion of passports to American citizens for travel on vessels of belligerents, and the removal of governmental protection from all citizens thus traveling.

By this act of Congress we have given official notice to the world that America will no longer permit itself to be used as a base of supplies for war purposes. It is indeed a new principle of national behavior which will make for a better ordered world. This law means that when any foreign nation declares war it automatically severs itself from all financial aid, arms, and munitions from us, and none of our citizens will be permitted to travel upon any of their vessels. It means that the American flag will never again be wrapped around kegs of powder destined for the ports of warring nations. As the act applies equally to all nations, extends the same treatment to all, no policy could be more neutral.

This neutrality is a safeguard against our being drawn into armed conflict, and, furthermore, it renders as remote as any act on our part could the possibility of conflict between other nations.

Inasmuch as this policy is mandatory and compulsory, it lies entirely in our hands—is not dependent upon any agreement, treaty, secret alliance, or any other form of possible or probable entanglement.

AMERICA SETS EXAMPLE

This law marks a great advance in the preservation of the peace of our country. It makes for peace built upon the true spirit of peace and amity. By enacting it we have set the world a true example of peace and have proven that the forces of good are still superior to the forces of evil. It is a measure of relief to a hopeful and expectant world that is war weary, that has been bled white by the ravages of conflict, that has been filled with such a sad spectacle of crippled and diseased men, and that has sent to untimely graves millions of the flower of the youth and manhood of many countries.

By this plan we keep our own peace, and by so doing show other nations that peace must first come from the within, and that it may become universal if they likewise keep their own peace.

Now, on account of our position and national strength and importance among nations, the adoption of a policy of this character should have great influence. Other nations may adopt similar legislation. It is reasonable to believe that others will follow our example. Once a number of nations follow our lead, the clouds of conflict will quickly disappear, and we shall be able to visualize through the clearing bloody mists the scanty outline of the harbor of permanent world peace. When that time comes, the long and soul-trying struggle will have been won, and the stars will be heard singing together, and all of the sons of men will shout with joy.

HUMAN LIVES VERSUS COMMERCE

There are those who advocate the shipment of anything anywhere in time of war. A theory palpably absurd. They should remember that this country tried that very policy during the late war and in due time, while profiteering upon the misfortunes of others, became ourselves involved. Then, too, the effect of such a policy is to promote foreign commerce at the expense of human life. In this connection, it is pertinent to at least presume that business has learned a costly lesson. Industry has never held the gains of war expansion. Contrarily, it has always suffered sharp recessions and collapses in after-war periods.

INDUSTRY LOSES

Moreover, the tremendous decrease in the capacity of impoverished peoples to buy and consume, together with higher taxes for a generation following war, makes it clear that the sum total of war in its final analysis causes industry to be the financial loser. The permanent gains of industry have all been established in peacetimes. Gains of industry must be based upon sound economic conditions. There are many instances in which business has attained its objective in peacetime after it attempted and failed to accomplish it during hostilities. The prolonged post-war burden upon industry (except manufacturers of arms and munitions) causes it to suffer notwithstanding the temporary swell in profits during actual warfare. These facts allow of no doubt as to the inability of industry to progress upon a foundation of destruction and waste.

NEUTRALITY MUST BE STRICT

Our insistence upon our rights as a neutral were ignored during the World War. Attacks upon our shipping followed and then in turn came our involvement in the conflict. Therefore, if it was not plain then, it should be plain now, that our policy must be one of strict neutrality to all and this neutrality must mean that no belligerent may profit by our aid, either direct or indirect. Any peace plan that does not reflect these features will be found lacking when the final test comes.

Another effect of the present law is to prevent a full exploitation of the private profit system in the manufacture of arms and munitions, and thus serves to restrain the activities of the huge subversive force which lies behind the arming and counter arming of nations. The control of this force is found finally in a mere handful of men, whose power, in some respects, reaches above the power of the State itself.

AMERICA SHOULD NOT LEAVE HOME BASE

The home-loving, right-thinking men and women, the lovers of decency and morality, the fathers and mothers of our boys and girls, earnestly approve this long-awaited action on the part of Congress. If other nations must fight, let them fight. We can and we must remain at home and here defend our own policies and our own rights. It would, of course, be imprudent for us to disarm while other nations remain heavily armed. To do so might invite aggression. That is why we maintain an army, navy, and thousands of powerful and swift fighting planes to flash out from our shores and repel any possible military attack upon our people. In no event, however, should we allow America to be drawn away from the home base and forced to send armies across the sea to fight.

LAW MUST BE MADE PERMANENT

The present neutrality act expires on May 1, 1937. This leaves to the next Congress the task of improving it, if possible, and reenacting it into permanent law.

There are few things which escape being called "contraband of war" by one or another nation engaged in international strife. In view of this fact, when the law is to be made permanent, studied consideration should be given to the question of prohibiting shipments of raw materials. These are sometimes referred to as secondary materials: Cotton, oil, food, metals, and the like. To make sure of our future immunity I am persuaded that the closest possible ban should be imposed upon sales of supplies of any kind that may even remotely aid a belligerent. Sales of such commodities, if any, should at least be restricted to peacetime proportions.

FREEDOM OF THE SEAS

Let us not be stampeded into a defense of an obscure phrase like "freedom of the seas" which has no meaning in wartime. The belligerent with the superior navy usually defines this phrase. We have gone most of the way by renouncing credits, munitions, and the protection of American citizens who would jeopardize the safety of all by foolishly traveling in war zones and naval blockades where torpedoes are ripping through the waters. It would be cheaper for the average citizen, who pays the bills, to get along temporarily with less commerce because the ultimate cost of war to protect this trade is paid by the people who do not profit.

RAW MATERIALS

This feature should be given careful study before the question is taken up for final determination by the next Congress, because out of the sale of secondary supplies a few make large profits and then, when it should happen that we are entangled on account of such sales and profits, the general public must shoulder the cost. A cost which renders a horrible accounting of gravestones, shattered minds, mangled bodies, broken homes, broken hearts, together with economic instability and back-breaking taxation for years to come. We are still reaping the ill effects of our last conflict, and we shall continue to do so. Surely we cannot, in the light of what we now know, fail to take every possible means to prevent our entanglement in any future debacle that may spread its ugly wings again over this fair land of ours. We are now firmly committed to a policy of peace and should examine carefully into all possible methods which will strengthen our position.

ARMS TRAFFIC CONTINUES

The world traffic in arms has continued unceasingly since the last war. A fact which indicates conclusively that the commercial motive is the chief obstacle to peace. If a fair portion of the enormous expenditures made in preparation for war could be diverted for use in the promotion of peace, the clangor of arms would cease from the rising of the sun to its going down, and we would soon find ourselves living on a happy and peaceful planet.

DISARMAMENT

The American people want to live in peace; they do not want war. It is entirely possible that our form of government might not survive our participation in another great war. The future of America as a Government, therefore, depends to some extent upon our foreign policy. This policy directly affects the daily living of most of our citizens as the burden of war bears down most heavily upon the middle and poorer classes. It is to be regretted that in this present imperfect world, nations have yet found no agreement upon practical methods of disarming. Peace conferences have been of little value because of the constant fear engendered by visions of attack and the frantic efforts to be prepared to meet the expected enemy. Nevertheless, I am optimistic enough to believe that peace conferences should be encouraged as they at least tend to organized promotion of peace principles, and by moral suasion publicly oppose efforts to stifle the human impulses for peace which have slowly developed as we have emerged from some of the practices of primitive savagery.

I am a firm believer in drastic disarmament, and would be glad to quickly join in any good-faith movement among the principal powers designed to reduce armaments on a major scale. A substantial, uniform reduction of armaments would lift from the backs of suffering mankind an unbearable burden. Any and all attempts to bring about this much-desired end should be encouraged by the United States.

THE WAR DEAD

War is horrible, wasteful, sordid, and utterly indefensible. All those who truly know war abhor it. During the late catastrophe, thousands of our fighting men had an opportunity to observe at close range how hideous is the face of war. Those who are still with us strongly advocate taking the profit out of war. They consider this to be of first importance. Their active support contributed notably to the enactment of this neutrality legislation. It is also hoped that the work of this Congress is within the knowledge of their comrades who did not return from the western front—the war dead. If it is, and I believe that it is, the souls of those who died amid the roar and shriek of whistling shells, from up there far beyond the star line are now looking down approvingly upon the first honest, straightforward attempt on the part of any great nation to remove the incentive causes of deliberate human destruction.

CONCLUSION

The power to declare war lies in the Congress alone. Obviously this provision in the Constitution places a serious responsibility upon the individual Member of this body that is not shared by the average citizen. As a Member of Congress I am determined to do my part to assure peace to the citizens of the United States even though foreign nations be at war, and I hope that the day will dawn when the good people of this and of every civilized country will teach their children to hate the impious and fiendish agency of armed conflict. May God hasten the day when the scourge of war will be banished from the earth.

THE SALES TAX

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, California is one of those States laboring under the burden of a sales tax. Now a movement is under way to repeal this form of taxation at the election in November. A Sales Tax Repeal Association, with Jackson H. Ralston as general chairman, and Ralph E. Chadwick, 321 West Third Street, room 603, Los Angeles, as executive secretary, has opened headquarters in San Francisco, San Diego, and Los Angeles. An active campaign is being waged now to secure the approval of the sales-tax repeal amendment. This amendment is popularly referred to as the Ralston amendment.

Just recently Mr. Chadwick delivered an excellent address on the subject. He sent a copy of it to me. For the benefit of those in the House who represent sales-tax States and for the benefit of those in California who did not have an opportunity to hear the speech of Mr. Chadwick, I want to summarize his argument in the RECORD.

The Ralston amendment is an initiative measure to be submitted to the people of California at the November election. It provides in brief for the repeal of sales taxes, the removal of the limitation upon taxation for State purposes on real and personal property, and exempts from taxation by progressive steps all tangible personal property and improvements upon land. It provides that the first year after its adoption improvements upon land used as a homestead shall be exempt from taxation to the value of $1,000.

TAX—TAX—TAX

Citizens of California are subject to not less than 100 different taxes. Every form of service or property, every need and activity from cradle to grave, is subject to tax or license charge. It is remarkable that industry survives the burden, and small wonder that we experience recurring depressions that threaten national security and retard progress. Blithely, nonchalantly, local, State, and Federal legislators tax this, that, and 'tother, with no regard for the effect or justice of the impost. Ignoring either ability-to-pay or service-rendered basis for taxation, officials strike out blindly and get the money wherever the most may be had with the least protests from those who contribute to campaign funds.

Persons with little or no economic or political influence may protest in vain until their indignation is made manifest at the polls and a new set of officials placed in office, while the old game of plucking the tax goose goes on so long as a single feather remains.

SALES TAX A "THROW-BACK"

With respect to the sales tax, Dr. Elmer Staffelbach says:

> The general sales tax is a form of tax which constitutes a "throw-back" to forms of taxation which were in effect before the French Revolution, and which it took a revolution to overthrow. It is completely the reverse of the ability-to-pay theory, in that it taxes poverty and tends to exempt wealth and ability to pay.

With respect to the effect of the sales tax, every person who ever paid a sales tax knows from experience that he has less money to spend for goods and services, due to the imposition of the sales tax, and that his purchasing power is accordingly decreased. The sales tax takes the pennies of the poor and rich alike in order that those who profit most by government may escape their just and equitable share of the tax burden.

WHAT DOES IT COST?

Published reports indicate that we are paying in excess of $70,000,000 annually for the privilege of purchasing goods and enjoying services that give employment to labor and profit to producers and distributors. And how much is $70,000,000? It is approximately $200,000 a day. It is the price of a bottle of milk each day for every family in the State of California. It is the price of two pairs of shoes a year for every inhabitant of the State. If left in the pockets of those to whom it rightfully belongs, it would increase the revenue of every farm, factory, and store and would find its way into the cash drawers of those who sell goods and render services. Two hundred thousand dollars is taken out of the pockets of consumers every 24 hours. This is a terrific toll upon industry and a very real hardship to 90 percent of our people whose incomes or earnings are in the lower brackets.

While repealing the sales tax, the Ralston amendment does not repeal or affect the gasoline tax which is paid at service stations. Nor does it repeal or affect income or inheritance or some nine other taxes now levied by the State.

While the measure most emphatically does not provide for the substitution of a "land value" tax for the sales tax, it is the earnest hope of its proponents that this will be done. California has suffered from land monopoly and speculation. It is estimated that there is enough land already subdivided in the State to meet the requirements of 125,000,000 people. This subdivided land would be the source of unearned profits if the people of the State could be persuaded to relieve its speculator-owners from their just share of the tax burden.

WHY THE BURDEN ON IMPROVEMENTS?

And why do some landowners insist that if a man improves, if he builds an apartment house for the service of people, or a home on a lot or farm for his own use, that he be taxed for what he does? Why do they oppose the untaxing of factories, machinery, stores, raw materials, finished goods, crops, orchards, and farm improvements and equipment? Why do they oppose exemption of these things from taxation? Why must industry and labor, who make the renting of houses and apartments and the buying of homes possible, be continually penalized?

Because, by maintaining a high tax burden on improvements and tangible personal property, by inflicting sales taxes on an already poverty-stricken people, holdings in land and the land reserves of future Americans are practically untaxed. This enables a few to hold more land, for a longer time, for a higher price, and a bigger mortgage, and for more false profit.

Consider, there are 100,000,000 acres of land in the State of California, or about 17 acres for each of its inhabitants. Of this area only 51,519,955 acres, or half of the total, appears on the tax rolls. In 1935 this land was assessed at $3,087,569,460, or less than $60 an acre on the average, and not one penny was paid by its owners, as such, for the support of State or Federal Government.

Section 2 of article XVII of the State constitution provides that the holding of large tracts of land, uncultivated and unimproved, by individuals or corporations, is against the public interest, and should be discouraged by all means not inconsistent with the rights of private property. The sales-tax repeal amendment would give force and effect to this provision. Through the progressive exemption from taxation of tangible personal property and improvements upon city lots and farm lands and a corresponding increase in the tax upon land values, a powerful stimulus would be given to productive enterprise.

CITY LAND VERSUS FARM LAND

Everyone is familiar with the fact that cities and farming districts alike are hemmed in and their orderly growth restricted by huge land estates. Our present tax system encourages the nonuse or holding for speculation on vast domains. The owners are not to blame for the condition. The responsibility rests with us all and the remedy lies in our hands. The practice of assessing large or extremely valuable landholdings at a fraction of their value will continue so long as we are willing to submit to the taxation of industry.

Our present system of taxation presents the shameful spectacle of panhandling the poor and penalizing the industries for the money with which to maintain government.

The whole cost of local and State government—approximately $500,000,000—is about 4 percent of the real value of the land of this State, or an average of $5 per acre of 6 lots, after the worker, farmer, merchant, and manufacturer are freed from taxation on the products of their thrift and energy.

In 1900 the population of Los Angeles County was 170,289 and the assessed value of land $57,677,170, or $332 per person. At that time the most valuable lots were worth $150,000 each, or about $1,000,000 per acre. The 1930 census credits the county with a population of 2,208,492, which means that the most valuable lots are now worth a million and a half each, or $10,000,000 an acre. While the value of centrally located lots has risen to astronomical figures, wages and interest have declined. No part of the benefits of population growth accrues to merchant, farmer, worker, or manufacturer as such. Now, in common honesty, should we not first draw upon population values in private hands before filching the pennies of the poor or the legitimate profits of farmer, merchant, or manufacturer for public use?

TAX THOSE ABLE TO PAY

The Ralston or sales-tax repeal amendment would create a change in our tax policy. It would mean taxation that increases employment and purchasing power, and reduces the tax burden for those engaged in productive enterprise. With 25 percent of the people of this county on relief and another 25 percent on the border line, it is the part of wisdom to lift the burden of taxation from those least benefited by organized society and less able to pay and to shift it to the capable financial shoulders of those who, while neither toiling nor spinning, are able to profit most through community growth.

Real farmers, those who actually farm farms rather than farm farmers, would save 3 percent on their purchases as a result of the repeal of the sales tax, and progressively would have their taxes removed on orchards, crops, livestock, and buildings, leaving the value of their lands alone subject to taxation. And farmers have relatively little land value—theirs are mainly labor values. Contrast the land values of Los Angeles business frontage with the value of farm lands. The double-frontage land values on a section of Broadway in Los Angeles are worth not less than $300,000,000 the mile. This is the true "gold coast" of modern times. Just by way of experiment, let the farmer or home owner check the assessment on his land with that of neighboring or adjacent landholdings and consider that if there were an equalization of the tax burden upon all landowners, regardless of the use to which they put their property, the tax burden would be very light indeed for those engaged in productive activity.

REPEAL PREDICTED

The Sales Tax Repeal Association is predicting a determination on the part of the people of California to be done with sales and similar taxes. They feel that the people will be neither frightened nor cajoled, bullied nor threatened, nor in any degree diverted from their fixed purpose to swat it forthrightly next November.

This is what is proposed in submitting the Ralston or sales-tax repeal amendment to the people of California. Other States might with profit watch for the results in the California election in November.

MEMORIAL TO THE HONORABLE WILLIAM WALLER RUCKER, FORMER MEMBER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FROM MISSOURI, DECEASED

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives, I have been apprized recently of the death of Hon. William Waller Rucker, who served as a Member of Congress from Missouri for a period of 24 years, and during all that time he represented faithfully and well his constituents of what was then known as the Second Congressional District in Missouri.

I was fortunate in having had the honor and privilege of serving in the House of Representatives with him for a period of 4 years, the last years of his long and distinguished service to his State and district.

Mr. Rucker died at his home in Keytesville, Mo., the last of May, and there was a very large and sympathetic gathering of people in attendance at the last rites of this splendid citizen.

Mr. Rucker was born near Covington, Va., in 1855, and near the beginning of the Civil War he moved with his parents to West Virginia, in which State he attended the common schools, and at the age of 18 years he moved to Chariton County, Mo. As a young man he first engaged in teaching in the rural schools, during which time he devoted all his spare time to the study of the law. He was admitted to the bar in 1876, and a few years thereafter was elected prosecuting attorney of Chariton County, which office he held with distinction, discharging his duties in an effective and complimentary manner. He was renominated and reelected prosecuting attorney up to and until he was elected to the office of judge of the circuit court. He served 6 years as prosecuting attorney and 6 years as circuit judge, and while he was holding the position of circuit judge he was nominated and elected to Congress. During all of his official career he served his constituents and the public interests faithfully and well.

Since his retirement from Congress and the redistricting of the State of Missouri a portion of his district became a part of the district which I now have the honor to represent.

After Mr. Rucker's retirement from Congress he was often and affectionately inquired about by Members remaining here in Congress who had served with him. I think more inquiries of an affectionate nature were made relative to him by other Members who knew him than perhaps any other Member concerning whom inquiry was made from me, which indicates the indelible impression that he made on the men here with whom he had served.

When I came to Congress as a young man he had previously had many years of experience, and it is a pleasure to me to recall the many times when we counseled together, and his counsel was always regarded as sound. He was not a spectacular man and not of the type given to the seeking of notoriety, but rested his services upon the sound foundation of always being alert to the best interests of his constituency and his obligations to the public interest.

After his retirement from Congress I, of course, did not see him so often, but I made it a point while back in Missouri to pay him a visit nearly every year, and I never went near or through his home town, regardless of how much of a hurry I was in, without going by to spend awhile with him. Mrs. Romjue and myself always looked forward with pleasure when we contemplated a visit to his home. He was always hospitable, sincere, and solicitous about the welfare of his friends; and while he had reached a rather advanced age at the time of his death, the knowledge of his passing came as a shock to me and his many other friends, and I felt a keen regret in his death. His companionship and sound counsel and advice on public matters will be keenly missed by those who knew him best as time goes on. Those who served with him in Congress, even though for a short time, learned to know and trust him; and, in the words of the immortal poet, I can aptly say:

His life was gentle, and the elements so mixed in him that nature might stand up and say to all the world—he was a man.

He was an able statesman and a faithful servant. He was conscientious and kind-hearted, and his kind deeds will live on and on.

MEMORIAL DAY FOR GENERAL PULASKI, POLISH PATRIOT, WHO FOUGHT FOR AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, the House has had under consideration Senate Joint Resolution 187, as amended, authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of this year General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

As amended and considered by the House, the joint resolution reads as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 187

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and directed to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all governmental buildings on October 11, 1936, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches or other suitable places with appropriate ceremonies in commemoration of the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

Mr. Speaker, it is right and proper that this Nation should ever be willing and ready to recognize and pay tribute to those who fought and died in the cause of American liberty.

At different times, during the last few years, Congress has adopted resolutions designating October 11 of the particular year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day. The purpose of all such resolutions was to express our national appreciation of the valuable service rendered by this great and courageous Polish soldier and patriot, who not only gave his wealth but also his life in the cause of American liberty.

During this Congress an effort was made by the friends of the Polish patriot to increase the scope of the resolutions, as previously adopted, so that October 11 of every year would be designated as a memorial day instead of the necessity of passing a separate resolution each year. In other words, adopt legislation that would once and for all time designate and fix October 11, of every year, as General Pulaski's Memorial Day. It seemed logical, reasonable, and proper to do so, particularly in view of the fact that Congress had time and again shown its appreciation of the patriotic service of General Pulaski by adopting resolutions that set apart October 11 as a day to commemorate his service and death.

Congress, ever willing and anxious to do its part to give deserved recognition to General Pulaski, accordingly passed a resolution authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski. Notwithstanding the fact that both the Senate and the House of Representatives voted in favor of the resolution, it did not become a law, because President Roosevelt refused to give it his approval. On April 11, 1936, he vetoed the resolution and thereby prevented its adoption.

It is needless to say that such action upon the part of the President was a keen disappointment to myself and others who were interested in the passage of the resolution. However, it has not stopped our activity in behalf of this resolution that will designate October 11 of this present year as a memorial day; nor will the action of the President discourage us in continuing the effort to procure legislation that will definitely and finally designate October 11 of every year hereafter as a General Pulaski's Memorial Day.

I can see no good reason why legislation making October 11 a permanent memorial day should have been killed by a veto from President Roosevelt. It is particularly difficult to understand why legislation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on governmental buildings on October 11 of each year and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in commemoration of the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski should meet with the disapproval of the President, when on April 30, 1934, he approved a resolution passed by Congress, with the same provisions and recognizing the services of Columbus, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation designating October 12 of each year as Columbus Day and calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on said date and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches or other suitable places with appropriate ceremonies expressive of the public sentiment befitting the anniversary of the discovery of America.

Without in any way detracting from the outstanding achievements of Columbus, it seems strange that General Pulaski, who gave of his wealth and finally his life in order that liberty and freedom might prevail in this land, should not receive an honor and tribute similar to that given Columbus. The sacrifice of one brought forth a new continent, and the sacrifice of the other a new nation dedicated to liberty and freedom.

On many occasions it has been my privilege, in this House and elsewhere, to emphasize the high order of patriotism that marked the career of this illustrious young Polish nobleman, who heard our call for help and immediately left his native Poland and made his way to America that he might participate in the great struggle for freedom and equality. The story of his courage, his devotion, and enthusiasm has been told and retold. It makes one of the most glorious pages in the history of this Nation. Written with his life-blood, it can never be erased. As long as this Nation shall endure his memory will remain.

And with the memory of General Pulaski there will always be linked that other great Polish patriot, Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko, who fought for 6 years under the leadership of General Washington in the war for American independence. He, like Count Pulaski, came to these shores to engage in our struggle for freedom because there was a love of liberty inbred in his courageous soul.

Nor shall we ever be unmindful of the courage and willingness to serve that has been shown by other Polish patriots, who in great numbers have answered the call of the country in every great conflict in which we have been engaged. In the Revolutionary War, in the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and the World War, our Polish friends and citizens have left a record of faithfulness that will forever be a tribute to their patriotism and love of freedom.

And as might be expected from such a people, whose love of liberty has coursed through the veins of each generation, they have shown a high order of citizenship. Devoted to the institutions of America, our Polish citizens have given expression in their everyday life to those qualities that make for a strong Nation, namely, patriotism, character, and industry. In recognition of this fact and as evidence of my high regard for our Polish citizens, I have appointed to a cadetship at the United States Military Academy at West Point, effective July 1, 1936, Edward Dziatkiewicz-Verner, a Polish boy, as the first to be so appointed from the First Congressional District of New Jersey.

It will always be my desire and purpose, in the future as in the past, to participate in any movement that has for its object the giving of proper recognition to our Polish patriots and acknowledge our indebtedness to them for their service they so well rendered in the winning of our independence.

EVOLVING FROM DEPRESSION

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the Republican Party has held its national convention, and with weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth it again foredooms America to disaster and gloom if the Democratic administration is continued in power for another 4 years.

By every right thought we may lay legitimate claim on the prediction of a better and brighter future for our people by the continuation of the executive leadership of Franklin Roosevelt.

After 12 trying tragic years of dismal governmental failure by the master minds who engineered the destinies of the Republican Party and the country, and who left a trail of want and misery the like of which this country has never before experienced and hopes never again to endure, there came a fearless, dauntless, unencumbered Executive who in 3 short years revived a distraught and hopeless people, unburdened the load on weary souls, rekindled the fires of their spirit, and rebuilt a fallen Nation.

How quickly we forget, or rather, how quickly some would have us forget. At the recent make-believe convention in Cleveland we were told that the purpose of the Republican leadership was to restore America to the people.

An immediate question presents itself. Restore what kind of an America to what part of the people? From the results of their actions, from the history of their 12 tragic years of stewardship, it is evident that what that leadership purposes is not to restore America to the people but to resteal America from the people.

When we contemplate the series of disasters which one by one and then in combined accumulation fell with such destructive fury upon the people because of the ineptitude and bewilderment of those who shaped our governmental policies in the years from 1920 to March 4, 1933, we stand amazed at the ever-increasing deluge of despair climaxing the conduct of those who, entrusted with the powers of government, wholly failed to exercise their functions but instead spun about and around in a dizzy dance like decapitated chickens. The wonder is not that so little has been done but that so much has been accomplished in 3 short years.

Behold the stream of unemployment mounting rapidly from year to year until it reached flood stage and then broke in full force and violence to inundate and devastate the country. Fifteen million unemployed when Roosevelt took office; jobless men and women roamed the streets and highways of the land, hungry, haggard, hopeless. We were told and told again and again that despite it all "prosperity was just around the corner." Nothing, however, was done to bring prosperity from around the corner until the people, tired of futile words and supine inaction, elected Roosevelt, who, instead of watchfully waiting for prosperity to come from behind the corner, immediately started out to locate Mr. Prosperity, caught him by the neck, and booted him onto Main Street.

Who does not tremble at the thought of 7,000 banks closing their doors on their own customers and depositors in those terrible 4 years of Hooverism—the apostle of that rugged individualism which made all individuals ragged. A decrease in total bank deposits of more than $15,000,000,000. Insolvencies and bankruptcies jostling one another and the lights of business big and little failing and fading about us like showers of falling stars. The lights of heaven had indeed gone out.

To recount those unhappy days is not an act of love but of necessity; that the people may not again be led astray by privilege seekers playing them for suckers. Make an account of the plight of the farmer. His situation grew more and more intolerable as one year passed upon another, selling his product below the cost of production until his losses included home and fields and every expectation of reward for his toil.

If one made inventory of the condition of industry during the 4 years of the dizzy "chicken plague" from 1929 to 1933, the asset column would be almost a total blank. You observed no industrial activity in that period. What you saw was an ever-decreasing quantity of manufacturing, of trade, of mining. You saw the wholesale stagnation of a nation paralyzed in every limb and muscle and bleeding profusely from every artery.

With this multiplication of evils and disasters having gathered into a whirlwind, which struck with such terrific violence that it laid waste the entire country, from ocean to ocean and Lakes to Gulf, Franklin Roosevelt was inaugurated President March 4, 1933, and at once was begun the gigantic and laborious task of reconstruction and rehabilitation.

First of all, the banking structure was remodeled and repaired. Those who now have savings for the future can deposit that money in the banks with the assurance of getting it when they want it and when they need it. The Federal Deposit Insurance Act has brought confidence where previously there was nothing but fear and cause to fear. No sound-thinking person would undo what has been done in that respect. May I ask a question here? The Republican high command and Hearst candidate for President, Gov. Alf Landon, of Kansas, opposes and derides the Federal Deposit Insurance Act and its administration. Do he and they intend to repeal that wholesome and beneficial legislation? If so, why do they not tell the people of their intention? Blessed be the thoughts and actions of the great and the near great. If Alf Landon, the Hearstling, has as much statesmanship in other channels as he has displayed in his persistent opposition to protection of depositors, the White House might well be spared the tenancy of another apostle of rugged individualism and consummate mediocrity.

The calamity of mounting unemployment was attacked, not by a wordy "prosperity around the corner" method but by the enactment of the N. I. R. A. and other laws for the benefit of the laboring man, and their effect was immediate and widespread for betterment until the United States Supreme Court spoke its piece. As this campaign progresses you will doubtless hear much on this issue of the Supreme Court. My own position is that neither the Supreme Court nor the Constitution should be permitted permanently to obstruct or stand in the way of an onward orderly march to greater and better things for the common people.

Let us make a brief reference to American youth.

The keynoter in Cleveland, Senator STEIWER, made great noise about the Civilian Conservation Corps, charging that the youth of the country was suffering the gravest of losses because of their employment in Federal camps at $30 per month, bewailing the slavery of debt and extravagance they would inherit.

What, exactly, did he mean? Without directly saying so, the Republican keynoter and his debt-lamenting comrades with the money bags would abolish the C. C. C. camps. They never would have established them. They are opposed to them as to all other acts of the Roosevelt administration. You all remember the wanderings of youth before one and one-half million of them were rescued from the possible approaches to the haunts and crevices of dispirited men. Every street, road, lane, alley, and bypath was trod by the drifting columns of shifting young manhood.

But what do the gatherers of gold care for humanity, and particularly youthful humanity? It is but another kind of commodity to be bartered and used for selfish gain. So nothing was done by the great engineers, nor by any of the abolishers of poverty, nor by any noble experimenters to save youth until came Franklin Roosevelt. Sure it has cost some money. Mothers and fathers do not stint on medical and nursing aid at the expected "blessed event." When the life of an unborn infant hangs in the balance, every effort is extended for its survival and protection; but when the future of millions of our youth is at stake, spiritually and physically at stake, the heartless prehistoric monsters who infest the kingdom that was once Republicanism roar and gnash their teeth because the Government assumed a national obligation to alleviate a national calamity. Yes; some debt has been incurred in saving our youth, and believe me these same roaring gentlemen are going to pay their fair and just proportion of that debt. The youth of this Nation must be saved even if the saving does in a measure deflate the gluttonous fortunes of some of our plutocratic citizenry.

What was the state and standing of labor, its rights, and inherent privileges in the heyday of big-business control? It took a Roosevelt to rebuild the unions under the law, and to guarantee the right of collective bargaining. Did the Supreme Court destroy the N. R. A.? Yes; and to the open and shouted delight of all commonly recognized Republican leadership in the Congress of the United States and out of it. But the Supreme Court, though it destroyed the N. R. A., did not and could not destroy the modern recognition of a law many hundreds of years older than the Supreme Court itself—that the laborer is worthy of his hire. That great Court cannot destroy the modern version of that ancient law that the hire and condition of the laborer is worthy of governmental action and legal protection.

One plank in the Republican platform of 1936 deserves a little attention—the labor plank. It reads as follows, in part:

The welfare of labor rests upon increased production and prevention of exploitation.

Here we have a definite statement, with a most indefinite meaning. If the statement is true, then every mechanical device and machine which displaces 10 or a hundred or a thousand workers promotes the welfare of the laborer. One might talk that doctrine to political hirelings and great industrialists, but let him not think he can feed it to workingmen.

That labor sentence is worth repetition for what it reveals.

The welfare of labor rests upon increased production and the prevention of exploitation.

If the autocrats at the Republican table in Cleveland are opposed to exploitation of labor, why do they exult and acclaim every decision of the Supreme Court kicking over some Democratic legislation enacted for the express purpose of preventing exploitation? Why do they send up to the stratosphere peons of praise and thanksgiving when a law to stabilize an industry or wages, to shorten hours, or to improve working conditions is laid to rest in the graveyard of unconstitutionality? Cant and hypocrisy.

The second paragraph in the labor plank of 1936 Republicanism pledges it to "protect the right of labor to organize and to bargain collectively through representatives of its own choosing without interference from any source." What a gem. Stolen bodily, almost verbatim, from the N. R. A. of the Roosevelt administration. Do they believe in such a principle enacted in law? They do not. At least they do not say so. They are for it, only do not expect any such sort of legislation. The unvarnished truth is they do not believe it, do not want, and if given the opportunity would refuse to adopt it. My friends, that labor plank is a pure and unadulterated fraud, so intended and so constructed. For this, if for nothing else, they will be properly rebuked in November.

So much is being said and written about balancing the Budget, keeping the governmental expenditures within the national income. I approve of that policy, with certain limitations.

In the first place, the welfare of the people has a claim on Government which takes priority of mere mathematical computation of dollars and cents. When unemployment is so widespread as to be a national calamity; when the specter of starvation haunts the steps of the aged, the halt, and the blind; when nourishment is unprovided for mothers and for children; when those only who are in more fortunate circumstances are supplied with the common necessities of food, clothing, and shelter, and all others exist in want and dire poverty; when, in all, the very life of the living is threatened and endangered, then men are more important than money and a budget unbalanced by needful extraordinary expenditures is a Christian and a humane procedure the sum total of which benefits cannot be counted by mere pecuniary measurements, but must be accepted as an investment in the immaterial resources of the collective human spirit as well as in the material well-being of the Nation.

The present plaints of impending disaster of one kind or another are the common lamentations of the savagery and plundering of a stark and greedy selfishness. It is the screech of the rusty hinges on the moldy doors of the golden coffers of the grasper and the miser. It is the friction caused by the resistance of accumulated wealth to the translation of a modicum of Christianity into the sphere of governmental policy. For those who move forward in this translation we may look for attempted crucifixion at the hands of those who would pollute the temple and would rouse the rabble to deeds of hate and vengeance.

Let us, my friends, not be alarmed by such. Let us press onward to the battle, conscious of the support of all kindly hearts, clear minds, and noble souls. With Roosevelt the people will win again, because of Roosevelt the people approve.

The plunderers shall not resteal America from the people.

By Mr. VANDENBERG:

A bill (S. 4779) to amend the act of Congress approved May 27, 1935 (Public, No. 73, 74th Cong.), authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to convey to the city of Grand Haven, Mich., certain portions of the Grand Haven Lighthouse Reservation, Mich.; to the Committee on Commerce.

REVIVAL OF CERTAIN LETTERS PATENT

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to tender a bill and an observation regarding it. I trust I may be pardoned for interjecting an explanation.

Two bills were before the Committee on Patents. They were introduced by me, and related to the revival of certain patents known at the city of Chicago as the Robinson patents. Alas, confusion followed by the contention of certain claimants apart from patentees and successors other than those mentioned in the bills as introduced. I can certify to the honor and high citizenship of the people now owning interest in the patents, and worthy of the rights they seek. I desire now to introduce a new bill, the Senate committee having acted by displacing the others until this new bill should come forward. The new bill sets forth the general situation and meets the conflict by comprehending the interests of all those now claiming.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 4783) to revive certain patents was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Patents.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, on the 16th day of January of this year I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 202, to aid in defraying the expenses of a National Negro Exposition to be held in the city of Atlanta, Ga., during the year 1936, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee has now decided that it does not have jurisdiction of the subject matter, and on the suggestion of the chairman of the subcommittee which conducted hearings, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution and that it be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE IN BITUMINOUS COAL—AMENDMENTS

Mr. NEELY and Mr. FRAZIER each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (S. 4668) to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ADDRESS BY SECRETARY HULL AT BROWN UNIVERSITY

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a speech delivered by the Secretary of State, Hon. Cordell Hull, at Brown University, Providence, R. I., June 15, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I am happy to be with you today. On similar occasions in the past William L. Marcy, Richard Olney, John Hay, and Charles Evans Hughes, four of my distinguished predecessors in the office of which I am proud to be the present incumbent—all of them your alumni—were the recipients of the honor which you bestowed upon me this morning. I am deeply grateful to your trustees for inducting me into the high company of those whom Brown University has chosen to favor with this mark of distinction.

I should like to address the remarks which I am about to make particularly to the youth of our country, represented by your newest alumni, the class which has just graduated from this great university. You and thousands like you are entering upon a new stage of your life's course. Your paths will diverge into various walks of endeavor. Your immediate preoccupations and interests will become diversified as you choose your particular avocations and determine to devote your effort to the particular pursuits of your choice. But whether your life work will lie in the field of business, or of public service, or of the various professions, there are some things that you will always have in common among yourselves and with the rest of your countrymen. Each of you will carry the responsibilities of citizenship in your country. As a component part of our Nation, none of you will be able to escape a sense of vital relationship with other nations in a world that is constantly being refashioned in a mold of growing interdependence and integration.

We of the older generations will gradually share with your generation, and finally relinquish to you, the management of our country's national and international affairs. You, in turn, will some day move into a similar relationship with your own children. All of us are the inheritors of the great things for which our country has stood, at home and abroad, since its beginnings. All of us are also the trustees of this precious heritage, which it is our manifest duty to pass on to our successors brighter rather than tarnished; made richer rather than poorer. Under a democracy as the form of government which it is our privilege and our blessing to enjoy in this country, each of us must individually bear his full share of responsibility for the kind of nation we are and the kind of world we live in.

My own immediate preoccupation is with the foreign relations of our country. For that reason, it may be fitting for me to direct my thoughts today primarily to a contemplation of what is basic in that particular aspect of our national life and to share with you what experience has taught me as to the part which each of us, individually and collectively, must play in the exercise of that phase of our free citizenship.

Dominant in the field of international relations, almost to the point of overshadowing all other considerations, is the great problem of peace and war. Human history has been a record of constantly shifting balance between the forces that make for peace and those that make for war, with now one, now the other tipping the scales.

Out of the far reaches of the past there has come down to us the admonition: "In time of peace, prepare for war." We of the modern world cannot accept this guiding rule in all its implications. It is true that war is still a part of our life and that circumstances may arise under which we may have to fight. So long as that remains true, common sense and prudence require each nation to be ready to meet its responsibilities. But side by side with that, and as an even more sacred duty, each nation should seek, in time of peace, to arrange its own affairs and its relations with other nations in such a way as to make resort to war unnecessary and, when humanity has progressed far enough, utterly unthinkable.

The grim counsel of the ancients is too deeply imbued with the inevitability of war. It lends to peace the aspect of a purely negative concept. It makes peace merely an interval between two succeeding conflicts, characterized by an absence of war, yet constantly overshadowed by its impending doom.

Peace, in a deep and broad sense, is not that. It is the indispensable foundation of human freedom and human progress. It is the framework within which alone the constructive genius of mankind can have unhampered scope to create an advancing civilization in terms of material comfort, cultural development, and spiritual happiness.

War inevitably interrupts the march of human progress. The advance of civilization requires an interplay of free individual initiative and originality to provide the driving power, and an appropriate social organization to furnish, through the combined and cooperative effort of many individuals, the necessary adequacy of resources. This advance is real when it creates new wealth by constantly expanding the productive equipment capable of supplying more and more abundantly our material needs, and when it multiplies those facilities which permit an enlarged and more widely diffused satisfaction of our cultural needs. War of necessity redirects, suddenly and brutally, the whole course of individual and collective effort.

Under the pressure of its exigent intensity war absorbs, for purposes of destruction, a varying share of both existing and newly created wealth. It forces upon each country involved two sets of adjustments—from peaceful pursuits to an all-embracing mobilization for military conflict and a subsequent demobilization to peaceful pursuits. These processes use up precious energy and resources and thus serve to slow down the pace of human progress. They represent a set-back which must be overcome before the advance of our civilization can be resumed.

War disrupts the operation of cultural facilities. It harnesses personal liberty to the chariot of its own grim purpose. It weakens the fiber of individuals and of nations. It leaves mankind poorer than it would have been, both materially and spiritually, and imposes upon the world, during the period that immediately succeeds armed hostilities, the choice between permanent enfeeblement and a supremely difficult effort of physical and moral regeneration.

The seeds of war are sown long before actual military operations begin. They lie and germinate in the frictions and conflicts, real or imaginary, that constantly arise between the interests and aspirations of individual nations. The duty of statesmanship is to reconcile these conflicts, to remove their causes, and thus to open wider and wider the horizons of human advancement.

The supreme care of the statesman should be the well-being of the people. War exacts too high a price to be conducive to human welfare—a price which normal human intellect cannot possibly accept as justified by any achievement that can be secured through a deliberate resort to arms. That is why enlightened and responsible statesmen of our days seek, in every way possible, to outlaw war as a means of national policy and to substitute for it the constructive processes of friendly conciliation and arbitration and fair adjudication of international disputes.

War is sometimes described as the last resort of the statesman. I should rather say that recourse to war as a means of attaining the aims of national policy is an unmistakable symbol of bankrupt statesmanship. But the statesman is only an instrument of national action. The mainsprings of that action lie in the will of the people. This is true ultimately even under a dictatorship, when individuals or small groups temporarily are able to assume autocratic control of the people's destiny. It is true, immediately and in full measure, in a democracy.

In the long run, statesmen can act only within the limits of the popular will, which finds its expression through the various agencies of public opinion. It is the trend of such opinion that determines fundamentally the course of a nation's policy. Well-informed public opinion, alert to the constructive needs and the best interests of the Nation and the world, vigorous in the assertion of its demands, will inevitably encourage and compel statesmen to seek for the country friendly and mutually beneficial—rather than hostile and mutually harmful—relations with other countries. It will strengthen in the world the forces of peace and repel the forces of war. Ignorant, indifferent, and supine public opinion will leave the Nation and the world at the mercy of blind chance or, worse still, of self-seeking adventurers, ready to sacrifice the well-being of mankind to personal or group greed and advancement.

Public opinion is the sum total of individual views and convictions. The shaping of conditions which determine whether nations will be at peace or at war with each other—or, for that matter, the outcome of any issue, large or small—reaches back to the individuals who compose the national entities. If I were asked to express an opinion as to what will be the condition of affairs in our country or anywhere else in the world 10 or 20 years from now, I should reply unhesitatingly that I would first have to know what the character and temper of individual men and women will be at that time.

Learning is a great thing, and a powerful determinant of human action. Knowledge of the essential facts, understanding of the motives of others, ability to distinguish between immediate and long-range advantages, between broad and narrow interests—all these are fundamental to good human relations.

But knowledge and understanding, however great and however widely diffused, are not enough. Human action is even more powerfully affected by those moral fundamentals of good human relations which go into the making of character—honesty, toleration, respect for the pledged word, willingness to adjust differences on a mutually fair basis. The late Frederick Harrison, a profound English philosopher, once addressed this moving challenge to his countrymen:

"Nothing can save us but a high moral sense, a national creed of loyalty, discipline, and unselfish devotion to duty—in a word, a more efficient religion."

His words ring out just as true now, and his message is just as fitting in our country and in all other parts of the earth.

The youth of our country are entering the world of action at a time when, as seldom before in the whole gamut of human history, these qualities of character are desperately needed. The cataclysmic war of two decades ago and its tragic long-drawn-out aftermath have reduced the standards of international morality to a low level. The predatory instinct of national aggrandizement is again rampant and has already set armies marching in some parts of the earth. Solemn international agreements are being violated with a light heart. Apprehension, suspicion, and confusion rule the political relations among most nations. Search for narrowly exclusive advantage and utter disregard of the broad, constructive principles of fair dealing and of cooperative action to a great extent dominate international economic relations. In nearly every domain of life hostility prevails over friendliness and distrust over confidence and good faith.

If the world is not to be plunged into another cataclysm, friendliness and confidence, fair dealing and good faith must triumph once more in the relations among nations over hostility and distrust and suspicion and greed. This cannot come to pass unless the spirit underlying national policies undergoes a rebirth, unless individuals within nations, through their personal conduct, through their influence upon others, through their exercise of responsible citizenship, devote themselves to the cause of such rebirth. For, in the final analysis, no nation is better than the individuals who compose it.

To raise once more to their proper height the lowered standards of international morality is a task that confronts your generation and mine. I cannot believe that, stupendous and difficult though it be, this task is beyond our power.

This country of ours was built by men of vision, of determination, of hardihood, men eager and willing to grapple with the problems that confronted them on the basis of integrity, of vigorous initiative, of a profound sense of fairness and justice. They have carved a great and powerful Nation out of the wilderness of a New World, a Nation instinctive with individual freedom, under the protection of the wisest constitutional charter ever devised by the mind of man. They made mistakes. They failed in some of their undertakings. But through prosperity and adversity they never faltered in their quest for human happiness.

We are confronted today with new and grave political, social, and economic problems that spring out of the growing complexities of modern civilization. We can solve these problems if we have the same moral fortitude, the same qualities of character that our people invariably exhibited when crises arose in our national existence. We cannot, through supine moral decadence, let America decline from its spiritual and material greatness. It is within our power to will and to achieve for our Nation a new advance toward the exalted goal of our forefathers' unflinching endeavor.

More than that, by our example, by our determination to deal fairly and justly with everyone, we can exert a powerful influence in leading the distracted world of today toward a revitalization of basic moral and spiritual values which alone can appease its present turmoil and direct its energies away from suicidal strife toward creative peace.

There can be no worthier aim in our life, no more exalted conception of civic duty, than to dedicate ourselves, with the fervor of a flaming crusade, to this quest for a better world.

We who are active today in the affairs of our Nation are striving, to the best of our ability, to be guided by this inspiring vision. May it shine ever brighter to the youth of our land.

The alumni of this great university have been fortunate to have had the foundations of their citizenship laid within these walls. For almost 175 years, this superb institution of learning has been sending forth into the active ranks of our people men who have made their mark in every walk of life, who have done much to raise to ever loftier heights those ideas and ideals which have ennobled and perfected democracy within our land, and have made each of us ever more proud of the place which our country occupies in the family of nations. I need not attempt to name them. They are a part of our country's history. Some of them are here today. I know that Brown's latest graduates are going forth with the same faith, the same zeal, and the same determination.

Despite the setbacks which it suffers from time to time, despite the threatening clouds that today overhang the international horizon, I firmly believe that humanity is constantly going forward to higher and higher achievements in the onward march of its civilization. One cannot read history and not be inspired by the progress already attained over the ages. Nor can one fail to be strengthened in one's faith and hope that new and greater achievements lie ahead. Let me quote, in conclusion, these lines in which a poet has expressed the final thought I wish to leave with you:

"* * * I count him wise
Who loves so well man's noble memories,
He needs must love man's nobler hopes yet more."

NOMINATING ADDRESS BY JOHN HAMILTON

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, Hon. John Hamilton, Republican national committeeman from Kansas, and now the chairman of the Republican National Committee, delivered a noteworthy speech at the recent convention of the party at Cleveland nominating Gov. Alfred Mossman Landon, of Kansas, as the Republican candidate for President of the United States. The speech covered many questions which will be prominent before the people of the Nation in this year's campaign, and I believe citizens generally will be interested in it. I therefore send to the desk a copy of the speech, and ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Today this Nation is faced with the unusual picture of a President of the United States, apparently without concern and at times seemingly by design, using the powers and prerogatives of his high office to undermine the American democracy. Under his administration we have seen the courts circumvented, indefensible waste and extravagance reflected in mounting deficits, the use for partisan purposes of authority and money granted by Congress supposedly to avert suffering and distress. His only fixed policies have fostered monopoly, threatened the Nation's credit, driven needed capital from the field of industrial enterprise, increased unemployment, and caused confidence in representative government to reach its ebb. From it all there has come a sense of insecurity, of uncertainty, and even of dread, precluding any hope of reestablishing individual security, of a moral reawakening of our people, or of a permanent rehabilitation of agriculture and industry.

Although we come as Republicans, we are here, in fact, representing every man and every woman who glories in the accomplishment of our Nation's past and has faith in our Nation's future. For this great group of our people, the Republican Party provides the sole rallying ground for united political action. We are therefore charged with the responsibility of carrying out our duties here with unquestioned good faith to party and to country, and we cannot be unconscious of the profound obligation that is ours. So grave are the issues, so serious the task confronting us, that we must in the fulfillment of that obligation entertain from this platform no suggestions of measures or of men unless brought to us freed from selfish motives and personal ambitions.

If we are to fulfill that obligation, we shall here nominate one whose personal history gives full assurance of a sympathetic understanding of the problems at hand and whose experience in private life and as a public official holds out the promise that these problems will be met with efficiency, honesty, and courage. Specifically, it means that he who carries the standard of Americanism in the weeks that are to follow must have a clear conception of the problems of those who labor, gained not from a detached theoretical viewpoint but because he has labored; that he must have a realization of the needs of those in distress, not from the information of others received in surroundings of luxury but from personal contact with those who have been in want; that he shall know the problems of those who cultivate the soil not through what he has learned from others who ponder these questions in academic halls but by having lived among them and having heard the story from their own lips. He must know something of the difficulties and intricacies of American business life, not from economists who have never known the necessity of meeting a pay roll but from his own experience in business. He needs must realize that the disbursement of public funds is a public trust and not a political revelry, and he is the more apt to have that realization if his own property has not been bestowed upon him but has been gained through his own efforts.

Fully conscious of the duties and obligations I conceive to be mine as a delegate to this convention and appreciating the character that we must require of our nominee, I give you the name of a Republican Governor from a Republican State—Alfred Mossman Landon, of Kansas.

The personal history of Governor Landon is a story of modern America. It is a tribute to individual opportunity and to individual character. Governor Landon was no more favored by fortune than millions of his fellow citizens. His education and upbringing were not those which great riches can purchase. His heritage did not include material wealth. But he did share with millions of the rest of us in the mighty fortune with which American principles of life and American opportunities for life have endowed us. Faith in America and confidence in themselves guided Governor Landon's parents while he was a boy, and that same faith has guided him in his activities as a man.

In common with the great majority of his fellow citizens, Governor Landon learned from the precept and example of his parents the abiding virtues of work, of honesty, of thrift, of modesty, and of tolerance, and he learned also the excellent and unanswerable reasons why these virtues remain with us while others less substantial fade away.

In common with all of his generation he shared the advantages of our great system of public education. In common with millions of us he was a member of the armed forces of the United States. But more important, because more characteristic of our Nation, Governor Landon has shared directly in the work of America. Huge as was the Army mobilized for war, it was nothing compared to the vast army of workers who have in every generation, by their own initiative and by their own cooperation with each other, built and rebuilt America.

Governor Landon knows what it means to labor, for under the burning sun of Oklahoma and Kansas he lived and worked in the oil fields with the grizzled veterans of the wire lines, the walking beams and the bull wheels. Governor Landon knows what agriculture means. His business has been with farmers. His customers have been farmers. His neighbors and his friends have been farmers. Governor Landon has known what it means to worry. You worry when the livelihood of yourself and those who work for you depends alone upon your judgment and ability. Governor Landon knows what it means to combat hidden powers working under any name. You have to fight when your independence and your very existence are threatened by great combinations of wealth. Governor Landon as a businessman kept his independence. He met his pay rolls. He made the business pay. He knows that no business which does not pay can long continue to meet the pay roll. He knows the various forces which affect the delicate adjustment of business and the balance of which is essential to our prosperity.

Governor Landon did not amass great wealth from his business, but he earned his living and he earned a reputation. A reputation for knowing how to work, a reputation for keeping his word, a reputation for being far too intelligent to be fooled and far too courageous to be frightened. It is not without effort that a man can earn his living and such a reputation; and such an achievement is sufficient for most men in their lifetime. But the tradition of this country is not only that its citizens should work, but that they should also govern themselves. Governor Landon did not wait to assume his responsibilities as a member of a self-governing community, a self-governing State, and a self-governing Nation. From the time he was old enough to assume the simplest duty of a citizen—the duty to vote—he informed himself, through contact and experience, of the workings of this machinery of self-government.

It is not, therefore, by chance that Governor Landon received that experience in both business and government which the party and the country recognize as an essential qualification for our leader. He learned the one as he learned the other from the ground up, not with the hope of furthering personal ambitions but with the purpose of fulfilling his full duty as a citizen of his country.

Governor Landon's initial political success was based upon the opinion his fellow citizens had formed of his knowledge, his reputation, and his character as shown in business and on the smaller stages of politics. No one could tell, when he was first elected Governor of Kansas, that that knowledge and that reputation and character would be sufficient to allow him to assume with credit the new responsibilities of high public office. That he did so, not only adequately but brilliantly, is a part of the history of my State. He did not change in character as Governor from the man who had run for Governor or from the successful businessman interested in local politics. Moreover, under the white light of merciless publicity that glares on every Presidential candidate, Governor Landon has remained unchanged, with the same sense of proportion which he has always had. He is still of the people, and in recent weeks the voice of acclaim arising from the rank and file of men that make up the American democracy has shown that these facts are widely appreciated.

In Kansas, Governor Landon has made State administration not complex but simple. He has not sought to give the impression that it is a task to be assumed only by supermen. It is my prediction that as the standard bearer of his party he will be elected to the Presidency and he will meet the multiple problems of that office in a similar spirit, which will create the same feeling among the citizens of the Nation; and the creation of that feeling will go far toward restoring the essential confidence of our citizens in themselves and in their Government, which is the Nation's greatest need today.

Through 3½ years we have heard much talk of emergency. Emergency has been advanced as an argument for the breaking of campaign pledges, for a reckless spending of public funds, for the creation of a bureaucracy, for the appointment of public officials for reasons of personal loyalty rather than merit, and for a bewildering succession of inconsistent and impracticable measures which have retarded recovery and created uncertainty. Yet Governor Landon was elected to his office at the same time that the New Deal administration was elected to power. He faced in his capacity as a State executive, emergencies of the same kind that confronted the national Executive. He faced also the same question of whether he should in that emergency break the pledges he had made in his campaign or whether he should keep those pledges. The answers given by the new President and the new governor were different and they were in character. For, as we have seen from the public record of the two of them, their characters were different.

There is nothing easier than to break a contract once you have convinced yourself that contracts can be broken. There is nothing easier than telling a half-truth to cover that broken contract once you have decided that truth is out of style. There is nothing easier than to promise all things to all men when your conscience is sufficiently elastic. There is nothing easier than to take any means at hand to secure votes once you have decided that you value votes more than your own self-respect. There is nothing easier than spending money you do not have to pay, and it is easy and amusing to indict and condemn the motives of your opponents when you have lost your sense of proportion and have become convinced that you, and you alone, are indispensable to the people.

Adopton of the policies that have ruled in Washington for the last 4 years would have been just as easy in Kansas—except for one thing, that Governor Landon had not seen fit to take the first steps toward unreliability. His answer to emergency was different. He decided that even if citizens were losing confidence in all else around them, at least they would not have cause to lose confidence in their new Governor.

He promised economy; he gave economy. He promised cooperation with the legislature; he cooperated with the legislature. He promised appointments on the basis of merit, and he made his appointments on that basis. He swore to uphold the Constitution, and he upheld it, for to him the Constitution was not an obstable to be circumvented but a tool to be rightly used. He avoided personal abuse in his campaign, he avoided it in his administration, and in that administration neither deceit nor malice have had a place. In his personality there is neither intolerance nor egotism. He has never been removed from the body of the common people, and I predict that no honor will ever so remove him. He has been and is, simply and plainly, one of the ordinary folk of this country, and his conception of his duty in any public place will be to be the servant of all and the master of none.

With this record and this character, Governor Landon stands before the Republican Party—representative as is no other man in public life today of the resurgence of a demand for individual opportunity and for real self-government in America. The people of our country look to him to lead them back from the deceptive shadows of uncertainty to the honest sunlight of reality.

We have met here as representatives of the Republican Party to adopt a platform and to nominate a candidate. We have adopted our platform. We have pledged ourselves to certain principles and to certain policies. I know that Governor Landon as the nominee of this party will, when elected, carry out its pledges. Months before this convention met he indicated to the party and to the country the position which he took upon the basic issues confronting us.

He has plainly expressed his concern in the problems of the farmer, for he knows it affects every phase of our social and economic life. He knows that the farmer is entitled to receive for his crop a fair price, comparable to the price of the commodity he buys, and that he should not have the value of his labor and his produce affected by artificial handicaps. He is determined that there shall be a solution of those problems, but not at the cost of the farmer's rights as an American citizen.

Governor Landon has made clear also the basic policies which should be adopted by the Government in order that we may realize a business recovery which is permanent. He has made fully clear that the first essential must be the restoration of confidence. Confidence in the currency, confidence in the credit of the Government, and above all confidence in the honesty and efficiency of the Federal administration. As essentials for creating this confidence he has proposed a sound and stable monetary system, a more effective Budget making by the Executive, and a policy of reasonable economy in the expenditures of public funds. He has given his opinion that work for those who want it will come and only come from the assurance of business and industry; that they may plan wisely for the future without fear that their plans may be dislocated at any time by a multitude of wildcat schemes.

No friend of monopoly in any business, Governor Landon has announced without equivocation that we must attack the evils of monopoly frankly and resolutely, and must insist that Government keep in force at all times a fair competitive system.

His position on other issues is based upon this same determination to preserve equality—equality of justice under law, and equality for the wage earner in his negotiation with the wage payer. Months ago he urged us as Republicans to make it clear to the needy everywhere that the changes we pledge in the administration of relief will in no wise jeopardize the aid which the needy must receive, but will entirely be directed toward bringing order out of chaos by purging the Federal relief administration of partisan waste and incompetence.

Governor Landon, a product of modern America, is aware of the changes which modern American appliances and machine-minded civilization have brought about. He knows that the duty of government is to protect those handicapped by conditions over which they have no control. And in his own words "we have begun to protect childhood but the obligation to protect old age lies straight before us." He has condemned the present administration's debauching of the civil service and has contended that the merit system in Government employment must be restored, improved, expanded, and extended to include the opening up of the higher positions.

Governor Landon's attitude on these questions springs from patriotism and not partisanship. Accordingly he has made his appeal far beyond party lines to those citizens—Republicans, Democrats, and independents alike—who want the Government to play its proper part in meeting the problems of our times, but who wish it to do so without wasting the substance of the people or endangering their future. He believes that these moderate people want neither radicalism on the one hand nor reaction on the other; that they want performance and not promises; that they want the elimination of the hysterical tone from the Government; that they are tired of epithets, evasions, and sophistries; that they want no flouting of the Constitution, whether by Executive evasion, loose legislation, or pernicious propaganda; that they condemn attempts to create class divisions in a country that knows no classes; and that they propose to solve their problems in accordance with the American system. This great group of moderate-thinking people make up the vast majority of this Nation. It is this group to which Governor Landon has appealed. It is this group which he represents.

The policies of division, despair, and defeat may be effective in the building up of a political machine, but they will never bring a permanent recovery of employment. They will never bring about a permanent restoration of confidence, and they will never help to build the kind of future to which Americans have a right to think their country is entitled and toward which our history and our destiny most surely point.

Governor Landon has dared to voice above the welter of cynicism and despair, created and approved by men in the highest places in the land, a few of the essential facts and essential beliefs by which mankind has been surely guided in past centuries in its slowly succeeding struggle toward material progress and spiritual growth. He has had the courage not to attempt to compete in promises and panaceas with the false prophets who for three and a half years have misled and deluded the public. He has not been afraid to recall our minds to the truth inherent in such supposedly out-worn phrases as the ones which say "there is no substitute for courage" and "his word is as good as his bond." He has been willing to run the risk of being termed old-fashioned in order to reassert his opinion that phrases such as these imply a sense of values we cannot afford to lose.

We have been through bitter times, and they have left their mark. Our generation has seen the collapse of the financial chicanery that was to make us millionaires, and the collapse of the political chicanery that was to make us kings. Grimly we know that neither can achieve its promise, that the result of one is poverty and of the other loss of our liberties.

From its inception, through its darkest hours, in its worst crises, the United States has—and I say it with all knowledge of its meaning—held in its hands the hope of the future progress of the world. Here, then, is our responsibility. Here is the crisis which we must meet and here is the choice which we must make. Here is a record of a modern American—unpretentious, unassuming, willing to serve—but not eager to dictate. Here is a homely record, if you will, and here are homely virtues and common sense answers. Here is no gilt and here no theatrical dramatics, no overwhelming egotism, no self-righteousness, no pretense of supremacy. Here is a man who is the product of our own country and our own time, who has made his way as we have had to make ours, and who has assumed at each turn of his life the obligations imposed on him and who has fulfilled those obligations in each instance with credit. Here is a man of typical prairie State who has retained within his heart the spirit and the inspirations of those who came before him and of whom Whittier wrote:

"They crossed the prairies as of old
The Pilgrims crossed the sea,
To make the West as they the East
The homestead of the free."

Here is a man, Governor of a great State, with an enviable record in that high office, proving that administration may have vision and yet be honest and efficient.

Here are the policies for which he stands and the methods which he proposes, and here is something more besides—the undefinable qualities evidenced in his character and record which meet the needs of the people of this Nation.

Behind Governor Landon, as standard bearer of the Republican Party, will rally a united party, for he has a genius for creating unity. Behind Governor Landon will rally that great group of citizens without regard to party label, who wish to see performance and not propaganda, confidence and not confusion. Behind Governor Landon, carrying the standard of young America, will rally that great section of the people who wish to repudiate the alien philosophies and out-worn theories and who, without regard to their own age, are young enough to have faith that we can build a greater country by carrying forward the dynamic American doctrines of hope, of tolerance, and of effort. With Governor Landon's leadership, we can assure a Republican victory in the coming election, and under Governor Landon's leadership as President of the United States we can gain a national victory over the forces of depression and despair.

Here and today the Republican Party makes a choice for itself and for America. Let us then reflect the worthiest traditions of a mighty past and make certain of a mightier future by meeting our obligations for that choice with the one man who can rally to a glorious cause the rank and file of all America, and that man is Alfred Mossman Landon.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ACT PROHIBITING INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION OF PRISON-MADE GOODS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the opinion of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit sustaining the constitutionality of the act of Congress of July 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 494), the so-called Ashurst-Sumners Act, which prohibits the interstate transportation of prison-made products.

The case reached the circuit court of appeals upon appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Kentucky.

The law firm of Hawes & Walsh, of Washington, D. C., and Mr. Bon Geaslin, of that firm, successfully handled the litigation involving the sustaining of this law. I also ask that the letter addressed to me by Mr. W. C. Roberts, chairman of the legislative committee of the American Federation of Labor, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the opinion of the circuit court of appeals and the letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., June 11, 1936.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman, Judiciary Committee of the Senate,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: As you were one of the sponsors of the Ashurst-Sumners Act, I thought you would be pleased to read the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals of the Sixth Circuit sustaining the constitutionality of the law. Therefore, I am enclosing a copy.

Besides, it has some bearing on the amendment to the Ashurst-Sumners Act providing that all articles within a container shall be marked "prison made."

Very truly yours,

W. C. ROBERTS,
Chairman, Legislative Committee,
American Federation of Labor.

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit
No. 7235

KENTUCKY WHIP & COLLAR CO., APPELLANT, v. ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD CO., APPELLEE. APPEAL FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY

Decided June 1, 1936

Before Moorman, Hicks, and Simons, circuit judges.

Moorman, circuit judge. The appellant employs convict labor in the manufacture of horse collars and strap goods, including harness, in a State penitentiary at Eddyville, Ky. It tendered to the appellee, a common carrier, at its station at Eddyville 25 packages of collars and harness manufactured by it for shipment to customers in States other than Kentucky. Some of the packages were consigned to customers in States whose laws prohibit the sale within their borders of any goods or merchandise manufactured or produced by convict labor other than by convicts or prisoners on parole or probation; others were consigned to customers residing in States whose laws do not prohibit the sale therein of convict-made goods but require that any such goods exposed or offered for sale shall be plainly marked so as to indicate that they are convict made; and others to customers residing in States whose laws impose no restrictions upon the sale or possession of convict-made goods within their borders. The appellee refused to accept the packages for shipment, giving as its reasons therefor the prohibitions and requirements of the act of Congress of July 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 494), the Ashurst-Sumners Act, which declares: (1) That it shall be unlawful to transport or cause to be transported any goods, wares, or merchandise manufactured or produced by convicts or prisoners, except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation, from one State or Territory to another State or Territory in the United States, where such goods, wares, or merchandise are intended by any person interested therein to be received, possessed, or sold, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such State or Territory; and (2) that all packages containing any goods, wares, or merchandise manufactured or produced by convicts or prisoners, except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation, when shipped or transported in interstate commerce, shall be plainly and clearly marked so that the name and address of the shipper, the name and address of the consignee, the nature of the contents, and the name and location of the penal or reformatory institution where produced may be readily ascertained on an inspection of the outside of such package. Following the refusal, the appellant brought this action against the appellee seeking a mandatory injunction requiring the appellee to accept the goods for shipment when retendered to it and for a decree declaring the Ashurst-Sumners Act an illegal exercise of the legislative power of Congress in violation of the fifth and tenth amendments to the Constitution. The trial court found as a fact that the appellant had not labeled any of the packages so as to indicate that the articles therein contained were convict made, and dismissed the bill.

The decree is attacked on the ground that it gives effect to a statute which the Congress had no power, under the commerce clause of the Constitution, to enact. It is alleged in the bill that the articles tendered to the appellee were not "in any particular whatever harmful to health, or to the peace, good order, or general welfare of the communities into which they are shipped or in which they are used." The lower court found, without hearing evidence, that they "are useful articles of commerce, and are not in themselves in any particular harmful to the health, peace, or good order of the communities into which they are shipped or in which they are used." It is upon the theory that the goods are innocuous in their character that the appellant insists that the act in question is invalid. We think a proper analysis of the argument is to be made in the light of the effect of the sale of the goods in competition with goods manufactured by free labor. In this view it is pertinent to consider that a "preponderant number" of the States have enacted statutes either prohibiting the sale of convict-made goods within their borders or requiring such goods, before being offered for sale therein, to be plainly marked so as to indicate the source of their manufacture. "All such legislation", as said in Whitfield v. State of Ohio, — U. S. — (decided Mar. 2, 1936), proceeds upon the view that free labor, properly compensated, "cannot compete successfully with the enforced and unpaid or underpaid convict labor of the prison." It was also said in that case that there is "ample support in fact" for the view that the sale of convict-made goods in competition with the products of free labor is an evil. From these pronouncements it is obvious that the legislation of the States designed to prohibit this evil must be deemed to have been enacted pursuant to a sound public policy; indeed, it was so held in the case just referred to in sustaining such legislation in Ohio. The question for decision therefore is whether Congress, in aid of the enforcement of a valid public policy of the States, may pass a law excluding convict-made articles from interstate commerce, or requiring the packages containing such articles to be labeled to indicate that the contents are convict made before permitting them to be shipped in interstate commerce.

The act in question is the culminating step in a course of Federal legislation dealing with convict-made goods similar to that enacted by Congress with reference to the transportation of intoxicating liquors. In January of 1929 the Congress passed the Hawes-Cooper Act (45 Stat. 1084), which provided that all goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners, except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation or in any penal or reformatory institution, except commodities manufactured in Federal penal and correctional institutions for use by the Federal Government, transported into any State or Territory of the United States for use, consumption, or sale, should, upon arrival and delivery in such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though such goods, wares, and merchandise had been manufactured, produced, or mined in such State or Territory, and should not be exempt therefrom by reason of their being introduced in the original package or otherwise. The act is almost identical with the language of the Wilson Act (26 Stat. 313), which dealt with intoxicating liquors, and which was upheld against the contention that it was a delegation of Federal power to the States. In re Rahrer (140 U. S. 545); Rhodes v. Iowa (170 U. S. 412). The Hawes-Cooper Act was upheld in Whitfield v. State of Ohio, supra. Finding that the Wilson Act was not effectual in preserving to the States their freedom to establish and pursue their own public policy affecting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors within their borders, the Congress enacted the Webb-Kenyon law (37 Stat. 699), which prohibited the shipment of intoxicating liquors from one State or Territory into another State or Territory intended by any person interested therein to be received, possessed, sold, or used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such State or Territory. That act bore the same relation to the Wilson Act as the act here in controversy bears to the Hawes-Cooper Act. It was upheld in Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Ry. Co. (242 U. S. 311).

The appellant contends, however, that the decision in the Clark Distilling Co. case and the cases sustaining acts closing the channels of interstate commerce to lottery tickets, impure foods and drugs, stolen automobiles, and the transportation of women for immoral purposes are inapplicable, because the Congress was dealing in those acts with subjects inherently harmful, and its products are useful and harmless. A sufficient answer to this contention, it seems to us, is that the evils which legislation of this character seeks to remedy are not only those inherent in the nature of the article but also those resulting from its employment and disposition. It further contends that the right to exclude its products is controlled by the Child Labor cases (247 U. S. 251 and 259 U. S. 20), holding invalid an act of Congress forbidding the transportation in interstate commerce of goods made by children of certain ages. The Court was of opinion and held in those cases that the act was an attempt by Congress to impress its views of a desirable State public policy upon the States, and that Congress could not interfere with the purely internal affairs of the States by enacting legislation fixing a minimum age at which children should be permitted to work, a subject reserved to the States under the Constitution. The cases, in our opinion, are inapplicable, for in the act here under consideration there is no attempt to foist or impose a policy on the States. The act is a regulation of commerce among the States, but does not invade or interfere with the power of the States to regulate their own internal affairs. It was enacted in aid of the maintenance and enforcement of State laws, as was the Webb-Kenyon Act, which was held to be a legitimate exertion of the power to regulate commerce and not to be a delegation of congressional power to the States. The child labor acts, too, did not attempt to preserve to the States their freedom to establish and pursue their own policy within their borders, but attempted to use the powers of Congress over interstate commerce to impose a policy upon the States in their internal affairs, to which the Federal authority does not extend.

Since Congress has the power to prohibit the shipment of convict-made goods into States having laws prohibiting the sale or possession of such goods or their exposure for sale without labeling them, it would seem necessarily to follow that in aid of the enforcement of such prohibitions it may require a labeling of all packages containing convict-made goods shipped or transported in interstate commerce regardless of their destination.

The decree is affirmed.

ADDRESSES DELIVERED BY THE PRESIDENT IN TEXAS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the memorable speeches and addresses delivered in Texas by President Roosevelt during the course of his recent trip.

There being no objection, the addresses were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT, AT SAN JACINTO BATTLEFIELD, HOUSTON, TEX., JUNE 11, 1936

There are but few spots in the United States which have witnessed events equal in significance to that which took place at San Jacinto.

Here a century ago was a great frontier of our civilization. On the 21st day of April 1836, General Houston and the small body of less than 800 men under his command held in large measure in their keeping the future of our country as it is constituted today.

The patriots whose memories we are honoring today were victorious in the same spirit that fired the Colonists of 1776. I like to think of General Houston sending Deaf Smith back to destroy Vince's bridge, over which he had brought his army, so that neither reinforcements nor retreat were a possibility.

Most of these men had come across the Alleghenies or from the settlements of Kentucky and Tennessee and Missouri into that vast virgin territory over which our now friendly neighbors south of the Rio Grande then held sway. The spirit of independence lived in the air. Veterans of Concord and Lexington, or Saratoga and of Yorktown still lived; the acquisition of the Louisiana territory and the second war for independence were events of recent history; and, be it not forgotten, the people of Mexico themselves had won their independence from Spain but 15 years before.

Venturous spirits were willing to meet the difficulties and dangers that came with carrying the civilization of the East into the farther West—the land of unlimited promise. They were willing to comply with all the conditions required by the Mexican Government when it gave to Stephen F. Austin permission to settle colonies in Texas and to grant to each settler a tract of land.

They rebelled, however, when their civil liberties were restricted, when trial by jury and public education for their children were taken away, but they did this, I am glad to say, only after a prolonged effort on their part to have Mexico modify this decision had failed. These efforts included two conventions, one in 1832 and one in 1833, and another trip by Stephen Austin to the Mexican capital to plead the cause of the Texas colonists. I am glad also that participating in these conventions and in these pleas were Mexicans living in this territory; the first convention, indeed, appointed Rafael Manchola, a Mexican of Goliad, as a delegate to carry its petitions to Saltillo.

And so, when all else failed, the Texas declaration of independence, signed at Washington-on-the-Brazos, March 2, 1836, was as natural and inevitable a consequence as the earlier Declaration at Philadelphia on July 4, 1776.

Such action could mean nothing short of a resort to arms, and the fall of the Alamo and the massacre at Goliad soon followed. Those were discouraging days for the Texans. The Army of Independence, under General Houston, could not immediately engage General Santa Anna, with his superiority in numbers and equipment. Delay and retreat were necessary, and Houston's sagacity in biding his time, notwithstanding criticism and opposition in his own camp, was rewarded at last here at San Jacinto. The story of the conflict on this field has often been told. When the day was ended victory was overwhelming—Texas had won.

The vast territory first set up as the Lone Star Republic, and later admitted to the Union as the Lone Star State, has contributed generously in its sons and in its resources to the development of our Nation in these hundred years. San Jacinto opened another gateway for the westward sweep of the American people across the plains and the mountains to the shores of the Pacific.

It is easy, therefore, to share with you the pride which you take in San Jacinto—to share with you the fine thought of dedicating this field as one of the historic shrines of America.

We as a nation desire no further expansion. The establishment of Texas, made possible at this spot by Sam Houston's men, seems to have been justified by the natural colonization of later years. But these heroes gave us more than territory—they set an example which in itself is a glorious heritage, a just cause for State and National commemoration.

It is a great personal satisfaction to me to come here, and it is a special pleasure to meet Mr. Andrew Jackson Houston.

What a splendid combination of names. Though you are many, many years my senior, I am proud to know that my father knew your father. I shall always remember, when I was a boy, how my father used often to tell me that, when he was a very young man, he was sent to Washington by his law office to carry papers to Senator Houston. He told me how, on arriving in Washington, he was ushered into a huge, high-ceilinged room in one of the Capital's balconied hotels on Pennsylvania Avenue. There, propped up in a great bed, nightgown and nightcap, though it was past the noon hour, lay that splendid old man, who had been Governor of Tennessee, liberator of Texas, President of the Republic, Governor of Texas, and Senator from his State. There he was, holding a levee, transacting public and private business, and preparing for the session of the Senate, which, in those days, did not commence until the late afternoon. His office and his home was his hotel room. It would seem that the manners and customs of the Senators of the United States, like other manners and customs, have undergone a great change.

This and the eastern part of your great State, through which I came this morning, can truly be called the cradle of Texas liberty. I have been glad to revisit your beautiful city of Houston. Typical of American enterprise, you have brought the commerce of the world to your door by the ship canal through which I have recently passed.

And, too, I have seen a glimpse of the future, for I have in my office at the White House a model of the beautiful memorial you are to erect here as an everlasting reminder of the bravery of Sam Houston and his men.

Men fought here for principles they loved more dearly than their own lives. Liberty-loving people will always do battle for principles they believe to be right. Civilization, alas, has not yet made it unnecessary for men to die in battle to sustain principles. It is, however, my hope that in this generation the United States, by its own example, can maintain and help to maintain principles by means of peace rather than by means of war.

The pioneers and the liberators of Texas, looking down on us today, would, I am certain, say amen to that.

ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, AT THE ALAMO, SAN ANTONIO, TEX., JUNE 11, 1936

Fate has been kind to me today. In my many travels a visit to the Alamo has hitherto been impossible. I therefore welcome the opportunity in visiting this shrine to pay my small tribute to the heroes who laid down their lives a hundred years ago in order that Texas might become, first, an independent nation, and later a mighty State in our Union.

We are not lacking in many monuments of noble deeds, but the Alamo stands out in high relief as our noblest exemplification of sacrifice, heroic and pure.

Travis and Bowie and Crockett and Bonham, and the hundred and seventy-eight who were their comrades, by their supreme sacrifice, made Texas live.

Without the inspiration of the cry, "Remember the Alamo", the great Southwest might never have become a part of the Nation.

Without the tradition of the Alamo, every community throughout the land, every young man and young woman about to enter upon the duties of citizenship would have lacked one of our noblest symbols of the American spirit.

I cannot help but feel that the brave men who died here saw on the distant horizon some forecast of the century beyond. I hope they know that we have not discarded or lost the virility and the ideals of the pioneer. I hope they know that the overwhelming majority of the Americans of 1936 are once more meeting new problems with new courage—that we, too, are ready and willing to stand up and fight for truth against falsehood, for freedom of the individual against license by the few.

Unlike them, we do not need to take up arms; we are not called upon to die; we can carry on a national war for the cause of humanity without shedding blood. The heroes of the Alamo fought not solely for their individual homes or their individual communities. They knew their families and their immediate neighbors could not survive if the great Southwest fell. United action alone could win. So we, in this latter day, are thinking and acting in terms of the whole Nation, understanding deeply that our firesides, our villages, our cities and our States cannot long endure if the Nation fails.

Travis' message, "I shall never surrender or retreat", is a good watchword for each and every one of us today.

It is with a feeling of deep reverence and humble veneration that I place a wreath on this shrine where the blood of a hundred and eighty-two Americans was shed—but not in vain.

ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT, AT AUSTIN, TEX., JUNE 11, 1936

It is a great regret to me that I cannot make a longer stop in Austin in order to receive the hospitality of the citizens as well as of your Governor in the capital of the State.

As San Jacinto and the Alamo represent to me the struggle for independence and the earlier days of the Republic, so this capital city represents the later days of the Republic, and these long years of statehood since Texas became the twenty-eighth star in the national flag.

I have recalled the amazing lives of General Houston, of Stephen F. Austin, of those who founded the German colony of Baron Von Bastrop, of that far-seeing son of Georgia, Mirabeau B. Lamar.

Texas has always had men who had a zest for life, for peace, for progress—men who have won honors at home and abroad. They have sat in this your capital city. They have served in the halls of the National Legislature and in Cabinets of Presidents.

The fine tradition continues. You know, I am sure, that I lean heavily on men and women from the Lone Star State, who are rendering such fine service to the Government of the United States. To one of them not only I but the whole Nation owes a special debt—one who began his long and distinguished public career as a member of your legislature here in Austin, one whom I proudly and affectionately call my helpmate—the Vice President of the United States, John N. Garner.

ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT, AT DALLAS, TEX., JUNE 12, 1936

I have come here to bear the tribute of the Nation to you on your hundredth birthday; you are a hundred years young.

I am here also because I conceive it to be one of the duties and the privileges of the Presidency to visit, from time to time, every part of the United States.

When I was appointed Assistant Secretary of the Navy by President Wilson in 1913, I had visited, as I recall, only about 20 States, but during the next few years I had the fortunate opportunity of going into all the others.

Seeing things at first hand is a good habit. I have been fortunate, indeed, for as a result of personal contacts with every part of the United States during many years past I have tried honestly to visualize the problems of every part of the land in their relationships to every other part and to the unity of the whole.

This great centennial exposition is not for Texans alone—it is for the people of all the other 47 States as well. I hope that they will take full advantage of it.

During the past 3 years, with the return of confidence and the great increase in prosperity, the excellent custom of getting acquainted with the United States has asserted itself. We see a great tide of travel by rail, by plane, by ship, and by automobile. We are indeed seeing things at first hand—may the habit spread.

Coincident with the return of better days, we have witnessed three great expositions—the Century of Progress in Chicago, so popular that it was kept open for a second year; the California International Exposition in San Diego, which is open today in its second successful year; and the third is this fine exposition commemorating the centenary of the independence of Texas. May you have all the good luck you so well deserve.

It is not mere acres that count in this world—it is, rather, the character of the people who dwell upon them. You, the people of Texas, have been tried by fire in these hundred years. You have commenced a war for independence. You have been apparently defeated, and then you have won out. You have gone through the difficult days of the War between the States and the trials of reconstruction. You have had to fight against oppressors from within and without.

Your farmers were among the first to rebel against exploitation by the railroads. In a period of monopoly, combinations, overcapitalization, high rates, poor service, and discrimination against the small shipper, you established a landmark in the regulation of public utilities for the good of their users.

Later, when industrial development came to Texas, you were confronted by corporations that got out of hand. Here again you called into play the old Texas spirit of freedom for the individuals, and out of it came your antitrust laws, preceded by only one other State in the Union.

It is, as I recall my history, a fact that during this period there were many prophets of evil who foretold the ruin of Texas by the enactment of legislation to curb these abuses. Yet it is a matter of record that several years later an authoritative survey reported this: "No part of the Union is more prosperous, no other State has so systematically pursued a policy of corporation regulation, and no other State is so free from the domination of special interests."

Why did the people of Texas do this more than a generation ago? They believed in democracy in government, but they discovered that democracy in government could not exist unless, at the same time, there was democracy in opportunity.

You found that certain forms of monopoly—the combinations of public utilities and other businesses which sought their own ends—were undemocratic because they were bearing down heavily on their smaller competitors and on the people they served. Because of this they were taking away opportunity.

Today we have restored democracy in government.

We are in the process of restoring democracy in opportunity.

In our national life, public and private, the very nature of free government demands that there must be a line of defense held by the yeomanry of business and industry and agriculture. Not the generalissimos but the small men; the average men in business and industry and agriculture—those who have an ownership in their business and a responsibility which gives them stability. Any elemental policy, economic or political, which tends to eliminate these dependable defenders of democratc institutions, and to concentrate control in the hands of a few small powerful groups, is directly opposed to the stability of government and to democratic government itself.

If the tendency in the dozen years following the World War had been permitted to continue, the inevitable consequence would have been the destruction of the base of our form of government. For its splendid structure there would have been substituted as a natural result an autocratic form of government.

I have spoken of the prophets of evil who plagued your great reforms in Texas. They were blood brothers of some who seek to operate on a national scale. After you in Texas had done so much to restore democracy in opportunity, you found, as we in other States found, that the evils we had sought to eradicate had merely jumped over the boundary into some other State. The old abuses of the railroads were finally curbed only after teeth were put into the interstate-commerce law and a Nation-wide regulation was made effective. Banking reforms were tried in many States, but here again reform became effective only when the Federal Government was enabled to operate throughout the Union, first by the Federal Reserve Act and finally by means of the splendid legislation of the past 3 years. Individual States attempted courageously to regulate the sale of securities or the control of exchanges, but you and I know that from the point of view of the Nation as a whole the effective curbing of abuses was made possible only when the Congress of the United States took a hand by passing the Securities Act and the Stock Exchange Act.

So it goes with the constructive reform of many other abuses which, in the past, have limited or prevented democracy in opportunity. The more progressive of the States may do their share, but unless the action of the States is substantially uniform and simultaneous, the effectiveness of reform is nullified—crippled by the chiselers, who, like many other evildoers, are, alas, still with us.

The net result of monopoly, the net result of economic and financial control in the hands of the few, has meant the ownership of labor as a commodity. If labor is to be a commodity in the United States, in the final analysis it means that we shall become a Nation of boarding houses instead of a Nation of homes. If our people ever submit to that, they will have said good-bye to their historic freedom. Men do not fight for boarding houses. They will fight for their homes.

I have spoken of the interest which all the country should take in this great exposition. I mean this is a symbol for the concern which every locality should have in every other locality in every other State. The prosperity which has come to Texas through the products of its farms and ranches, the products of its mines, the products of its oil fields, and the products of its factories has been made possible chiefly because other parts of the Nation were in possession of the buying power, the consuming power, to use what you have produced.

On the other side of the picture thousands of factories and thousands of farms in the North and in the East have been enabled more greatly to sell their wares, because of the prosperity of you, the people of Texas. I have spoken not once but a dozen times of the necessity of interdependence of each State on every other State. It is a lesson which cannot be driven home or preached too often.

I have taken great happiness in these past 3 years in the lessening of sectionalism which is apparent on every hand. More and more we have been thinking nationally. That in itself is good, but it would not have been good if at the same time we had not come to understand more deeply that the national good-neighbor policy must extend also to those neighbors who lie outside of our national boundaries. You in Texas whose boundaries extend for hundreds of miles along those of our sister Republic of Mexico can well understand what the good-neighbor policy means throughout the Americas. We seek to banish war in this hemisphere; we seek to extend those practices of good will and closer friendship upon which peace itself is based.

I salute the empire of Texas.

THE MONEY PLANK IN THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, on the 15th of the present month there appeared in the Philadelphia Record of Philadelphia, Pa., a very interesting and informative editorial entitled "Sold on Gold." I ask unanimous consent to have this editorial printed in its entirety in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia (Pa.) Record]

SOLD ON GOLD

Alf M. Landon rides off to the G. O. P. "holy crusade" against the New Deal—astride the golden calf.

The Republican platform plank on money is a meaningless straddle.

Landon at least deserves credit for having nerve enough to admit that he wants to go back to the old free-gold standard, to the monetary chaos which plunged this Nation into the economic abyss from which President Roosevelt rescued it.

Landon states plainly that he favors "a currency expressed in terms of gold and convertible into gold."

Wall Street could have asked no more. He has kept the faith—with the money changers.

Not a word in either the G. O. P. platform or Landon's statement about assuring the Nation a dollar of steady purchasing power, a dollar which today and in the future would assure justice as between debtor and creditor.

Yet that's the only kind of sound money, the only honest dollar.

You, the voter, sitting by your fireside, may wonder just how important it is to you what either Landon or the G. O. P. platform may say about money.

Take a dollar from your pocket. Analyze it.

It is a share in the Nation's purchasing power.

It is mighty important to you whether the purchasing power of that dollar is controlled in your interests or in the interest of the selfish few.

It is mighty important to you whether dollars are scarce or plentiful—because your standard of living is directly affected.

Money is the lifeblood of commerce, of the business in which you earn your living.

The control of money is the most important of all issues to you. And the best possible evidence of that is the persistence with which private interests fight, through the G. O. P., to regain control of the money system.

You know as well as we do men wouldn't fight like that for a trifle. It's big time. Big game. The biggest game to be won in politics.

Now, in the light of the dollar's importance to you, read Landon's statement and the G. O. P. money plank.

No assurance in either of stable money, of justice between debtor and creditor, now or in the future.

What good will it do the American wage earner to know that his dollar will buy so many ounces of gold—if he never can be sure whether it will buy 2 pounds of meat or 2 ounces of meat; whether he will have to work 1 hour, 2 hours, or 3 hours to earn a dollar to pay his debts?

What good will it do the American merchant to know that a dollar can be converted into so much gold—if he cannot tell from one day to the next approximately how much it will purchase in goods; how much business he will have to transact to meet his overhead?

Gold is neither a food for wage earners nor stock in trade for business.

Landon is concerned chiefly with how much gold you could buy with a dollar—if you wanted to buy gold.

But in your old age, if the dollar you saved would buy an ounce of gold and only an ounce of food—what good would that do you?

In the event of your death, if the dollar paid on your insurance would buy your family 2 ounces of gold and only a half-ounce of food—what good would that do them?

Neither you, nor your neighbors, nor your heirs can live on gold.

Why, then, is Landon sold on gold?

Because the old free-gold standard was only a screen behind which private interests managed the monetary system of the Nation.

The only difference between the managed currency the Republicans oppose and the gold standard is that under the old free-gold standard private interests did the managing—while, under the present system, Government does the managing.

That's the nub of the fight.

It's not a fight over whether the Nation's currency is to be managed. It's a fight over who's going to manage it—private interests or the people, through their Government.

The G. O. P. wants to "go back", as Senator BORAH predicted. And the old free-gold standard is the open sesame for the "old dealers."

That's why Landon is sold on gold.

The course for the Democratic Party is clear.

The New Deal plank on money must be as frank as the "old deal" plank is evasive; as clearly dedicated to keeping control of the monetary system in the hands of the people as the G. O. P. plank is dedicated to turning it back to the money changers.

Let the Democratic platform embody, in one form or another, the broad principles suggested in the following plank:

"We pledge continuance of sound money, with steady purchasing power of the dollar, which will do justice not only as between present debtor and creditor but also as between all who make commitments for the future in terms of the dollar.

"Since most present-day business is accomplished through transfer of bank credit, constant purchasing power of the dollar can be assured only by Federal regulation of national credit reserves as already provided by the Banking Act of 1935.

"To return to the old free-gold standard would be to surrender control of dollar purchasing power to the private interests which allowed it to fluctuate so disastrously as to close all banks in 1933. To return to the old free-gold standard is to invite monetary chaos and national disaster.

"Gold serves as a convenient medium for settling temporary balances between nations, but to place entire reliance upon it as a steadying influence is to ignore the lessons of the past, to be blind to present conditions throughout the world, and to abrogate power to regulate the value of money expressly granted the Federal Government by the Constitution."

These suggestions are advanced as a summary of liberal monetary principles, as highway markers by which every citizen may recognize the road leading, first, to a stable dollar, thence to stable purchasing power, and thence to the lasting prosperity of American business.

MR. TUGWELL'S POSITION IN THE NEW DEAL

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by David Lawrence entitled "Tugwell's Domination of Councils of the New Deal Seen in Tax Measure", published in the New York Sun of May 11, 1936.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Sun of May 11, 1936]

TODAY IN WASHINGTON—TUGWELL'S DOMINATION OF COUNCILS OF THE NEW DEAL SEEN IN TAX MEASURE

By David Lawrence

WASHINGTON, May 11.—From time to time it is reported that Prof. Rex Tugwell isn't in as high repute as he used to be with President Roosevelt, that he is "on the way out", and that the inner circle of the administration advisers are eager to oust him, at least for the duration of the campaign.

But the truth of the matter appears to be that Professor Tugwell comes and goes at the White House frequently, and while he scrupulously avoids the limelight, the Tugwell philosophy is more dominant today than at any time since the New Deal began. As a matter of fact, Dr. Tugwell knows more about what the New Deal's true purposes and objectives are and has more brains than anybody else in the New Deal, without exception.

Take, for instance, the tax on undistributed corporate surpluses, with which the Senate is now struggling and which it will modify somewhat for this year only as a sop to conservative opinion during the campaign.

To understand the meaning of the proposed tax on undistributed surpluses in relation to other reforms yet to come, as, for instance, the "allocation of capital", it is necessary to go to the foundation of the New Deal concept, described so effectively by Dr. Tugwell in his book Industrial Discipline, published in 1933 by the Columbia University Press, and followed since then by many legislative acts that have brought the doctrines into actual operation. It will be noted that some form of organization of industry into codes, as tried under the N. R. A. and as shortly to be revived under other legislation now pending, is an integral part of "planning" as the word is so often used by New Dealers. Dr. Tugwell writes:

"Capital allocation would depend upon knowledge, from some planning agency, of how much for a measured future period ought to be put to one use rather than to another. Given this information, the first step in control would be to limit self-allocation. This is the first great problem in this field.

"Assuming, however, that each industry had its various firms either combined or sufficiently closely associated for practical action, how, then, would the problem be attacked? In general the principle invoked would be to drive corporate surpluses into the open investment market; for most of the trouble comes from self-allocation occurring strictly within a single organization. It is overoptimistic internal expansion and the use of funds, earned in the past, to commit the concern to increased activity which cause the problems of surplus which yearly grow more acute.

"To meet this problem, it is frequently suggested that a tax be imposed on funds, over and above replacement, which are kept for expansion purposes. If taxation forced these funds into distribution as dividends, they would have to seek reinvestment through the regular channels, and a concern's plans for expansion would be subject to check in the investment market.

"Once all funds were forced into the investment market, however, some other means of supervising their uses would be needed. This might be done through the Federal incorporation of businesses. For new capital issues, then, revision of original charters would be necessary. An alternative to this sometimes suggested is a tax on unused capacity which those who argue for it believe would achieve many of these same results."

Now, since Dr. Tugwell wrote his book, the Federal Government has assumed the right to control the issuance of new capital securities; and, judging by the way the S. E. C. construes its powers and functions, the Government could very easily embark upon a program of telling each industry or business how much capital or capacity it might or should use. But, to continue the Tugwell doctrine, in the light of what is happening today with the bill for a tax on undistributed surplus:

"If funds were thus forced into the open investment market, and if there were control of new capital issues, the problem would be as adequately met as seems necessary to the advocate of the general idea.

"It will be seen, then, that the control of investment is not so complex a matter, at least in principle, as it might at first seem. The principles involved would be only two: The forcing of all investment funds into an open market and the regulating of new capital issues.

"Neither of these seems impossible, if we grant (1) the substitution of Federal for State incorporation, and (2) the correctness of using the taxing power to force surpluses into the market."

Dr. Tugwell's idea of using the taxing power to force the distribution of surpluses may have seemed to him in 1933 to involve perhaps some doubt as to constitutionality; but since that time the New Deal has determined to legislate first and litigate afterward anyway, so legal obstacles are no longer terrifying to the planners. Indeed, a bill to compel Federal incorporation of businesses has been introduced in both Houses and has the backing of the American Federation of Labor, which no doubt feels that its opportunity to force higher wages would be increased because of its political leverage upon anything the Federal Government controls directly or indirectly. Dr Tugwell's viewpoint on Federal incorporation is thus expressed:

"If industrials were to be controlled, incorporation of business enterprises would need, in effect, to be transferred from the States to the Nation, though some subterfuge might need to be employed; the flow of new capital into different uses would need to be supervised; prices would have to be controlled, and some vital interests, now partly or wholly neglected, would need to be protected. These last would include the weaker businesses, consumers, workers, farmers, and technicians, all of which suffer now from disadvantages and discriminations which are too obvious to be denied.

"All these seem, from the present point of vantage, necessary elements of a scheme which would give the Federal Government powers commensurate with the responsibilities widely laid at its doorstep."

There is something forthright about the Tugwell writings. Read now in the light of what has happened, the only criticism that might come from Tugwellites is that the New Deal has compromised, halted, wavered, and floundered instead of crashing through with every one of the fundamental precepts of economic planning, which in German and Italian fascism, has had at least the benefit of a consistent evolution of all parts of the program at the same time.

For political reasons the New Deal will not venture to do it, but the man who can write the best platform for the New Deal party to be adopted at the Philadelphia convention is the young professor of economics, who is the true author of most of the New Deal principles of the last 3 years.

MOTHER OF MOTHER'S DAY

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, by request, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD excerpts from an article entitled "Mother of Mother's Day", which recently appeared in the Country Gentleman.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Country Gentleman]

MOTHER OF MOTHER'S DAY

Many great things have come from the heart with an unselfish and sympathetic desire to serve humanity.

This is true of the Mother's Day work originated by Mrs. Anna Reeves Jarvis, known as the world mother of Mother's Day.

Mother's Day itself was founded and established by Anna Jarvis, of Philadelphia, to extend and perpetuate her mother's life work of the home, community, and church.

Other movements have annual drives, conventions, or events to emphasize their work.

The Mother's Day movement is emphasized through its annual Mother's Day celebrations the second Sunday in May.

ALL-NATIONS MOTHER'S DAY MOVEMENT

World achievements of the Mother's Day movement have been due to the tireless zeal of Anna Jarvis, the founder.

It is not always easy to introduce to the public mind a new cause, which Miss Jarvis learned to her great sorrow, humiliation, and loss.

But with no money to support her world work, excepting her own limited funds, with no paid staff of organized helpers to back her, she kept her ideals of the inspiration of her mother's life and work.

But more and more men and women everywhere are realizing the sincerity and burdens of Mother's Day work of the founder and give her loyal encouragement.

INTERNATIONAL FLOWER

The floral emblem of Mother's Day through the universal language and beauty of a flower, the carnation, expresses throughout the world the name of "Mother."

A floral symbol of motherhood was selected for this purpose because of Mrs. Jarvis' love for and use of flowers in her life work.

MOTHER'S DAY LETTER

The letter, like flowers, was one of the pre-Civil War features of the work of the mother of Mother's Day.

All during her life Mrs. Jarvis had sought to help the helpless and to write letters for anxious, distressed persons seeking their friends, lost through war or otherwise.

Her appeal for reunions was, "Write and come home", and it has echoed down the years until now millions of letters go around the world for Mother's Day and pilgrimages are made to homes, friends, and colleges.

From far-off Army posts in strange and isolated lands, from great gray battleships nosing their way through foreign seas, from grim prison cells, haunts of dire poverty, and homes of high and low degree are sent Mother's Day letters.

Many a parent's broken tie with son or daughter has been mended through the simple sending of a Mother's Day letter.

MOTHER'S DAY—WORLD FLAG DAY

After long effort Anna Jarvis succeeded in having passed by the United States Congress a joint resolution for the annual display of the American flag on Mother's Day [second Sunday of May]; she was a proud woman in the House gallery when this legislation was passed. She has official Government documents, including the President's signature pen and scores of letters pertaining to her resolution, which was the second Federal statute for the display of the American flag.

For 22 years, through this statute, Old Glory has been displayed on Mother's Day, from our National Capitol, every American consulate, and from homes and churches.

America is the only country that has such a Flag Day honoring its homes.

Old Glory was adopted by the United States Congress in Philadelphia, and it is singular that generations later a Philadelphia woman's efforts resulted in Federal legislation for the display of the flag.

FOREIGN LANDS JOIN IN

In foreign lands Mother's Day is revered through government and church decrees, ceremonial and memorial features of officials and citizens, and festivals of honor and joy by mother-loving sons and daughters.

MANY CAUSES ADVANCED

The Mother's Day movement and celebrations have been benefactors to many persons and things.

Representatives of the United States and foreign armies and navies commend and cooperate with Miss Jarvis to make Mother's Day a medium to strengthen the morale and home ties of the military personnel.

Organizations—women's suffrage and progress, temperance, prisons, old-age pensions, mothers' pensions, social security and allied work, hospitals, institutions, colleges, and other things have been beneficiaries of the work of Anna Jarvis and her mother through Mother's Day.

FIRST MOTHER'S DAY MEMORY TREE

Memory trees, carnations, letters, and home pilgrimages have become distinct features of Mother's Day.

The first Mother's Day memory tree honored the mother of Mother's Day—Mrs. Anna Reeves Jarvis, of Philadelphia.

From land to land, from heart to heart, have traveled the ideas born from the unselfish work of just one mother.

Little did Mrs. Anna Reeves Jarvis, mothering all who came to her, realize that she herself would prove the inspiration of an earth-wide movement—that she herself would one day be known to a grateful world as its "Mother of Mother's Day."

TRIBUTES

I would rather be the accepted author of Mother's Day than to be the King of England. (Hon. John Wanamaker, ex-Postmaster General.)

Miss Anna Jarvis, of Philadelphia, founded Mother's Day in our own United States. (Mrs. Alice M. French, founder, American War Mothers' Association.)

Mother's Day is a contribution of friendship around the world. Our 50 federated countries celebrate without commercialism. (Dr. Ella A. Boole, world president, W. C. T. U.)

Miss Anna Jarvis, founder of Mother's Day, has been honored by being selected both at the State and the national convention of the F. I. D. A. C. unit of the American Legion auxiliary as the outstanding character of West Virginia. (Convention, 1933.)

No honor anyone could have thrust upon him could compare with that which you have attained as founder of Mother's Day. (National President R. H. Pritchard, of National Editorial Association.)

POINT PLEASANT-GALLIPOLIS—SILVER BRIDGE CITIES

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, by request, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article which appeared in the State Gazette, of Point Pleasant, W. Va., on the 28th day of last May.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the State Gazette, Point Pleasant, W. Va., May 28, 1936]

POINT PLEASANT-GALLIPOLIS TO ISSUE FOLDERS—EXPECT TO PUBLISH 200,000 PIECES PUBLICITY ABOUT SILVER BRIDGE CITIES

An avalanche of publicity designed to appeal to tourists and build up a pride among Ohioans and West Virginians for this section will be issued very soon. The publicity in the form of folders are being designed at this time, and materials pointing out the places of historical interest are being compiled on both sides of the beautiful Ohio.

The folders are more elaborate than any ever before issued here. They will contain pictures, sketches, and a map of the region with places of unusual interest properly marked. Between 200,000 and 1,000,000 folders are expected to be issued in the next few months. Not only will the folders be placed for distribution but are also to be mailed over the United States. They will be made so that they can be mailed simply by placing an address and stamp on the front cover.

Dr. Charles E. Holer, of Gallipolis, the original and chief starter and accelerator of the idea, is enthusiastic about the results in tourist traffic found in such a campaign of publicity in other sections of the United States.

THEORY AND PROGRESS OF RECOVERY PROGRAM—ADDRESS BY HON. M. S. ECCLES

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address on the Theory and Progress of the Recovery Program, delivered by Hon. Marriner S. Eccles, Chairman, Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, at the Conference on Debt Taxation and Inflation, held at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York City on May 8, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PROBLEM IN 1933

As one who has followed with keen interest the comprehensive program adopted 3 years ago to bring about recovery, I should like to attempt to explain my understanding of developments since it was adopted and how, in my view, it may achieve and maintain the complete restoration which we all desire.

Let me first direct your attention to the conditions prevailing in 1932 and early 1933, and to that most fundamental of all economic data, the national income. The national income, which was estimated at more than eighty billions in 1929, had shrunk to half that amount by 1932. The annual buying power and debt-paying capacity of the community, therefore, had been reduced by more than forty billions. The problem of recovery was to raise that national income to above its 1929 level, which could only be brought about by the Government undertaking activities and expenditures which private enterprise was not in a position to undertake. How could it be accomplished?

Leaving aside plans which involved fundamental and far-reaching changes in our whole economic organization, the solutions offered to the country in 1933 were of two main types. On the one hand there were those who contended that all that was needed was the restoration of confidence. They insisted that it was essential to balance the Budget; that the gold standard must be retained at all costs; that no legislation disturbing to business should be enacted. On the other hand there were those who, like myself, felt that recovery in the present situation could only be achieved by bold and aggressive intervention by the Government, largely through underpinning the entire private credit structure, which had collapsed, and undertaking to restore purchasing power through relief, public expenditures, and other measures.

I think the hope of success by the former method rested on faith rather than logic. After all, a budgetary surplus did not prevent the downturn in 1929; a balanced Budget in 1930 did not prevent an acceleration of the decline. Not only were we on the gold standard in those years but gold was flowing in steadily. Efforts to balance the Budget in 1931 and 1932, maintenance of the gold standard, and the absence of reform legislation did not prevent us from descending to lower and yet lower economic depths. What reason was there for thinking that factors which failed to prevent or check the downturn would in themselves lead to an upturn?

THE QUESTION OF CONFIDENCE

Looking at this question of confidence a little more closely, let us try to see exactly what conditions are necessary for its establishment. With the national buying power cut in half, the demand for goods of all kinds was reduced accordingly. Industry as a whole possessed more than enough equipment to satisfy the current demand. What does confidence mean in conditions such as these? Does it not mean confidence that increased expenditure on plant, equipment, and inventory will be profitable? What businessman would have added to his plant, when he already possessed a great amount of excess capacity, merely because he read that the Budget had been balanced? It is difficult to understand why people would be expected to invest money in new enterprise when existing investments were becoming less profitable every day. It should not require any great insight to understand that a reduction of Government expenditures, while everybody else as a matter of self-protection was being forced to reduce expenditures, could only accentuate the processes of deflation by reducing buying power. An increase in tax rates at such a time would have had a deflationary effect to the extent that they reduced expenditures that otherwise would be made, and would consequently have yielded little, if any, additional revenue.

A belief that industry would have voluntarily entered upon capital expenditures in 1933 if the Government had restricted its expenditures and raised taxes is unrealistic to the highest degree. It displays an utter miscomprehension of the considerations that influence a businessman in planning expenditures. There must be a reason to believe that capital expenditures can be profitably made before they are undertaken. This profitable outlook existed at the bottom of the depression in but few industries, such as brewing, distilling, and gold mining. In these industries plant expenditures actually occurred and an abundance of capital was readily available. Why? Because there was confidence—that is, an expectation that funds could be profitably invested in these industries—which had been renewed by repeal of prohibition and the premium on gold.

What was the opportunity generaly throughout the country for profitable investment in new enterprises? Throughout industry there was excess capacity in relations to consumer buying power, nor was there any inducement for residential construction so long as it was cheaper to rent or buy than it was to build.

THE THEORY OF THE RECOVERY PROGRAM

Obviously, what was needed to absorb excess capacity generally was an increased demand arising from increased consumer buying power. And here, it seems to me, is the crux of the matter. Increased demand could come about only as a result of increased incomes; and increased incomes depended upon increased disbursements by industry or by Government or by both. As far as industry was concerned, it was being forced, in self-preservation, to reduce wages and expenditures of all kinds, thus rapidly increasing the number of unemployed, further shrinking consumer buying power and accelerating the deflationary forces which threatened complete collapse of the entire credit structure.

The only alternative under the circumstances was intervention by Government. Only in this way was it possible to arrest the forces of deflation by bringing about an increase in incomes, and hence an increase in the demand for goods and services of all kinds through increasing disbursements financed initially by borrowings rather than by taxes. Those of us who advocated this course believed that an increase in incomes brought about in this way would lead to an increase in the demand for goods. Industry would pay out more in wages and materials in making these goods. These payments would result in further increased demands until finally the stage would be reached when here and there individual businessmen would see some point in taking up deferred maintenance, in adding to plant, or venturing to establish a new type of service or industry. Here and there it would become profitable to build new houses as the demand for houses, and consequently rents, rose. As this process proceeded, we anticipated that tax revenues would increase as incomes increased, and the gap between expenditures and receipts would gradually close. A little later the whole burden of the recovery movement could rest on increasing business and individual expenditures, and the Federal Government could not only balance the Budget but could begin to retire the debt built up in the depression. The expenditures of the Federal Government can be fully justified solely on humanitarian grounds—on the urgent necessity of relieving the home owners and the farmers, who were about to lose their homes and their farms, and aiding the great army of unemployed who were destitute and helpless through no fault of their own. However, I feel that the expenditures are fully justified as a means of achieving business recovery.

Mr. Charles H. Franklin, in a recent article in the New York Sun, gives figures which show that emergency expenditures under the Roosevelt administration exceed taxes paid to the Federal Government in a number of Southern and Western States. He implies that expenditures have been made in these States for political reasons and that the people of the industrial States, which receive less in benefits than they pay in taxes, are being victimized.

In the first place, this argument overlooks the generally recognized principles that taxation should be in accordance with ability to pay and that the extension of Government benefits should be in accordance with need. It is implied by our form of government that these principles should have Nation-wide applicability. It follows that tax collections are heaviest in States where incomes are highest and relief expenditures are highest in States where incomes are lowest. Any attempt to restrict the workings of these principles to an area smaller than the Nation as a whole is likely to produce the same absurd results as the "block-aid" charitable campaign in New York City a few years ago, in which Mr. J. P. Morgan was invited to contribute just enough to support the necessitous persons who lived in his block, while the tenement dwellers of the East Side made contributions which were also in proportion to the need of their neighbors.

Figures are cited by Mr. Franklin purporting to show the per capita wealth of some of these agricultural and mining States is greater than that of New York. These figures are arrived at by dividing the total mineral and industrial wealth of the State by its population. For instance, in Arizona and Nevada the value of rich ore deposits, owned by a handful of corporations whose stockholders live on the eastern seaboard, is divided by the small population of those States. As measures of the economic condition of the people living in these States, the results are obviously worthless. The most nearly accurate measure of economic need is income. For the distribution of income by States the only figures we have are those derived from income-tax returns. In 1933, 1.6 percent of the population in the 25 States cited by Mr. Franklin filed income-tax returns as against 3.7 percent in the remaining 23 States. This is itself a rough measure of the income level of these States. The net income subject to income tax was $400 per capita in the 25 favored States as against $1,174 in the other States.

The administration is not only spending the proceeds of taxation; it is also borrowing. Moreover, the expenditures are part of a broad program to restore incomes throughout the country as a whole. The money that the Government is spending is largely money that is borrowed from the banks, insurance companies, and wealthy individuals. It is newly created money or money that was lying idle awaiting investment. If the Government did not spend it, nobody would spend it.

In this program it is essential that incomes in agricultural areas be increased as well as income in industrial areas. Industry cannot be prosperous with the purchasing power of one-third of the Nation's population at depression levels. If these expenditures had not been made, the farmers would have been without money to buy the products of industrial areas, the market for manufactured goods would never have expanded from depression levels, and unemployment among factory workers would have continued to increase. To take one striking example, since 1933 employment in the agricultural implement industry has more than tripled. Workers have returned to their jobs in the factories of Illinois and Michigan because rental and benefit payments were made to farmers in Texas and Montana.

Not all the benefits which the Federal Government confers on particular areas take the form of cash payments made directly by the Treasury. Perhaps the most important of these invisible benefits is tariff protection. For many years the people living in the agricultural areas of the United States have paid more for manufactured goods than would have been necessary if they had been able to buy these products from foreign countries. The localities and the industries whose growth has been facilitated by tariff protection do not pay higher taxes than localities and industries which have not received similar favors.

For these and other reasons it is impossible to measure the benefits received from the Federal Government against taxes paid by a State, a community, or an individual, and to say that New York pays more than it receives or Arkansas receives more than it pays. Particularly is this true where the expenditures are part of a program to restore the natural income to the high level consistent with our vast resources of manpower and productive equipment. In such a program it is natural that the increase in income should be participated in by those areas where it is most badly needed and by those groups which suffered the heaviest losses in the depression. But it is not only these groups which have benefited. Increased income for the farmer means better business for the manufacturer and more employment for the people who work in factories. In helping to finance the administration's program, the industrial areas are not only contributing to the relief of distress—they are helping to finance their own recovery.

HAS THE PROGRAM BEEN SUCCESSFUL TO DATE?

Has the economic philosophy of the past 3 years, which I have attempted to outline, fulfilled reasonable expectations?

The answer is to be found by looking without bias at the results to date. On the debit side we should put the gross increase in the Federal debt from $20,935,000,000 on February 28, 1933, to $31,459,000,000 on March 31, 1936, and the continuing large number of unemployed, many of whom are dependent on relief. Neither of these adverse factors is as unfavorable as most of the business and financial community have been led to believe. Against the increase in the debt must be offset the increase in the Treasury's cash balance from $221,000,000 to $2,866,000,000 in the same period (exclusive of the stabilization fund), and an increase in the recoverable assets of Government agencies from an estimated $2,400,000,000 to $4,300,000,000, largely in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which was used very largely to support directly the banking and private credit structure. So that this leaves a net increase in the national debt of $5,979,000,000, which is less than a month's national income in 1928–29. The annual interest charge on the Federal debt as computed at the end of March 1936 increased by only 8 percent over the end of March 1933. This may be compared with an increase in the gross debt of 50 percent in the same period. The total carrying charges amount to a little over 1 percent of our current national income; not, I think you will admit, an excessive burden.

In considering the continuing heavy volume of unemployment, it should be remembered that there were 2,000,000 to 2,500,000 of unemployed prior to the depression, and that the number of people seeking work has increased since then by 3,500,000 to 4,000,000, due to the increase in the number of those reaching employment age. The lack of employment in many cases of the principal breadwinner of the family is also responsible for other members of the family, who would not ordinarily be employed, seeking employment. More important than these considerations, however, is the fact that millions of workers who were formerly working only 1 or 2 days a week, and yet were listed as employed, are now working 4 and 5. The increase in man-hours worked, in other words, has been much greater than the increase in the number of men working. The introduction of labor-saving machinery has doubtless also played its part. I am not saying that the employment situation is at all satisfactory. I am merely saying that the progress has been far more substantial than appears at first sight. Because of the various factors I have just mentioned, the burden of relief has not diminished correspondingly with the increase in employment. As recovery proceeds we can, of course, expect relief expenditures to diminish.

INCOME, PRODUCTION, AND RESTORATION OF MONEY SUPPLY

On the favorable side of the recovery program to date I would stress particularly the rise in the national income and production, the restoration of the supply of money, increasing tax revenues, and the rise in building activity.

Although current direct estimates are not available, it would appear from other evidence that the national income is running currently about sixty billions a year as contrasted with approximately forty billions in 1932. The index of production has risen from 58 percent to 94 percent of its 1923–25 level. The supply of deposits of all commercial banks rose from $27,000,000,000 on June 30, 1933, to $37,000,000,000 on December 31, 1935, or about the predepression level, so that the contraction in the money supply which occurred as a result of deflation has been largely offset. This replenishing of bank deposits is chiefly attributable to the increase in bank holdings of Government securities and to the inflow of gold. It is directly attributable, in other words, to the relief and recovery expenditures of the Government and indirectly attributable to the revaluation of gold, which was a necessary condition for the reversal of the international flow of capital. In the absence of Government borrowing and the revaluation of gold no progress would have been made toward a restoration of the community's supply of purchasing power, since private loans and investments of banks continued to decline until 1935. It is encouraging to note that recovery is bringing about some increase in the demand for an extension of private credit by the banking system.

PROGRESS TOWARD A BALANCED BUDGET

Turning to Government revenues, the trend is most reassuring. In the calendar year 1932 they amounted to $1,880,000,000. In 1935, despite the nonpayment of part of the processing taxes, they amounted to $3,857,000,000, an increase of nearly $2,000,000,000. With bonus payments met and a revision in taxes enacted, this favorable trend should be accelerated so that we would have every reason to expect a balanced Budget within a reasonable period. Balancing the Budget through increasing taxes or decreasing expenditures, or both, as the national income is restored, is an absolutely indispensable element in the eventual and complete success of a program of recovery requiring Government intervention which entails large deficit financing.

ORDERLY CHARACTER OF THE RECOVERY MOVEMENT

Finally, I would stress the increasing activity in the heavy industries and in building construction. During 1934 and 1935 it was constantly said that the deficit-financing experiment had been a failure because heavy industry and building construction had not picked up substantially. Such criticism displayed a misconception of the necessary sequence of events. First, the process of forced liquidation, caused by deflation, had to be stemmed. Second, the demand for consumer goods had to be greatly increased before there could possibly be any inducement for corporations or individuals to add to productive capital facilities to provide more goods and services. Third, long-term interest rates had to be brought down to encourage and make profitable the use of capital for new enterprise, and to adjust, through refunding, a substantial portion of the existing debt structure on a supportable basis.

In the real-estate field liquidation had to be stopped and rents had to rise, this, together with lowered interest rates, bringing about a reopening of the mortgage market. All of these necessary steps took time. They could not have been accomplished in a much shorter space of time, considering the depth of the depression and the immensity of the problems thus created. For more than a year the improvement of underlying conditions has become increasingly steady and orderly in character. The ground has been well prepared. The national income has been increased by some 50 percent. Industry and finance have been enabled by the recovery program to improve greatly their financial position through increased earnings, adjustment and reduction of debts, and refunding on more favorable terms. Favorable long-term interest rates are available for financing in practically every field of activity. Rents have risen, hence real-estate values have increased, making it again profitable to increase building construction. Excess capacity in nearly every field of production is rapidly diminishing. The index of commodity prices has remained steady for more than a year.

THE PRESENT PHASE OF THE RECOVERY MOVEMENT

The present phase of the recovery movement is a most important one. Will the disbursements of private business and individuals increase sufficiently to warrant a lessening of the Government's contribution to the growth in the national income? It is encouraging to note that activity in the housing field is rapidly increasing; capital financing is gradually being undertaken for new enterprise; an expansion of private credit on the part of the banking system is in evidence; activity in the machine tool, industrial equipment, and heavy industries reflects substantial improvement.

Barring unforeseen contingencies, the present improvement should continue. The outlook at the moment is very encouraging.

CONCLUSION

The Federal Government cannot and should not decrease its expenditures on recovery faster than private industry is able profitably to take over the load. To do so would reduce consumer buying power and thus retard, if not reverse, the progress of recovery.

The flow of money must be maintained and increased in an expanding economy. If private capital fails to maintain and expand the flow and widespread unemployment exists or develops, Government must act as a compensatory factor.

Purchasing power can only be maintained by private business as a whole disbursing its income, or, insofar as it fails to do so, by Government expenditure either on the basis of deficit financing or by taxing in such a way as to insure the flow of funds that individuals and corporations otherwise would accumulate and maintain in idle balances, so that socially beneficial work will be provided for those who are able and willing to work but for whom private enterprise fails to provide.

I am sure that we will all agree that our objective should be the maintenance of long-term prosperity and the avoidance of the twin evils of inflation and deflation. The attainment of this objective depends not only upon the effective coordination of monetary and fiscal policies but also upon an enlightened body of public opinion.

PLATFORM OF FARMER-LABOR PARTY OF MINNESOTA

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD the platform of the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota.

There being no objection, the platform was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PLATFORM FOR AN ECONOMIC ORDER OF ABUNDANCE—THE PLATFORM OF THE FARMER-LABOR PARTY OF MINNESOTA

The Farmer-Labor Association in convention in March 1936 hereby renews its pledge to use its every effort to bring about an economic system in both State and Nation that will function for the general welfare of the entire people, enabling all to be assured of the fullest opportunity to provide for their material needs during their working years and to enjoy adequate protection in sickness and old age as a right—not as charity.

The Farmer-Labor Association of Minnesota recognizes that the United States has the most wonderful resources, great factories, and machinery of production and power, with millions of capable workers and farmers ready and able to produce food, clothing, and shelter in great abundance for all. At this time, when all could live in prosperity and happiness, we find that there are millions of working men and women in poverty, want, and degradation and hundreds of thousands of farmers, businessmen, and professional people who have become poverty-stricken and bankrupt.

We favor reforms in taxation and finance in order that the cost of Government be borne by those best able to pay. Production control and work relief can do but little in alleviating present distress and are only justified as temporary expedients to meet an emergency. The program of the present system constitutes a planned poverty; we advocate and demand a system of planned plenty. To effect a cure for economic ills changes must be fundamental.

Natural resources and monopolized industries essential to our national life and well-being must ultimately be collectively owned and democratically controlled and operated, to the end that democracy shall prevail in our industrial as well as in our political life.

No lasting recovery from the depression and no permanent prosperity can be achieved unless the homes and property of the farmers, the wage earners, the professional people, and small-business men are fully protected, and the opportunity to own homes and property is restored to the masses by production of plenty.

To achieve these ends we propose and recommend:

AMENDMENTS TO UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION

1. An amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering the Congress to pass laws eliminating child labor, regulating working conditions in industry, regulating agricultural and industrial production, providing security against old age, unemployment, and sickness, and providing for Government ownership of monopolistic industries and banking, except independent banks which stock is locally owned and who are financing independent merchants and farmers.

2. An amendment to the Constitution of the United States reducing the term of office of Federal judges from life to a term of not more than 10 years.

LEGISLATION BY CONGRESS

I. Financial assistance

Insuring individual ownership of farms and farm homes by refinancing the farmer at a low rate of interest. (Frazier-Lemke bill.)

Extending Government credit to farmer, worker, and consumer cooperatives for the purchase of plants for the processing and sale of their products at a fair price based upon the cost of production.

II. Production for use

Providing for the governmental operation of idle productive industrial units by the unemployed for the production of goods for the use of the unemployed.

III. Neutrality policy

Insuring the neutrality of the United States in any foreign war by prohibiting the sale and delivery of goods or the making of loans to nations engaged in any foreign war.

IV. Prevent discriminatory rebates

Making illegal the granting of price rebates and advertising credits by manufacturers to chain stores in discrimination against independent merchants and asking for further appropriations for the investigation of these and other unfair trade practices against independent merchants.

V. Education of youth

Providing adequate funds for a youth program designed to give our youth an opportunity for education and work. (Benson-Amlie bill.)

VI. Government to own munitions plants

Providing for Government ownership and operation of plants for the manufacture of armament and munitions of war.

VII. Conscription of wealth in war

As a further means of preventing war we demand the conscription of wealth in the event of war.

VIII. Pensions for widows and orphans of war veterans

Providing pensions for the widows and orphans of war veterans.

IX. St. Lawrence waterway

Ratifying a treaty with Canada for the building of the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes Waterway.

Giving the American market to the American farmer.

XI. Adequate housing

We favor the immediate establishment by the Federal or State Government, or both, of a housing program providing adequate and helpful housing at reasonable rents and employing building-trades men at trade-union rates.

XII. Banking

That Congress exercise the exclusive and constitutional power to coin money and regulate the value thereof.

XIII. Social insurance

That we fight for the passage of the Frazier-Lundeen social-security bill.

XIV. Civil rights

The Farmer-Labor Association being strongly opposed to dictatorship, calls upon the people of the United States to fight against the activities of those who advocate the establishment of a despotic dictatorship and tyranny in the United States, and it is the duty of the people to protect and fight for our democratic form of government and for the freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and lawful assemblage.

LEGISLATION BY STATE

I. Conservation

We advocate conservation of soil and forests; reforestation of depleted reserves; conservation of water supplies.

II. Banking

We advocate a reduction of the legal and contract rate of interest.

III. Agriculture

We advocate an adequate and effective license tax on oleomargarine and all butter substitutes sold and used in the State of Minnesota.

We advocate an extension of the mortgage-moratorium law.

IV. Old-age pensions

We advocate a generous old-age-pension law.

V. Labor

We advocate an amendment of the State constitution giving the State the right to establish minimum wages in industry and maximum hours of employment.

We advocate a law providing for State fund workmen's compensation.

We advocate substantial increased benefits under the Workmen's Compensation Act for permanent partial disability.

We pledge our support to all workers in their struggle for higher wages and better working conditions. We are against importation or use of thugs and strikebreakers in labor disputes.

VI. Education

We reaffirm our belief in equality of educational opportunity, and therefore propose the use of income taxes to decrease local school levies, payment of all special State aid in full, uniform budgetary procedure as opposed to strait-jacket expenditure-control legislation, creation of a more extensive program for youth between the ages of 16 and 21.

We oppose compulsory military training at all educational institutions supported wholly or in part by State funds.

VII. Party designation

We recommend that all candidates for the State legislature be elected by party designation.

VIII. Taxation

We oppose the adoption of proposed constitutional amendment no. 2.

We are unalterably opposed to a general sales tax.

We advocate an improved chain-store tax for the benefit of the independent merchant and the consumer.

We advocate amending the corporate excess-tax law to a flat 20-mill rate on all corporate excess.

We advocate an increase of money and credits tax to 5 mills.

We advocate an increase of the gross-earnings tax on large telephone companies, farmers' cooperative lines excepted.

We advocate an increase of the railroads gross earnings tax, of the occupation and royalty taxes on iron ore.

We advocate an increase on graduated net income taxes and on inheritance and gift taxes in the higher brackets, all of which would bring an addition of millions of dollars into the State treasury to relieve the unfair tax burden now carried by property.

IX. Cooperation

We advocate the formation of consumers' cooperatives, credit unions, cooperative banking and service organizations, including cooperative enterprises for health, housing, and rural electrification.

X. Civil Service

We advocate a civil-service law.

XI. Rural electrification

Realizing the importance of power in modern industry and home-life, we advocate the adoption of the power plan of the State planning board, providing for the creation of a State advisory power commission to make a survey of the actual and potential power capacity and need of the State; determining the cost of generation and distribution of power, setting up economic power districts into which municipally owned plants and rural electric cooperatives may form into leagues of municipalities for the generation and distribution of power and urging the removal of all legislative restrictions to the formation of such leagues of municipalities and cooperatives.

XII. Collective bargaining

We pledge our full support to the right of labor to organize and to bargain collectively.

XIII. Unemployed

We recognize the duty of the State to the unemployed and pledge the full resources and power of the State to the end that suffering and destitution among the unemployed and needy shall be eliminated.

THE FARMER-LABOR PARTY OF MINNESOTA

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, I ask consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Story of the Growth of the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota", by Henry G. Teigan.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STORY OF THE GROWTH OF THE FARMER-LABOR PARTY OF MINNESOTA

By Henry G. Teigan

The Farmer-Labor Party, like other political parties and organizations, is the direct reflex of economic interests. It did not originate as the result of plotting or planning on the part of a politician or group of politicians.

More specifically, the party is the political expression of the farmers and workers of the State—the real producers of wealth—and of their economic needs.

To give definite expression to the needs, hopes, and program of the farmers, workers, and other oppressed elements, the more active spirits of the Farmer-Labor movement have associated themselves in the Farmer-Labor Association.

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES

In its declaration of principles the Farmer-Labor Association sets forth its objective as being that of seeking "to unite into a political organization all persons engaged in agriculture and other useful industry and those in sympathy with their interests for the purpose of securing legislation that will protect and promote the economic welfare of the wealth producers."

Moreover, the declaration sets forth that—

"It is based on the principle that every person is entitled to an opportunity to earn a living and should be secure in the enjoyment of the fruits of his or her toil; that it is the prime function of government to guarantee and safeguard this fundamental right to every citizen."

OUTGROWTH OF LEAGUE

Chronologically speaking, the Farmer-Labor Association is the direct outgrowth of the National Nonpartisan League, launched in North Dakota in 1915. The league, though partisan in principle, was nonpartisan in its political tactics, making use of the old Republican Party in North Dakota to win political power.

After capturing the Republican nominations in the June primary of 1916, work of organization was started in Minnesota and in adjoining States in the following July. The same tactics used with success in North Dakota were resorted to in Minnesota.

In 1918 Charles A. Lindbergh, former Sixth District Congressman, was selected as the candidate for Governor. He and his Nonpartisan League associates in that primary election met defeat at the hands of the regular G. O. P. organization after a campaign marked with bitterness, war hysteria, and violence.

Finding it impossible to support either of the old party slates at the general election, independent candidates were placed in the field under the designation "Farmer-Labor." Again defeat was the result, but a new political party was created which in later campaigns was made use of and served to divorce the farmers and workers from any further attempt to use so-called nonpartisan methods in seeking victory at the polls.

By 1923 the Farmer-Laborites had won two United States Senators and two Members of the House of Representatives. Dr. HENRIK SHIPSTEAD was elected United States Senator in the election of 1922, defeating Frank B. Kellogg, Republican incumbent. At the same election O. J. Kvale and Knud Wefald, Farmer-Laborites, were successful in defeating their Republican opponents in the Seventh and Ninth Congressional Districts. At a special election for United States Senator in July 1923, caused by the death of Senator Knute Nelson, Magnus Johnson, Farmer-Laborite, was elected by a large majority over his Republican opponent, Gov. J. A. O. Preus.

GROUPS COOPERATE

The successes mentioned above were not achieved because of the personal popularity of the Farmer-Labor nominees. The victories were won because of rather unusual organization, both among the farmers and the workers. The old Townley organization, the Nonpartisan League, was unquestionably the most effective of its kind ever developed in this country. Its counterpart among the workers, the Working People's Nonpartisan Political League, launched at the 1919 New Ulm convention of the Minnesota State Federation of Labor, was an almost equally efficient organization among the industrial workers. The two cooperated splendidly, though somewhat cumbersomely.

FARMER-LABOR CONFERENCE HELD

To bring about a better understanding between the farmers and workers and to improve the efficiency of the movement as a whole, a State-wide conference was called by William Mahoney, president of the Working People's Nonpartisan Political League, and Henry G. Teigan, secretary of the Farmers National Nonpartisan League, to meet in Minneapolis in September 1923.

The Farmer-Labor Federation was formed at this conference. "Its purpose shall be to unite the members of farmer and labor organizations into a political federation", according to the minutes of that conference.

The campaign of 1924 was carried on under the auspices of the Farmer-Labor Federation. The odds, however, due to the Coolidge landslide and the bitter fight made on Robert M. La Follette, candidate for President, were such as to bring about defeat of the entire Farmer-Labor slate except in the case of the two Farmer-Labor Congressmen who were reelected. William L. Carss, former Democratic Congressman from the Eighth District, was also elected—this time as a Farmer-Laborite, thereby increasing the Farmer-Labor representation in the Lower House of Congress to three Members.

NAME IS CHANGED

The next step in the development of Farmer-Labor organization was the formation of the Farmer-Labor Association. To those who have not followed the growth of the movement closely, it may seem a bit surprising that the Farmer-Labor Federation launched in September 1923 should have been discarded for a new organization. It may, however, be stated that there was no actual change in the organization, but the name was changed because of prejudices aroused against it on account of the activities of certain elements in the movement.

CONSTITUTION UNCHANGED

The constitution adopted at that conference has remained practically unchanged up to the present time. The declaration of principles, too, has suffered small modification.

The Minnesota Leader, official organ of the Farmer-Labor Association, was founded in 1930. It was first called the Farmer-Labor Leader. The only State-wide paper in Minnesota, it has a circulation in excess of 40,000. A circulation campaign, which is now in progress, aims at a circulation of 100,000 by the first of next year.

MAJOR PARTY IN STATE

The Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party is today the major political party in the State. It is represented at the Nation's Capital by two United States Senators—HENRIK SHIPSTEAD, of Minneapolis; and ELMER A. BENSON, of Appleton; and by three Representatives in the House—ERNEST LUNDEEN, of Minneapolis; PAUL J. KVALE, of Benson; and R. T. BUCKLER, of Crookston.

Floyd B. Olson, Governor; Hjalmar Petersen, Lieutenant Governor; Harry H. Peterson, attorney general; Knud Wefald and Charles Munn, members of the railroad and warehouse commission, testify to the confidence of Minnesota voters in this rank and file political movement.

The Farmer-Labor Party has not been successful in gaining control of the legislature. The reason may be attributed in the main to the fact that Minnesota chooses legislators on a nonpartisan basis. No party designation is permitted under the law by candidates for legislative offices. The result is that the voters are confused as to who's who in such contests. The candidates receiving the greatest amount of publicity enjoy a great advantage over those not receiving such publicity. Inasmuch as the press is overwhelmingly conservative the candidates affiliated with the forces of reaction get the major support from the newspapers of the State and come out victorious in many of the districts giving Farmer-Labor-designated candidates pluralities.

LEGISLATIVE DRIVE

In the present campaign, special effort will be made to elect Farmer-Labor legislators. If successful in winning control of the house, the Farmer-Labor-endorsed members of that body will fight to secure the enactment of a law again placing legislative candidates upon a party basis.

There is a full slate of Farmer-Labor candidates for State and congressional offices in the present campaign. Candidates endorsed by the recent Farmer-Labor convention are as follows:

United States Senator: Floyd B. Olson.
Governor: Elmer A. Benson.
Lieutenant Governor: Gottfrid Lindsten.
Secretary of state: Dr. Paul Hartig.
Attorney general: Harry H. Peterson.
State treasurer: A. C. Halverson.
Railroad and warehouse commissioner: Hjalmar Petersen.
Representatives in Congress:
First District—(No official endorsement has been made in this district, but Chester Watson, an active Farmer-Laborite, has filed for the Farmer-Labor nomination.)
Second district: Henry Arens.
Third district: Ernest Lundeen.
Fourth district: Howard Y. Williams.
Fifth district: Dewey W. Johnson.
Sixth district: John T. Galarneault.
Seventh district: Paul John Kvale.
Eighth district John T. Bernard.
Ninth district: R. T. Buckler.

The outlook for victory in the November election could not be brighter. The record of the present Farmer-Labor administration through its consistent battling for measures in behalf of the farmers, workers, and small-business men, has made thousands of friends for the cause. Notwithstanding these favorable conditions, the leadership of the party is not underestimating the resources of the Republican opposition. Only by persistent effort on the part of the workers in every locality can victory be made a certainty.

TERMS OF COURT, MIDDLE DISTRICT OF GEORGIA

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11614, which merely provides for an additional division of the Federal court in the middle district of Georgia. The bill is recommended by the Attorney General.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is the bill now on the calendar?

Mr. GEORGE. It was reported for the calendar today.

Mr. McNARY. What is the emergency which causes the Senator to make his request?

Mr. GEORGE. I am asking it, Mr. President, for the reason that the term of court to be held at this particular division point immediately follows this week's session of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Does the bill simply provide for the term of the court?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I thought the Senator referred to the appointment of a judge.

Mr. GEORGE. No, Mr. President. The bill simply provides for an additional term of court for the middle district. It does not create a new judgeship.

Mr. ASHURST. The bill involves no additional expense to the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 11614) to amend the Judicial Code to divide the middle district of Georgia into seven divisions by adding a new division to the middle district, and providing for terms of said court to be held at Thomasville, Ga., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsections (d) and (e) of section 77 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 28, sec. 150), is amended as follows:

"(d) The middle district shall include seven divisions, constituted as follows: The Athens division, which shall include the territory embraced on January 1, 1925, in the counties of Clark, Elbert, Franklin, Greene, Hart, Madison, Morgan, Oconee, Oglethorpe, and Walton; the Macon division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Baldwin, Bibb, Bleckley, Butts, Crawford, Hancock, Houston, Jasper, Jones, Lamar, Monroe, Peach, Pulaski, Putnam, Twiggs, Upson, Washington, and Wilkinson; the Columbus division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Chattahoochee, Clay, Harris, Marion, Meriwether, Muscogee, Quitman, Randolph, Stewart, Talbot, and Taylor; the Americus division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Crisp, Dooly, Lee, Macon, Schley, Sumter, Terrell, Webster, and Wilcox; the Albany division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Baker, Calhoun, Dougherty, Early, Miller, Mitchell, Turner, and Worth; the Valdosta division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Berrien, Cook, Echols, Irwin, Lanier, Lowndes, and Tift; and the Thomasville division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Thomas, Brooks, Colquitt, Grady, Decatur, and Seminole.

"(e) The terms of the district court for the Athens division shall be held at Athens on the first Mondays in June and December; for the Macon division at Macon on the first Mondays in May and November; for the Columbus division at Columbus on the first Mondays in March and September; for the Americus division at Americus on the second Mondays in February and June: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations are furnished for holding court at Americus free of cost to the Government until a public building shall have been erected or put into proper condition for such purpose in said city; for the Albany division at Albany on the first Mondays in April and October; for the Valdosta division at Valdosta on the third Mondays in March and September; and for the Thomasville division on the third Mondays in May and November: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations are furnished for holding court thereat free of cost to the Government at Thomasville."

REPUBLICAN PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire to detain the Senate for just a few moments with a brief discussion of the musical repertoire of the Republican Party in this campaign.

All who have observed the course of the Landon preconvention campaign and have perused the remarkable platform of contradictions adopted by the Republican National Convention at Cleveland must have been struck by the singular appropriateness of the selection of the theme song O! Susanna, which was the marching song of the Landon hosts. Nothing could better typify the contradictions and inconsistencies of the appeals made on behalf of Mr. Landon to the widely divergent, discordant, and jangling elements of the Republican Party. The logic of the song is impressed upon the Cleveland platform and upon every paragraph of it. Both in method of thought and literary style in the employment of rhetorical figure the similarity between the song and the platform shows with what assiduous devotion its draftsmen have studied and copied the spirit of the song. No figure of the song is more inconsistent than the platform.

Let me illustrate by recalling once more to your minds the lines of O! Susanna:

> I come from Alabama wid my banjo on my knee,
> I'se gwine to Lou'siana—my true lub for to see;
> It rain'd all night de day I left, de wedder it was dry;

How utterly consistent, Mr. President, is that statement of the song—

> It rain'd all night de day I left, de wedder it was dry.

With the widely divergent pleas made on behalf of Governor Landon by such arch-reactionaries as William Randolph Hearst, Ogden Mills, and Walter Edge at one extreme, and William Allen White and the Kansas City Star at the other extreme.

> The sun so hot I froze to def—Susanna, don't you cry.

How fair an example of consistency, only to be matched by that of the Republican candidate himself, who, in 1933, permitted his representative at a Governors' conference at Des Moines, Iowa, to make a demand on the President of the United States for the payment of the Fourth Liberty Loan by the issuance of greenbacks, and then sends a gold telegram to the Cleveland convention. How clearly in accord with the statement of facts contained in the sentence—

> The sun so hot I froze to def.

How thoroughly consistent with that sentiment was the conduct of the Landon managers at the Cleveland convention, who assured the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that they would write a platform in conformity with his views, and that, if it did not meet his views, they would urge him and invite him to come before the convention and himself advocate his views and subject the convention to his splendid logic and matchless powers of oratory. And then, having agreed to the plank which the distinguished Senator from Idaho had urged, and having known that he had boarded a train and started back to Washington with full confidence in the assertion that a money plank had been adopted in the Cleveland platform which would be satisfactory to him, the plank was reversed by the simple process of having the candidate, after his nomination was assured, send a telegram to the convention which was the complete opposite of the Borah plank to which the Landon managers had agreed.

Let me continue the lines of the old song:

I jump'd aboard de telegraph and trabbled down de ribber
De 'lectrick fluid magnified and kill'd 500 nigga.
De buljine bust, and de hoss ran off,
I really thought I'd die.
I shut my eyes to hold my bref—
Susanna, don't you cry.

CHORUS

Oh! Susanna, do not cry for me;
I come from Alabama, wid my banjo on my knee.

Note the effect of this theme song upon the platform:

It rain'd all night de day I left; the wedder it was dry.

Here we have the model and the pattern for the Republican farm plank. With what exquisite precision did Chairman Langworthy and his associates follow the spirit and form of the song in their promises to agriculture.

The sun so hot I froze to def.

Here is plainly the inspiration as well as the factual source and the model for style of the Cleveland plank on the tariff with its naive promise to restore our lost foreign markets by the further raising of prohibitive tariff walls.

I jump'd aboard de telegraph and trabbled down de ribber.

Here is a statement of fact upon a par for accuracy with the declarations of the Cleveland platform upon the relief situation.

De 'lectrick fluid magnified and kill'd 500 nigga.

How hauntingly reminiscent of the Cleveland plank on the currency questions.

De buljine bust and de hoss ran off,
I really thought I'd die.
I shut my eyes to hold my bref.

Undoubtedly the man who wrote the social-security plank at Cleveland had these words in his mind and heart. The method of shutting one's eyes to hold one's breath is of the same high standard of statesmanship as the belated recommendations of the Republican Party on social security, a subject upon which during 12 long weary years it had wholly failed and refused to take any action.

If it be true that imitation is the sincerest flattery, then the shade of Stephen Foster should be immensely gratified at the slavish devotion with which both the logic and the style of the Landon theme song were copied by the platform committee at Cleveland.

But, Mr. President, this typical and fitting song is by no means the whole of the Republican repertoire of musical versatility. Some of the brethren and sistern at Cleveland evidently felt the need for a greater musical range than was afforded by O Susanna alone. With a peculiar and fatal sense of appropriateness they selected Three Blind Mice—a term suggestive indeed and completely symbolic of the vision and statesmanship by which Mr. Hoover and his predecessors and associates plunged our Nation into the miry pit from which we have been for 3 long years painfully and toilsomely and slowly but nevertheless surely and steadily and courageously climbing back under the leadership of President Roosevelt and the Democratic administration.

Three Blind Mice. How descriptive indeed of the policy of bitter and stupid opposition which has led the leadership of the Republican Party to oppose every suggestion and measure for recovery during these 3 long years.

Three long years. Yes; 3 long years. And they have been long years. But they have been all too short, and the 4 long years for which Roosevelt and Garner will be given a further mandate by the people in November will not be too long for correcting the abuses of the 12 long years during which, under the leadership of the Hoovers and the Hardings, the Mellons, Falls, and Daughertys, the country marched toward calamity. If the Republicans want a new theme song, they ought to get up one based on 12 long years; 12 long, weary, tragic years when the Republican policy of pandering to special privilege at long last reached its full fruition. This song should be a heroic lay with praise and tears for bygone years when Uncle Andrew Mellon was the fiscal dictator of the Nation, when special privilege arrogantly ruled the policies of the country, not even bothering to hide its ugly face. This song should chant of the days of brave Harry Daugherty and venerable Albert Fall, when corruption stalked the land, and men who sat at the President's very Cabinet table were guilty of crimes so treasonable that they would have brought the blush of shame to the brow of Judas Iscariot or Benedict Arnold.

Twelve long, weary, tragic years. This song should sing of Coolidge, Mellon, and Hoover ballyhooing the stock market, permitting inflation to run rampant, deluding the American people into the belief that the era of depressions or panics had passed, that this country had reached a permanently high level of prosperity, and that any inflation of value was justified. This song should sing of Mr. Hoover's campaign of bunkum when he actually promised the American people that if elected President he would actually bring about the absolute abolition of poverty; when he promised that if elected he would bring about a condition in which there would be a "radio in every home, a chicken in every pot, and two cars in every garage."

Twelve long years. Twelve long, weary years while the great disaster was in the making under the leadership of Republican statesmanship. This song should sing of the halcyon days of Hoover prosperity when we had 3-cent postage and 3-cent cotton, 5-cent corn, and two-bit wheat, when there was starvation in the midst of plenty, when the more food there was produced in the United States the more people were hungry within our borders, when, with the biggest gold supply in the world, our financial structure became more seriously impaired day by day and week by week.

Twelve long, weary, tragic years. And then the song should sing of the end of the 12 long years, of that bitter day in March 1933 when the Nation finally freed itself of the incubus of Republican misrule and started back uphill. It should tell of the results of the 12 long years which Franklin D. Roosevelt found upon his induction into office—13,000,000 Americans willing and eager to work, walking the streets and highways unable to find jobs to support themselves and their dependents; agriculture prostrate; industry shut down and bankrupt; every bank in the United States closed; hoarding become an inevitable national vice; our people reduced to a state of despair which was closely akin to desperation.

And then, Mr. President, we can sing of 3 long years of substantial and constant progress toward recovery. We can sing of the savings of the people in the form of bank deposits being made secure and public confidence restored. We can sing of the savings of the people in the form of securities being safeguarded by the strictest regulation and information under the Securities Commission, to the end that such an orgy of speculation and fraud as marked the 12 long years may never again occur. We can sing of the agricultural income of the Nation increased two and a half fold. We can sing of millions restored to employment. We can sing of industrial conditions improved to the point where one of the largest manufacturers in the country, controlled by the most virulent traducers of the President recently reported the best month in its entire history. We can sing of the rights of labor to bargain collectively and to take steps for its own security, adequately protected for the first time in our history.

And then, Mr. President, let us sing of the 4 long years ahead of us, the 4 long years of the second term of Franklin D. Roosevelt, 4 years to continue the march toward complete recovery, 4 years of safeguarding the Nation against repetitions of the Hoover depression. Four years which will allow the American people—if not to forget, which God forbid—the 12 long years at least to regard it without the pain and bitterness of the present. Four years in which to pave the way for a succession of beneficial and progressive administrations.

I cannot refrain from congratulating my distinguished friend the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] on both the perspicacity and the perspicuity which he exhibited in his resolute declination of the Republican nomination for Vice President. I can only believe that he was actuated by the same philosophy which led an eminent Democrat to say, when he had been passed over for the Presidential nomination and offered the second place, "Why in the devil should I take the back seat on a hearse? [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I cannot take my seat without, for the comfort of our two beloved colleagues, the great and distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the very able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], recalling to their minds the lines of a great American, which seem, Mr. President, to have been written with a prophetic vision of the Cleveland convention and its nominee in his mind.

Woodrow Wilson in his book on Congressional Government once said:

> A decisive career which gives a man a well-understood place in public estimation constitutes a positive disability for the Presidency; because candidacy must precede election, and the shoals of candidacy can be passed only by a light boat which carries little freight and can be turned readily about to suit the intricacies of the passage.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it hardly seems worth while to me, in the busy closing week of this session, to devote much time to sheer political discussions. Perhaps we shall be in session week after next. Certainly that will be the fact if some of the pending administration legislative atrocities are persisted in; and at that time there will be a more complete text available for comparative political debates. It remains yet to be disclosed precisely how the Democratic convention will square its administration with its platform of 1932 and squirm into plausible position for 1936.

I should not even think of rising at the present moment except for the very generous and solicitous reference which my dear friend from Missouri has made to me. He has quite misinterpreted the reason why I thought it was better that a far stronger man than I should be nominated for Vice President, as was the ultimate case. There were many reasons of a very thoroughgoing and essential nature prompting my own attitude which it is needless to canvass now. But I might say that there was at least one emotional reaction connected with it. I just could not stand it to come back here and look in dear old Jack Garner's face and think that I was to be the one to separate him from his job, as now seems so inevitable. [Laughter.]

WORLD WAR WIDOWS AND CHILDREN, ETC.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that House bill 12869, being Calendar No. 2451, be taken up for immediate consideration.

Before the request is submitted by the Chair I desire to say that this bill, which has passed the House, broadens the provisions of existing law with reference to orphans and widows of disabled soldiers and restores their status to what it was before the act of 1934 was passed. The bill has been unanimously reported from the committee. It is on the calendar. I do not think there is any opposition at all to it. I hope I may secure immediate consideration for the bill and have it passed.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, was the bill reached yesterday on the call of the calendar?

Mr. HARRISON. I was not present yesterday. I do not think it was.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I do not recall that the bill was reached; but it is a very meritorious measure, and I remember that the Finance Committee gave it very careful consideration. I do not think there can be any opposition to it.

Mr. McNARY. If the bill was not reached on the call of the calendar yesterday, and was reported unanimously, I have no objection to taking it up at this time.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have no objection to granting the request; but I desire to have it understood that the action proposed will not displace the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When a bill is taken up by unanimous consent, it does not displace the unfinished business.

Mr. HARRISON. And if the bill provokes any discussion, I shall withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the title of the bill.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12869) to liberalize the provisions of Public Law No. 494, Seventy-third Congress, to effect uniform provisions in laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, to extend the Employees' Compensation Act with limitations to certain World War veterans and other persons, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment striking out sections 404 and 405 in the following words:

> SEC. 404. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized to purchase uniforms and to furnish them to such nonprofessional personnel employed at field stations of the Veterans' Administration under such conditions as he may deem necessary and proper.
> SEC. 405. Payment may be made for official telephone service installed in the quarters provided for employees of the Veterans' Administration on Government reservations when authorized under regulations prescribed by the Administrator.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I have an amendment to the bill which I have sent for, and which I wish to offer when it arrives. It is a measure which this body has already passed unanimously. I can explain the amendment very briefly. It provides that veterans who have insurance policies on which suits are to be filed shall not longer be penalized by having their cases dismissed unless they file suits within 2 days of the time their claims are denied in Washington. The measure came up on the floor of the Senate 2 weeks ago, and passed unanimously.

I now have the amendment. I send it to the desk and ask that it be stated.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Alabama whether his amendment was considered by the committee when it had the bill before it?

Mr. HARRISON. The amendment was considered by the Finance Committee and reported favorably.

Mr. BLACK. Unanimously.

Mr. McNARY. I ask to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, it is proposed to add the following:

> That in addition to the suspension of the limitation for the period elapsing between the filing in the Veterans' Administration of the claim under a contract of insurance and the denial thereof by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs or someone acting in his name, the claimant shall have 90 days from the date of the mailing of notice of such denial within which to file suit. This resolution is made effective as of July 3, 1930, and shall apply to all suits now pending against the United States under the provisions of section 19, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended; and any suit which has been dismissed solely on the ground that the period for filing suit has elapsed but wherein the extension of the period for filing suit as prescribed herein would have permitted such suit to have been heard and determined may be reinstated within 90 days from the date of enactment of this resolution: Provided, That on and after the date of enactment of this resolution, notice of denial of the claim under a contract of insurance by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs or someone acting in his name shall be by registered mail directed to the claimant's last address of record: Provided further, That the term "denial of the claim" means the denial of the claim after consideration of its merits.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the amendment the Senator from Alabama has offered uses the word "resolution." I suggest that wherever that word occurs it should be changed to "act."

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct. I sent the amendment up hurriedly. I ask the clerks to make the change.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the change referred to will be made throughout the amendment. Wherever the word "resolution" appears the word "act" will be substituted.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

F. W. ELMER

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4490 being Calendar No. 2442 for the relief of F. W. Elmer. The bill has been unduly delayed of passage and was not reached on the calendar yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4490) for the relief of F. W. Elmer, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to insert at the end of the bill a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 to F. W. Elmer, of Biloxi, Miss., in full settlement of all claims against the United States for legal services rendered to the United States in the case of the State of Mississippi v. S. M. Taylor, a Federal prohibition officer, who, in the performance of his official duty, shot and killed a citizen and who was acquitted on the charge of murder in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE REPUBLICAN MONEY PLANK

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, pursuant to notice served on yesterday that I should use some time today in trying to give an analysis of the Republican money plank, I now take the floor to submit some remarks upon this particular declaration in the Cleveland Republican platform.

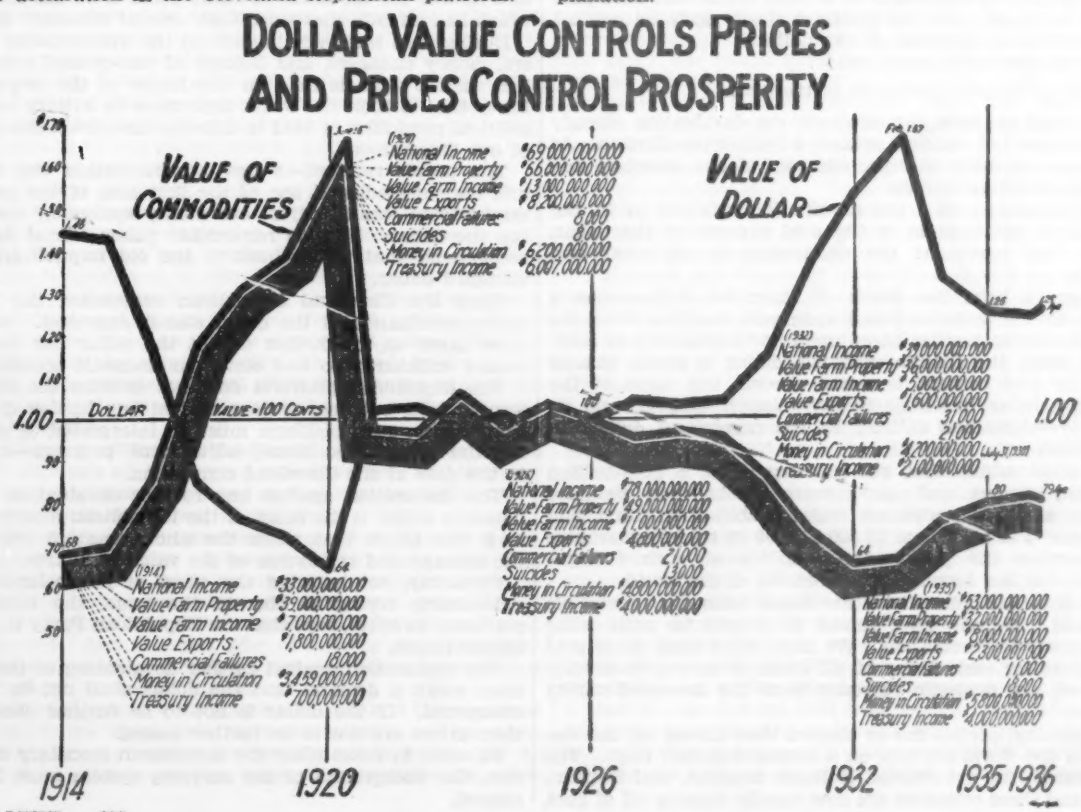
Mr. President, the Republican Party has just held its national convention. According to custom, the delegates met, listened to speeches, prepared and adopted a platform, nominated candidates for President and Vice President, and then adjourned.

The selection of candidates, for reasons best known to the delegates, presented little, if any, problem. The preparation of the platform caused delay and was the stumbling block in the convention. From press reports and radio announcements one plank of the platform was the cause of most of the delay and trouble. That plank had to do with money. As finally reported and adopted, the money declaration was as follows:

We advocate a sound currency, to be preserved at all hazards.

The first requisite to a sound and stable currency is a balanced Budget.

We oppose further devaluation of the dollar.



We will restore to the Congress the authority lodged with it by the Constitution to coin money and regulate the value thereof by repealing all the laws delegating this authority to the Executive.

We will cooperate with other countries toward stabilization of currencies as soon as we can do so with due regard for our national interests and as soon as other nations have sufficient stability to justify such action.

After the platform was adopted, and before the candidates were selected, the prospective Republican nominee sent a message to the delegates saying, among other things, the following:

The convention advocates a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards. I agree that the first requisite to a sound and stable currency is a balanced Budget. The second requisite, as I view it, is a currency expressed in terms of gold and convertible into gold. I recognize, however, that the second requisite must not be made until and unless it can be done without penalizing our domestic economy and without injury to our producers of agricultural products and other raw materials.

Thus we have the Republican money plank and the candidate's interpretation of and reaction thereto. A careful reading of this plank will convince anyone that the declaration—or at least one sentence thereof—needs interpretation. Likewise, it is obvious that the reaction submitted by the successful candidate needs both interpretation and explanation.

As the money issue is and will be foremost in the campaign it is proper that it should be clarified before the voters of the country.

First, the Republican platform declares for a "sound currency, to be preserved at all hazards." This language repeats the Democratic declaration made in the 1932 Chicago platform.

Now that the Republican Party has endorsed the Democratic 1932 monetary declaration, it may be assumed that all our people favor and demand—first, a sound currency, and, second, that such a currency shall be preserved at all hazards.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to ask the Senator whether it is not true, however, that the Republican platform in effect approved the devaluation of the gold dollar, that it merely declared for no further devaluation.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator is correct, and I will explain that statement in just a moment.

The 1936 Democratic national convention has not been held; hence, its platform has neither been prepared nor adopted; however, the Democratic money plank could well be stated as follows:

The Democratic Party is committed to sound currency backed by gold and silver. Currency to be sound must be adequate, available, and properly valued to best serve our domestic economy. This administration is engaged in providing such a currency; hence we assert that the American dollar is the soundest monetary unit in the world.

The Republican money plank declares in favor of "a balanced Budget." Let me observe that all parties and all peoples favor a balanced Budget.

The Democratic Party favors "a balanced Budget" and is taking the necessary steps to provide such a budget.

Even at this hour the Congress is working overtime in an effort to provide sufficient revenues to meet the regular and ordinary expense of our Government.

Republicans at Cleveland, or at least those who were permitted to speak, and the platform itself, declared against any "further devaluation of the dollar."

The platform declaration reads:

> We oppose further devaluation of the dollar.

The platform does not condemn the devaluation already accomplished but declares against a further devaluation. As Democrats we appreciate the approval of our monetary adjustment program to date.

It is presumed that the devaluation referred to in the Republican platform is in the gold content of the dollar, but in this particular the declaration is not clear and specific.

Today we have two kinds of American dollars—one a foreign-exchange dollar based upon gold, and the other the domestic dollar, neither based upon nor redeemable in gold; hence, while the foreign-exchange dollar is worth exactly what its gold content is worth abroad, the value of the domestic dollar has little if any relation to gold, and its value is determined entirely by the number of dollars in circulation.

All must admit that our country is on a gold-bullion standard abroad, and, as evidence of the fact, we have created a foreign-exchange dollar stabilization fund and have placed in such fund $2,000,000,000 in gold to guarantee and protect the parity and stability of such foreign-exchange dollar among the currencies of the world.

Our domestic dollar is neither based upon nor convertible into gold. We now have almost $2 of gold for each dollar of currency in circulation. We have more than $2 of gold and silver for each dollar of all kinds of money in circulation, yet our domestic currency is of the managed money variety.

In passing, permit me to observe that almost all the nations of the world are now on a managed-money basis. The only exceptions are France, Holland, Belgium, and Switzerland, and these countries are now rapidly slipping off of gold, and their currencies are probably headed for further devaluation.

The revaluation of the gold content of the dollar some 40 percent in 1933 and 1934 resulted in reducing the value of the foreign-exchange dollar instantaneously and positively some 40 percent, but no such reduction in value was accomplished in the domestic dollar.

To make the two American dollars—the foreign-exchange dollar and the domestic dollar—comparable in value, the domestic dollar must be devalued the full 40 percent, or reduced in buying or purchasing power from 167 cents—its value in 1933—to 100 cents. By making the computation it will be found that a 40-percent reduction of the 1933 valued dollar will leave such dollar with a buying or purchasing power of 100 cents.

Even though we have devalued the gold dollar 40 percent and have reduced the value of the domestic dollar, yet such domestic dollar still has a value or buying power of 128 cents. It is this domestic dollar which fixes prices within the States.

If the Republican platform declaration against further devaluation of the dollar means the devaluation of the foreign-exchange dollar, then, at this time, I take no exception to such declaration. But I might inquire what would be the position of the Republican Party in the event France should go off gold, devalue the franc, making necessary the further devaluation of the British pound and other European and world currencies?

Unless the new Presidential nominee knows more about money and its relation to business, taxes, prosperity, and our domestic economy, than the only living ex-President, he would not know that such a thing had happened until he had been voted out of office.

It was during this late lamented administration, when the value of gold was mounting higher and higher, causing prices to fall lower and lower, and the depression to hurt more and more, that a bright Republican Senator, at that time the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Reed, introduced a proposal in the Senate seeking to raise our tariff duties as a remedy for the influx of cheap goods from the countries which had already cheapened their several monetary units.

During that same administration the international bankers, money changers, and holders of tax-exempt securities, had such a strangle hold on the leader of the Republican Party that it took the worst depression in history and the political revolution of 1932 to dislodge them from the control of our Government.

The people revolted—a new administration was elected and inaugurated, and one of the first acts of the new administration was to adjust our money system by cheapening the dollar. Now no responsible public official dares to recommend that we go back to the old Republican gold-standard dollar.

Since the Cleveland Republican convention the Democratic devaluation of the dollar stands approved. Now the issue arises as to whether or not the dollar has been devalued sufficiently to best serve our domestic economy.

The Republican platform does not criticize the devaluation to date, but does declare against any further devaluation; hence, such platform must be interpreted as approving the Democratic money-adjustment program—at least to the date of the Cleveland convention.

The declaration against any further devaluation of the domestic dollar is the heart of the Republican money plank. It is this plank that raises the whole question relative to the coinage and regulation of the value of money.

Obviously, not knowing the effect of its declaration, or deliberately trying to obscure the issue, the Republican platform, in effect, says that the Republican Party is against higher prices.

The declaration against further devaluation of the dollar must mean a demand that the dollar shall not be further cheapened. If the dollar is not to be further cheapened, then prices are not to be further raised.

In order to make clear the Republican monetary declaration, the background of our currency system must be considered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator speaks about the dollar being cheapened. How was it cheapened?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is cheapened by placing more dollars in circulation. In 1914 we had three and one-half billion dollars in circulation. In 1920 we had six and one-half billion dollars in circulation. The amount of actual money, as I shall explain later—the kind we can see and carry in our pockets—was doubled from 1914 until 1920, and it is my contention that the placing of additional money in circulation tends to make money more plentiful, thereby making money cheaper. It was that cause which reduced the value of the dollar from 146 cents in 1914 to only 64 cents in 1920.

In 1929, when the value of the dollar began to rise, we find commodity prices began to fall.

In February 1933, when the dollar was worth $1.67, we find commodities at the lowest prices they have been for generations. It was at that time when wheat sold for 19 cents a bushel in my State. It was at that time when cotton sold for 5 cents per pound in my State. It was at that time when oats sold for 7 cents, corn for 15 cents, livestock for 3 cents, and other commodities in proportion.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I call the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma to the query of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. When the remark was made that the dollar became cheaper the Senator, I think, meant to convey the thought that we did not have to give so much of products as previously in order to get a dollar. That the dollar was cheaper because it bought less.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Exactly so. I shall make that statement in practically the same words later on in my address.

In 1929 the dollar started to go up in buying power and commodities started to fall in value. After March 4, 1933, we started to cheapen the dollar. As the value of the dollar became cheaper commodity prices started up. Further along in my remarks I shall explain just what I mean more fully.

From 1900 to 1933 the United States was on the single gold standard. This means that during that period all our money was based upon and redeemable in gold coin on the basis of 25.8 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, to each dollar.

During that period all credit or deposit money could be converted into currency, and all currency could be converted into gold. When the depression came, holders of bank credits became alarmed and began to demand gold, and such demands resulted, first, in gold being withdrawn and hoarded; second, as the demand for gold increased, the scarcer and more valuable gold became; third, the demand for gold became so great, gold became so scarce and consequently so valuable, that the administration felt forced, in the public interest, to go off the gold and place an embargo against the convertibility of currency into gold at home, or the shipment of gold abroad.

On March 4, 1933, when the Republican Party surrendered power, although all banks were closed, we were still theoretically on the gold standard, and at that time the dollar had a value or purchasing power of 167 cents.

In America, as in all countries, we measure value by means of a system of statistics. It is conceded by all that gold fluctuates in value the same as other commodities; hence, so long as our money was expressed in definite quantities of gold, the value of our dollar varied exactly as the value of gold varied. And it is this kind of a dollar the Republican Presidential nominee promises to give us when he is elected President of the United States.

As stated, because of the scarcity of gold and the increased demand for the metal, gold increased in value, so that when this administration assumed power the people had to give up 167 cents of value in services, labor, or commodities, in order to secure a dollar with which to meet their taxes, interest, and debts.

The Budget had been and was unbalanced because of the high value of the dollar. Because of such high value, the dollar was not only dishonest but it was impossible to secure; hence, this administration undertook to cheapen the dollar in order to restore to the people an honest and a possible medium of exchange.

In our efforts to give the people a cheaper dollar and an honest and possible dollar, we have been opposed at every turn by the money changers, by international bankers, by the larger city banks, by the holders of tax-exempt bonds and mortgages, and by what is left of the so-called Old Guard leadership of the Republican Party.

Notwithstanding the reduction in the weight and gold content of the dollar, the domestic dollar has almost as much purchasing power today as it had before the cheapening process was undertaken. In terms of all our commodities, such domestic dollar is still worth approximately 128 cents. In other words, even now our people have to give up in services, labor, and commodities 128 cents in value to secure a dollar with which to meet their obligations.

It is very largely because of this fact that the Budget is not balanced; unemployment has not been materially reduced; industry is not yet on a paying basis, and the banks are not yet able to make commercial loans.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Did the valuation of the dollar—I have forgotten the date on which it took effect, but I think the Senator has it——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The order was issued in January 1934.

Mr. BORAH. What was the effect and what has been the effect of the devaluation upon the price of farm commodities?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Answering the inquiry submitted by the Senator from Idaho, the effect of the devaluation of the dollar was instantaneous, and positive abroad, because the moment the dollar fell in terms of gold abroad foreigners could take whatever gold was necessary and exchange such gold for an American dollar. So after the order was issued providing for a 40-percent reduction, which reduced the content of the gold dollar from 25.8 grains to 15 5/21 grains, foreigners could take the 15 plus grains of gold to any of their exchange places and exchange such amount for an American dollar. So, automatically and positively, the devaluation of the dollar cheapened the foreign-exchange dollar. So it cheapened American products in terms of foreign exchange, and foreigners have been able to buy American products 40 percent cheaper from the date of such devaluation.

I contend that the order of devaluation did not affect the domestic dollar the full 40 percent, and here is my reasoning: When the Democrats came into power in 1933 the dollar had a value of 167 cents; in other words, it took 167 cents' worth of corn or cotton or livestock or labor to get a dollar.

We thought we were cheapening the dollar comparable to the 40-percent reduction in gold. If we had, it would have given us back a hundred-cent dollar or a dollar of the value of 1926. I do not know what was in the minds of those who issued the order, but evidently, from my reasoning, the Chief Executive must have thought that by reducing the gold content of the dollar 40 percent it would thereby reduce the value of the domestic dollar 40 percent. My reasoning is by analogy. Multiply 167 by 40 percent and you get 66.8. He must have thought that by cutting down the gold content of the dollar 40 percent he would reduce the value of the domestic dollar to 100 cents, or within two-tenths of a cent of that amount. Subtract 66.8 from 167 and that leaves 100.2. But it has not accomplished that purpose—and the reason is that we are not on gold here within the States. If we had gone back on gold, and made our currency convertible into gold, then the domestic dollar would have had the same value as the gold content of the dollar, but our money is not on gold; it is not convertible into gold; we cannot get gold for our currency, hence for that reason the domestic dollar has little if any relation to gold.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] asked the Senator from Oklahoma what effect the devaluation of the dollar has had on farm prices. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator from Oklahoma unduly, but I make the observation that, as he has explained, it affected immediately the export prices of farm commodities. To the extent that the domestic market was influenced by the export prices, it did lift them. For instance, in the case of cotton, which is probably the most striking example, the price of cotton both domestically and in the foreign market responded almost instantaneously. During the time the President was raising the price of gold from day to day the cotton market followed almost instantaneously the price of gold. The reason for that was, of course, that we export such a large volume of cotton that the domestic price is substantially fixed by the foreign price. The Frenchman who was buying cotton for 6 cents in gold could continue to buy the same cotton at the same 6 cents in his gold, but, due to devaluation, that 6 cents had become 10 cents in the American market.

I am sure it did not affect wheat to the same extent, because we do not export as large a volume of wheat as we do of cotton, and the domestic price of wheat is not influenced or affected to the same extent as is cotton by the foreign price.

I thought the Senator from Idaho was entitled to know that as to cotton it was reflected almost 100 percent; the devaluation lifted the price of cotton almost to the level of the amount of the devaluation.

Mr. BORAH. I had supposed it affected favorably the price of both corn and wheat.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am sure it did, but perhaps not to the same extent, because the export market does not affect the domestic market to the same degree.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I appreciate the explanation given by the Senator from Texas. I agree with what he said with regard to cotton. Cotton is a world commodity; the price of cotton today throughout the world is the same, in terms of gold, making allowance only for insurance and transportation. To the extent that wheat is a world commodity the price of wheat today is the same throughout the world in terms of gold. Some nations may have a tariff; some nations may have a fixed price as does France, where the fixed price is $1.42, I think, for their wheat. So in the case of both commodities the cheaper you make the dollar, in terms of gold, the higher you raise the price in terms of monetary units. That is the reason cotton went up instantaneously with the reduction of the value of the dollar. Every world commodity is measured in terms of gold, because that is the universal commodity in which nations settle their international balances, and for that reason world commodities are measured always in terms of gold.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question there?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The devaluation of the gold dollar, as the Senator has explained, had a direct effect on cotton, for instance, which, as everybody recognizes, is a world product. Assuming, then, that at that time the United States was on a gold-dollar basis, it would have the same effect on the domestic price, would it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If we had been on the gold-standard basis here at home, then the Senator would be correct.

Mr. NORRIS. If we had been on the gold-standard basis, it would have been just the same as applied to the domestic market as it was as applied to the world market.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is my contention that the domestic dollar here in the United States is worth more now in terms of commodities than if we were on a gold-standard basis with 15 5/21 grains of gold to the dollar, provided, of course, the gold we have should be placed in circulation. In other words, the dollar we have in our pockets—those of us who may be so fortunate to have dollars in our pockets—is worth more today in terms of commodities than if we would go back on the gold standard with the lesser amount of gold to the dollar. With 15 5/21 grains of gold in the foreign-exchange dollar the domestic dollar today is undervalued. That is the reason why during the past 2 years billions of dollars of foreign gold have come to America. Foreigners can take their gold, convert it into American dollars, and with those dollars they can buy more of certain commodities in America than they can buy any place else in the world.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. It all illustrates, it seems to me, what is bound to happen if the value is based on a commodity that fluctuates, as all commodities do fluctuate. I do not know whether it would interrupt the Senator at this time in his remarks——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is not at all an interruption.

Mr. NORRIS. But I should like to ask him what would be the effect if the value of the dollar was permanent and not based on a fluctuating commodity, so that the middle line, the 100-percent dollar on the Senator's diagram on the wall, would be approximately the same as the money red line and the price black line? Would that be a desirable condition and could it be accomplished if the dollar was based upon those seven-hundred-odd commodities?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me answer the question by making one or two statements preliminarily. The red line on the diagram shows the fluctuation of gold in terms of commodities. For the entire length of that red line the dollar was a gold dollar; every dollar we had was based upon gold; each dollar had 25.8 grains of gold; the value of every dollar was constant in terms of gold. The crookedness of that red line shows the fluctuation of the gold dollar as measured by 782 commodities.

I have taken there the middle line as the starting point. That may not be the correct starting point; the dollar may be too high at that point or again the dollar may be too low. I am not arguing that point, but that is where the Bureau of Labor statistics starts, at the line of a hundred cents, and a good many people think if we can get back to the 1926 dollar, which is represented by that center line, we would be making substantial progress. As the crooked red line displays the fluctuation of the value of the dollar in terms of commodities, so the thick black line displays the fluctuation of the value of commodities in terms of gold. With the gold standard, everything else fluctuates as the value of gold fluctuates; and as the value of gold itself fluctuates, of course, the value of the dollar is not staple in terms of gold.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the Senator, if it will not disturb him—and I do not think it will, because nothing seems to disturb the Senator—what part does gold play in the managed currency system of Great Britain at the present time?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, by common consent throughout the world the nations seem to want their balances settled in gold. Of course, in all countries most of the balances are settled in commodities, but if there be an international balance which cannot be settled in commodities, then such balance must be settled in something else; and as gold is generally accepted everywhere, so gold is today regarded as the best medium for the adjustment and settlement of such balances. Great Britain has something like $2,000,000,000 of gold at the present time. While the pound is not fixed in terms of gold, yet every day the pound is worth so much gold. The value of the pound in terms of gold is fixed and controlled from day to day by the managers of the British financial system.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, Great Britain buys or sells gold to suit the situation in the market?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes; and they buy and sell gold currency, and through that means keep the pound at that value which best serves Great Britain's domestic economy. They do that by placing paper pounds in circulation and taking paper pounds out of circulation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator if the British Government buys gold by issuing paper pounds and giving those paper pounds for the gold, or what medium does it use?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In any way they see fit. Trading with nations permits Great Britain to have great volumes of balances and no doubt it is such balances which are used in the purchase of gold. Here in Washington our handling of the stabilization fund is kept secret and no doubt England keeps her exchange stabilization policies likewise secret.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. Speaker, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has stated that from day to day Great Britain puts paper pounds into circulation. Just what does the Senator mean by that? How do they put the paper pounds in circulation?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am not sure that I understand just what the Senator means. Does he inquire how they get the paper pounds out among the people?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I could not answer that question for Great Britain, but there are many ways of getting the paper money into circulation here in the States. In this country it takes some $25,000,000 each day to pay our current bills, to pay the salaries of the Government employees, to pay the soldiers, for example, and to pay for construction work. It is costing this year almost $1,000,000,000 a month to run the Government. If we saw fit to pay our bills with currency in the place of credit, we could place in circulation among hundreds of thousands of people approximately $1,000,000,000 per month. No doubt Great Britain can do the same thing.

The dollar bequeathed to us in 1933 had a value of 167 cents in all commodities save the one commodity of gold; hence, such dollar was unreasonable, impossible, and dishonest, and therefore such dollar was unsound.

Although we have eliminated from the domestic dollar some 40 cents of purchasing power, yet such dollar is still entirely too highly valued and must be still further cheapened by the removal therefrom of the remaining 28 cents of excessive value or purchasing power.

If the Republican platform declared against a further reduction of the gold content of the foreign-exchange dollar, then that is one interpretation; but if such platform declared against the elimination of all or any part of the present 28 cents of excessive value in the domestic dollar, then that is another interpretation, and with such latter interpretation we cannot agree.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I know the Senator wants to be fair. I am sure that to what he has said I take no exception, but I think the Senator will concede that if a man has to produce more products to convert into a higher valued dollar than he would to convert into a cheap dollar, likewise that higher valued dollar would buy more products of the production of another man, so that in the end he would get back the same number of commodities that he sold, no matter what the standard may be.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If it were not for the fact that we have an enormous tax burden, an enormous interest burden, and an enormous public and private debt burden, the position of the Senator would be exactly correct; but there is no way to remedy or to cheapen or to lighten the tax burden or the interest burden or the debt burden save through the cheapening of the dollar.

Mr. TYDINGS. I concede the tax equation alters to some extent the basic principle I laid down, but I did not think the Senator desired to leave himself in a position of stating that where a man would have to produce more to acquire a dollar, that when he got the dollar he could not acquire more with it than he could with a cheap dollar.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator is a very young man, but still he can remember back a few years after the World War, when the dollar had a buying power of only 64 cents and commodities were the highest we have ever seen, when cotton sold for 44 cents a pound, wheat for $2.50 a bushel, and livestock and other things in proportion. It was in those days when we had the cheapest dollar, that the forgotton man even had money. We have heard it said that in those days even the ditch digger and the bootblack wore silk shirts and enjoyed a degree of prosperity. They did not wear silk shirts under the dollar we had in 1932.

In 1932, when the bonus bill was before the Senate yonder galleries were filled with veterans of the World War. At that time many of those men did not have on any shirts at all. Many of them had to have their coats buttoned around their necks to shield and conceal the fact that underneath their coats they were naked. Yet in 1920, with plenty of money in circulation, everyone had a chance to enjoy and share in the good times of that era.

Mr. TYDINGS. I only rose to point out that no matter whether the dollar is cheap or high, it is no more than a medium of exchange as far as one product and another product are concerned. It is only a temporary storehouse where the seller translates what he has to sell for the moment into a warehouse receipt until he acquires something he wants to buy. In the end, he really exchanges commodities for commodities. The money is only an incident to the transaction, a warehouse receipt, a medium of exchange, a yardstick, or whatever one may wish to call it. If it takes more commodities to buy a high-priced dollar, once we have the dollar we can buy more commodities with it than we could with a low-priced dollar.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator is correct. For some years I have been arguing to get the value of the dollar down to that point where it would best serve our national domestic economy. My contention is that the value of the dollar is too high. It has been too high since 1929. I am trying to get the red line on the chart lowered to meet the center black line. If that is not the proper point, then we can determine that fact and adjust the value either up or down as at that time may seem best to properly serve the interests of our people.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the significant thing about the Republican platform, to which the Senator has alluded, is the fact that it states that a sound currency must be preserved at all hazards and that the Republican Party is not in favor of any further devaluation of the dollar.

The Senator has already alluded to the fact that if France and other European countries should further devalue their currencies, he would like to know what the Republican candidate's position then would be. On the whole, from a citizen's standpoint, I am not displeased with the platform in that respect so far as it goes; but what I am sorry the Republican platform did not contain, in view of its very strong language that the party favored the stabilization of international currency, is a coupling of that matter with the declaration that they would not further devalue the dollar. If foreign currencies could be stabilized, then the position that the Republican Party would not further devalue the dollar would be sound; but if it should not be possible to stabilize international currencies, and other countries should devalue their currencies, I think the Republican candidate, were he successful, might find he had said something which it would be very difficult to live up to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the platform had left out the declaration as I thought it should, against further devaluation of the dollar, we should have been in a perfectly safe position, regardless of what France might do.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield further?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the hiatus in the policy, if such it be, has been very well cleared up by the remark of the Senator from Idaho; but certainly there ought to be a move to stabilize international currencies on the part of those who do not believe in further devaluation of the dollar. In other words, if they take that rigid position, then it must follow that so long as the currencies and trade of the various nations are interdependent, those who announce as their policy that they do not desire any further devaluation of the dollar should follow it up by coming out for a conference to stabilize currencies so that further devaluation will not be necessary; and I think the Senator alluded to that in his opening remarks.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator is correct in saying that those who declare against devaluation ought to declare for international stabilization; but the difficulty with that policy is that the possibility of securing international stabilization is almost inconceivable. I do not think we are going to secure international stabilization within any reasonable time.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should not like to agree or disagree with what the Senator from Idaho has said. I realize that it would be very difficult to get international stabilization of currencies; but certainly in the world chaos which now exists any political party which says it is going to take a rigid position on money, without having in mind at least the possibility of a reorganization of the world's currencies on some sort of equitable lines, is walking out on very thin ice. If we are to have no further depreciation of our currency, it must follow that other countries will not greatly depreciate their currencies; otherwise we may be in a position where, in spite of that declaration, some other policy will be not only expedient but wise.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to make my position clear if I may. I am not at this time arguing in favor of further devaluation of the gold dollar. I am arguing in favor of reducing the value of the domestic dollar. According to statistics, it has a value of 128 cents. I want the 28 cents of excess value eliminated from the domestic dollar, and the dollar brought back to the 100-cent level, exactly where it was in the period from 1922 to 1929, as shown by the graph. When we get the value of the dollar to that point we can keep it there. We are now keeping the dollar rather stable. For the past 18 months the value of the dollar has not fluctuated more than 5 cents up or down. For a year and a half the American dollar, in terms of domestic commodities, has not fluctuated to exceed 5 cents; hence we know the dollar can be kept stable in terms of American prices and American commodities. If we could get the dollar down to the 100-cent level, it could be maintained there just as easily as maintaining it around the 125-cent level; so I am arguing in favor of a policy that will put the value of the domestic dollar down to 100 cents, and then keep it there until we are sure that such value is not in the interest of the people. If it is too high, we can further reduce it; if it is too low, we can raise it.

On the question of stabilization of currencies abroad, according to my viewpoint there are only three countries in the world that have sufficient financial influence to justify them in paying the expenses of a delegation to an international stabilization conference—and such nations are Great Britain, France, and the United States. The United States has the largest amount of gold and silver of any country in the world. We now have ten and a half billion dollars of gold. We now have over $2,000,000,000 of silver. That makes a total metallic base of gold and silver in your Treasury and mine of twelve and a half billion dollars of gold and silver. Great Britain has not so much gold, and has practically no silver; but Great Britain has one-half the peoples of the world tied up to the British pound—or a money system sometimes referred to as "sterlingaria." So Great Britain depends for her prestige and her power on the fact that she has half the peoples of the world depending upon what she does with regard to money.

France has the remaining gold-standard countries tied up to the French franc. There are only four or five of them—Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, perhaps Poland, and perhaps another. If the countries mentioned could get together, they can stabilize their currencies; and when they do so, they will stabilize the currencies of the world.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator's observation is very accurate. I should like to point out that with eleven and a half billion dollars of war debts owing to the United States Government, and about fourteen and a half billion dollars of foreign bonds held in this country by our citizens—a total of $26,000,000,000 owing either to our Government or to its people by foreign countries—in my humble judgment that large debt owing to us, almost equivalent to our national debt, is not going to be liquidated to any considerable extent until the currencies of the world are stabilized. Therefore it brings home all the more clearly the hiatus in the Republican platform, where they come out against any further depreciation of the dollar on the one hand, but take no position toward stabilizing currencies upon the other.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I thank the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. President, the Republican platform raises the issue of prices, and the issue of prices, heretofore obscured, is due to come out into the open.

There is but one single point in the Republican money plank, and that is a declaration against any further rise in prices.

The issue raised by the Republican declaration against further devaluation of the dollar is of major importance to every man, woman, and child in America. We will probably hear much about the price level in the campaign now being organized. By price level I mean the prices which the people receive for their products, their commodities, and their services, as well as the prices they have to pay for things they have to buy.

As further evidence that prices are to be a major issue in the campaign, let me call attention to the following statements:

Ex-President Hoover, in his Fort Wayne speech, is reported to have said:

> Costs and prices must be reduced.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, does the able Senator from Oklahoma understand Mr. Hoover's reference to a reduction of costs and prices to include a reduction in the wages of labor and a reduction in the prices of farm commodities?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, he must mean that if he means anything. When he says "Costs and prices must be reduced", he must mean what he says. There seems to me to be no other explanation; but of course anyone can place his own interpretation on the statement. He says that cost and prices must come down, which means that wages must come down, that the price of cotton must fall, that the price of wheat must fall, that the prices of manufactured products and of everything else, because there is no exception in the statement, must likewise be reduced.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, I would not undertake to interpret what the former President may have had in mind in making his observation, but I should like to submit a query to the able Senator from Oklahoma, who has made such a deep and careful study of this whole problem.

Is it not a fact that the great automobile industry of the United States has demonstrated that the way to put wages up, and the way to increase sales, and the way to make a major contribution to recovery, is to reduce prices, popularize sales as a result, and thus contribute to a larger and more profitable economy? In other words, is there not something to be said for that philosophy as demonstrated by this most spectacular single contribution now being made to recovery?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, it is true that, even though we have cheapened the dollar, the prices of automobiles should have reacted upward, but instead of automobiles having gone up in price, we can today get a better car for less money. That is due, in my opinion, very largely to the fact that we have devalued the gold dollar. A very large number of the automobiles made in the United States are sold abroad. I could not give the exact percentage.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Twenty percent.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Twenty percent, I am advised. When we cut the size of the gold dollar that meant that foreigners outside of the United States could take 60 percent of the weight of an old gold dollar, and, with that 60 percent, they could buy a whole American dollar. In other words, foreigners, after we devalued the gold dollar, could take 15 grains of gold and buy a dollar, where the day before they had to give 25 grains of gold for a dollar. When we devalued the gold dollar the dollars abroad became 40 percent cheaper so that foreigners everywhere could take 60 cents of gold and buy a dollar, they could take $600 in gold and buy a thousand dollars of American currency, and with the thousand dollars they could buy a thousand-dollar automobile in the United States. So our devaluation of the dollar instantaneously and positively reduced the value of automobiles abroad 40 percent. That is the reason why there has been unparalleled prosperity in the automobile industry throughout our Nation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What the Senator says about the encouragement of export sales is of course true. That is an axiom. In fact, the Senator is demonstrating the thing I myself have constantly claimed, that it is not the reciprocal treaties negotiated by Secretary Hull, but it is the precise thing about which the Senator is talking, plus the general resurgence of world trade, that has produced the increase in exports. But I ask the Senator again how he can explain that not only has the export sale substantially increased, but also the internal sale has increased tremendously, during a period when, at least in the opinion of those responsible for the operation, the successful effort to produce a better product at a lower price, and at the same time increasing wages, is responsible for what has happened. In other words, what I am asking the Senator is whether one can be dogmatic in respect to either phase of this price problem.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am arguing from a broad national standpoint. There may be exceptions in one line or there may be exceptions in regard to some commodity. An overproduction would of course mean lower prices; underproduction would mean higher prices. It is a fact that we have not cheapened the domestic dollar perceptibly. We have only taken the difference between 167 cents and 128 cents out of the domestic dollar, that is, approximately 40 cents. That has had the effect of raising prices here at home to a slight degree. But the main rise in prices has been due to an increase in the amount of money in circulation due to a wider use of silver. Also there has been a restriction of the production of cotton and livestock and wheat and other similar commodities, which has had some effect upon prices.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Referring particularly to the automobile question, does not the Senator think that one of the things which enters into that, and which ought to be considered, is that the buying power of those who must purchase the automobiles, of the farmer, for instance, has been greatly increased? I do not pretend to say how much that accounts for the increase, but certainly it accounts for a large percentage of the increased sales of automobiles in this country.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think the Senator from Nebraska is exactly correct. The automobile industry, fortunately for itself, produces a thing which every person wants, not only at home, but abroad, and when through devaluation of the dollar we cut the price of the automobiles 40 percent abroad, that stimulated purchases abroad, and by increasing the buying power among our home people, the purchase of automobiles here at home was stimulated.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, what the Senator from Nebraska has said is true and what the Senator from Oklahome now says is true. We had a parallel in the 10 years when we loaned billions of dollars to Europe and then let them buy our commodities and they had both the commodities and our money, and we got nothing out of it. During the last 2 or 3 years the large distribution of public funds, which somebody still has to pay for, unquestionably has created a buying power which is reflected in these orders. But may I ask the Senator this, if I am not diverting him——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Go right ahead.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Dealing with the automobile industry and what I believe to be the secret of its success, namely, the development of a major product of maximum value at a minimum sales price, I believe that is the formula which is responsible for the great success of the automobile industry; if that be true, how would the Senator's theory of a directly managed currency operate upon an industry which was seeking to pursue this formula? In other words, if this industry believes that low prices produce prosperity for it, would not a managed currency of the sort the Senator describes tend immediately to offset that reduction in price by a compensating change in the value of the dollar, if the Senator sees what I am trying to bring out?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think I understand the question. What I am trying to demonstrate is that the dollar should be fixed at a stable point of buying power. Heretofore it has been based on gold, and that has not been satisfactory, as is evidenced by the crookedness of the money line on the chart on the wall. So a gold dollar is not a stable measure of value. On the other hand, if we can find some basis or some formula upon which we can fix the value of the dollar like it was, as shown on the graph, from 1922, say, to 1929, then we shall have a stable dollar in terms of commodities that everyone can depend upon. That is what I am striving for.

Apply this to the automobile industry. At the present time the farmers are getting 85 cents for their wheat on the exchange. They are getting about 75 cents for their wheat at the mill. If we can bring down the buying power of a dollar so that farmers who produce wheat can get $1.50 for their wheat in place of 75 cents, then they will have $1.50 where now they have only 75 cents, and the cost of production will be about the same. I submit that if we can get a dollar and a half for wheat, if we can get 20 cents for cotton, and if we can get comparable prices for other products, and we can put the farmers back to the 1926 level of prices, then we will thereby double the purchasing power of the 30,000,000 people who live on the farm. With such increased prices and purchasing power the automobile industry will receive increased patronage by the farmers of our country.

Before I was diverted I had just made the statement in the form of a quotation from former President Hoover, wherein in his Fort Wayne speech he said:

> Costs and prices must be reduced.

Financial journals and professional economists are seconding the demand for lower costs and prices.

President Roosevelt, in his New York speech, made the following statement:

> Higher wages for workers, more income for farmers, means more goods produced, more and better food eaten, fewer unemployed, and lower taxes.

Thus the issue is already joined between the ex-leader of the Republican Party and the present leader of the Democratic Party.

Mr. Hoover and his followers demand a lower price level, which means lower costs, lower wages, and lower prices for the things the people produce.

President Roosevelt has already raised the price level approximately 50 percent and is working for still higher wages for workers and higher prices for the commodities which the farmers produce.

The newly crowned leader of the Republican Party has interpreted the term "sound money" in the Cleveland platform as meaning a return as soon as possible to the old discredited gold standard. Likewise he is against any further devaluation of the dollar. This means that he is against any further increase in prices. A reasonable interpretation of his reaction to the Republican money plank would be that prices have been raised high enough and that he wants such prices to remain where they are today.

The present price level means 50- to 75-cent wheat to Kansas farmers and farmers of the West, and likewise means 10-cent cotton to the farmers of the South.

The Hoover administration championed and held to a low price level and was voted out of power in 1932. The present administration was elected on a platform demanding higher prices. On May 7, 1933, President Roosevelt, in an address to the people of the Nation, said:

> The administration has the definite objective of raising prices to such an extent that those who have borrowed money will, on the average, be able to repay that money in the same kind of dollar which they borrowed.

One of the first acts of the new administration was the passage of the law providing for the devaluation of the dollar. President Roosevelt acted under the law and reduced the size and weight of the gold dollar 40 percent. This act has had the effect of cheapening the foreign exchange dollar, and a substantial increase in the amount of money in circulation has had the effect of cheapening the domestic dollar.

To the extent that the domestic dollar has been cheapened, prices have been increased and in proportion that the general price level has been raised, prosperity has returned.

The price level controls the cost of living on the one hand and controls the amount of income on the other.

A high price level means high prices and a high income, and a low price level means low prices and a low income—if an income at all.

During and just after the World War the price level was high.

With a high price level, money was plentiful, prices of commodities and wages were high, and every person who had something to sell could find a buyer, and every person who wanted to work could find a job.

In 1932 the price level was the lowest in history.

With such low level, money was scarce and property had little, if any, value.

At that time, wheat sold for 25 cents per bushel, cotton sold for 5 cents per pound, oil sold for 30 cents per barrel, and hogs and cattle sold for less than $3 per hundredweight.

Prices for raw materials and basic American products, while higher than 3 years ago, still are too low to enable producers to pay costs of production and have left a reasonable margin of profit.

Until legitimate business shows a reasonable profit, governmental budgets cannot be balanced; public borrowing must continue; banks dare not expand their credit; industry must continue to seek Federal loans; and the unemployed must continue to be supported by the Government.

The general price level must be raised sufficiently to permit producers, wage earners, and industry to survive and make reasonable profits.

The price level must be raised in order that profits may be increased.

Personal-income and corporation taxes are levied against profits; hence, profits must be increased in order to make possible the collection of sufficient taxes to balance the Budget.

The price level must be raised in order to make it possible for banks to renew the policy and practice of making commercial loans.

The price level must be raised prior to any substantial reduction in public-relief spending and most certainly before we can stop such spending altogether.

The price level must be raised before we can possibly have a return of general and permanent prosperity.

If there be those who disagree with our demand for a higher general price level, then I would call attention to the following facts:

Today our total tax burden—National, State, county, and city is some $12,000,000,000 per year.

Our total massed interest burden is another $10,000,000,000 annually; and our total massed debt burden, public and private, is estimated to be $250,000,000,000.

It is now estimated that by 1937 our total Federal debt will reach $35,000,000,000.

As taxes, interest, and debts increase, the amount of money available to the people must likewise be increased.

As taxes, interest, and debts go up, the price level must likewise go up.

To be able to pay more taxes, interest, and debts, the people must be able to earn and secure more dollars.

Taxes, interest, and debts are fixed charges; hence higher prices, in effect, reduce such taxes, interest, and debts, while lower prices, in effect, increase such overhead charges.

In 1932 prices were so low that a farmer in Oklahoma having $100 taxes to pay had to raise and sell four bales of cotton or 400 bushels of wheat to settle with the tax gatherer.

Today, with higher prices, he can pay the same tax bill with less than two bales of cotton or with approximately 100 bushels of wheat.

When prices are increased to a reasonable level, farmers may pay $100 in taxes or interest or debts with one bale of cotton or with 75 bushels of wheat or with 100 bushels of corn.

With lower prices, as demanded by Mr. Hoover, or with a continuation of present prices as demanded by Mr. Landon and the financial economists, we will have a repetition of the 1929–32 economic conditions which were brought about by their management of our Government.

Those who refuse to recognize and acknowledge the validity of these principles of economics are courting defaults, repudiation, bankruptcy, and disaster.

In the light of history it is obvious that the prosperity of a people depends upon the fairness and stability of their domestic price level.

Progress and prosperity depend upon prices, prices depend upon the value of the dollar, and the extent of prosperity and the level of prices depend upon the amount of money in circulation.

By way of summary, let me again define money:

In times past, money was limited to gold, silver, or copper metal stamped in the form of coins. Later the term "money" was expanded to include not only metal coins but paper currency as well.

Today we define anything as money that has been, by law, declared to be legal tender for the payment of taxes, interest, duties, and debts.

Money exists by law and not by nature.

Money is not always of the same value.

The dollar, when based upon a given quantity of gold, is of the same value as such quantity of gold; hence, as gold changes in value, the dollar changes in value. When any country is on the gold standard no commodity has a stable value, not even gold itself. Because of the unstability of the value of gold, all nations save some four or five have left the gold standard and these few remaining nations are now tottering prior to the fall.

Formerly by money we meant only gold, silver, and copper coins. Today by money we mean legal-tender currency, and by currency we mean gold coin, silver coin, nickel or copper coin, and paper money.

By currency I do not mean bank credit. Currency is money. Bank credit is only a substitute for money.

While bank credit serves as a medium of exchange and may be converted into money, bank credit is not money.

Currency, as herein defined, measures prices. Bank credit or substitute money does not measure prices. The number of currency dollars in circulation, in the main, controls the value of the dollar. An increase in the number of currency dollars in circulation means increasing the supply of price-measuring money units.

The same economic law which controls and governs the value of wheat and corn and cotton likewise controls and governs the value of money. When any commodity is plentiful, such commodity is cheap; likewise, when dollars are plentiful, dollars are cheap; and when dollars are cheap, prices are high.

On the other hand, when dollars are scarce dollars are high, and when dollars are high prices are cheap.

The value of money depends upon the number of dollars in circulation. Scarce money means high-valued dollars, and high-valued dollars mean unemployment, low wages, low prices, panic, and depression. Plentiful money means cheap money and cheap money means employment, high wages, high prices, progress, and prosperity.

If there be those who disagree with the economic principles just stated, then I must leave them to answer, not me but the master financial minds of the thousands of years of recorded history.

Let me call a few witnesses, famous monetary economists of the ancient and modern world, to sustain my position.

Ricardo says:

The value of money is determined by the amount existing.

Ruffner says:

Doubling the amount of money tends to double prices.

Again he says:

The price level will tend to rise in proportion to the increase in the money supply.

John Locke says:

The value of money in general is the quantity of all the money in the world in proportion to all the trade.

James Mills says:

And again, in whatever degree, therefore, the quantity of money is increased or diminished, other things remaining the same, in that same proportion the value of the whole, and of every part, is reciprocally diminished or increased.

Sir J. Graham says:

The value of money is in the inverse ratio of its quantity, the supply of commodities remaining the same.

John Stuart Mill says:

The value of money—other things being the same—varies inversely as its quantity, every increase of quantity lowering the value and every diminution raising it in a ratio exactly equivalent.

And again he says:

That an increase of the quantity of money raises prices, and a diminution lowers them, is the most elementary proposition in the theory of currency, and without it we should have no key to any of the others.

Modern economists have the following to say:

Taussig says:

Double the amount of money and, other things being equal, prices will be twice as high as before and the value of money one-half. Halve the quantity of money and, other things being equal, prices will be one-half what they were before and the value of money double.

Gustav Cassel, perhaps the greatest living authority on money, says that the value of money depends upon its supply and the demand therefor.

The Wall Street Journal, one of the leading financial publications of the country, in arguing against the payment of the soldiers' bonus with United States notes, used the following language:

The essential thing involved in the issue of more currency is that it increases the supply of price-measuring money units. Therein lies the fundamental difference between currency and bank credit. Both function as media of exchange but only one kind measures prices.

In harmony with these quotations, let me call your attention to the following facts:

In Andrew Jackson's day, money was plentiful, prices were high, and prosperity was enjoyed by all.

Following the Civil War, greenbacks, or United States notes, were plentiful, prices were high, prosperity returned, and reconstruction was quickly accomplished.

During and after the World War, money was plentiful, prices were high, work was plentiful, wages were good, and America became the leading creditor nation of the world.

History sustains the contention that plentiful money makes good prices, and good prices make good times and general prosperity. Likewise, scarce money makes low prices, and low prices make hard times, panics, and depressions.

In 1873, through the demonetization of silver, one-half the basic money of our country was struck down and discredited. The destruction of silver, by closing the mints for its coinage, brought about a scarcity of money, causing a fall in prices, deflation, and depression. The demand for more money and higher prices led to the Bryan free-silver campaign in 1896.

In 1921 prices were lowered by the process of taking money out of circulation. Beginning on March 4, 1921, and lasting for 18 months, the party in power deliberately made money scarce by taking out of circulation over $100,000,000 per month.

Thereafter in less than 2 years' time wheat fell in price from $2.50 to $1 per bushel, cotton fell from 40 to 20 cents per pound, and other prices were reduced in proportion. This deflation of our currency ruined agriculture first, then livestock, lumber, and mining industries followed the decline. Still later, smaller towns and cities suffered, and with one-half the people impoverished the 1929 crash came.

In 1930 to 1933 money was scarce—so scarce and so valuable that prices were the lowest in generations.

In 1933 the administration at Washington proceeded to raise prices by lowering the value of the dollar. The value of the dollar in foreign exchange was lowered by reducing the gold content of such dollar. The value of the domestic dollar was and is being reduced through a planned and orderly increase of Federal Reserve notes and a wider use of silver.

The contraction of the currency just after the World War reduced prices. The expansion of the currency now is increasing prices.

By expansion of the currency I mean a planned, orderly, and controlled increase in the number of currency dollars in circulation. Domestically, our currency dollars are neither based upon nor redeemable in gold; hence such dollars are commodity dollars. Not being based upon gold, the value of such dollars depends upon the number placed in circulation.

The money plank in the Republican platform demands that the Congress exercise its constitutional power "to coin money and to regulate the value thereof." The Congress has the right and power to increase or decrease the amount of money in circulation; hence has the right and power, at will, to increase or decrease the general price level, which includes commodity prices and wages.

This power is constitutional.

The section of the country from which I come, save only the Republican candidate for the Presidency, demands that prices and wages be increased through an absolutely safe and orderly expansion of the currency.

How may this be accomplished?

Under existing law the Federal Reserve System may expand the currency at will through the policy of open-market operations. Under this policy the Federal Reserve banks may enter the open market and purchase bonds and pay for such bonds with Federal Reserve notes. This policy places new money in circulation and thereby directly expands the currency.

In 1932 the demand was general for higher prices. The bonus bill was pending, calling for payment in United States currency. All admitted that the passage of such a bill would result in higher prices. In order to combat the bonus bill and to raise prices the Hoover administration had the Federal Reserve Banks to inaugurate a policy of heavy purchases of United States Government bonds. During the time the Congress remained in session after this program was begun the banks purchased some $100,000,000 per month of such securities and through such program over eleven hundred million dollars were placed in circulation, and during this period, prices improved, times were better, and we were on our way out of the depression. Just as soon as the Congress adjourned the bond-purchasing program was terminated and immediately deflation was resumed and the 1932 November political revolution was inevitable.

Under existing law the President has the right and power to issue as much as $3,000,000,000 of United States notes and to pay such notes into circulation through the purchase of outstanding interest-bearing Government bonds and obligations.

Under existing law the President has the right and power to issue currency against all silver in the Treasury at the monetary value of such silver or at $1.29 per ounce.

Today our Government owns approximately 2,000,000,000 ounces of silver. This silver embraces silver bullion and coined dollars, halves, quarters, and dimes. The monetary value of such silver is almost $2,500,000,000. Out of this silver we have coined and have in circulation the sum of $367,000,000. Against the remainder we have issued and placed in circulation silver certificates in the sum of $1,114,000,000; hence we have surplus silver in our Treasury which we could coin or against which we could issue silver certificates in the sum of over $1,000,000,000.

Under existing law, the President has the right and power to purchase additional silver and to issue new currency against such metal to the extent of over $800,000,000.

In addition to our silver, we have in our Treasury some $10,485,000,000 in gold. Although we have this vast gold and silver hoard, we have issued currency of all kinds to the amount of only $5,888,000,000; hence we have ample gold and silver buried and guarded against which we could issue over $6,000,000,000 of new currency, and each new dollar would be backed by 100 cents of gold and silver.

It is not and cannot be denied that we have ample gold and silver to back and support additional currency, dollar for dollar, which could be placed in circulation through the payment of maturing obligations until the general price level is raised to that point which will permit the farmers to secure cost of production plus a reasonable profit and which will permit labor to secure a living wage through humane hours of toil.

Under existing law, our administrative officials have ample power to raise prices through a safe and orderly expansion of the currency. If this program should be inaugurated, and if money should become too plentiful and prices should rise too high, the Federal Reserve System now holds billions of bonds which could be sold, and thereby any amount of currency may be removed at will from circulation.

Economic laws are as immutable as are the laws of gravity. Expanding the currency will cheapen the value of the dollar. Cheaper dollars mean higher prices. Higher prices mean more profits, higher wages, and increased prosperity.

Prices for raw materials and basic American products, while higher than 3 years ago, still are too low to enable producers to pay costs of production and have left a reasonable margin of profit. Until legitimate business shows a reasonable profit, governmental budgets cannot be balanced, public borrowing must continue, banks dare not expand their credit, industry must continue to seek Federal loans, and the unemployed must continue to be supported by the Government.

The general price level must be raised sufficiently to permit producers, wage earners, and industry to survive and make reasonable profits. The price level must be raised in order that profits may be increased.

Personal-income and corporation taxes are levied against profits; hence, profits must be increased in order to make possible the collection of sufficient taxes to balance the Budget. The price level must be raised in order to make it possible for banks to renew the policy and practice of making commercial loans. The price level must be raised prior to any substantial reduction in public-relief spending and most certainly before we can stop such spending altogether. The price level must be raised before we can possibly have a return of general and permanent prosperity.

Based upon my analysis of the Republican money plank and the economic principles just stated—

I exhibit to the Senate a graph showing lines, notations, and figures, which I will undertake to explain. By means of the lines and notations I will try to show that the value of the dollar controls prices and prosperity.

The line across the center of the graph represents a dollar valued at 100 percent, or 100 cents as shown by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The small top line shown on the graph in red represents the value of the dollar from year to year, as measured or valued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

When the small red line is shown above the center line across the graph, the dollar is valued at over 100 cents; and when such line is shown below the center line, the dollar is valued under 100 cents.

When the value of the dollar is high prices are low, and, conversely, when the value of the dollar is low prices of commodities are high. The value of the dollar affects and controls the value of commodities; also, the value of the dollar affects and controls, in a large manner, almost every public and private activity.

The graph displayed covers the time from 1914 to the present date. In 1914 the dollar had a value or buying power in the sum of 146 cents. By this statement I mean that in 1914 the citizen desiring to secure a dollar had to give up in services, or goods, or commodities, value to the extent of 146 cents. Likewise, I mean, that in 1920 the citizen desiring to secure a dollar had to give up only 64 cents in value to get a dollar.

From 1922 to 1929 the dollar had a value ranging from 96 cents to 104 cents, so that the amount of services, goods, and commodities necessary to be transferred for a dollar was rather uniform and stable during such years.

Then in 1929, with the coming of the depression, the demand for dollars became so great that the value of such dollars began to rise, and by February 1933 such dollars were valued, as measured by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, at 167 cents.

The present administration has reduced the value of the dollar from 167 cents in 1933 to the value of 128 cents, and such is the value of the dollar today.

Next let me point out to the Senate the effect of the changes of the value of the dollar on prices, national income, value of farm property, value of farm income, value of exports, Treasury income, and prosperity in general. The figures which I submit are taken from official sources.

In 1914, when the dollar was valued at 146 cents, the national income was thirty-three billion; the value of farm property was thirty-nine billion; the value of farm income was seven billion; the value of exports was one billion eight hundred million; commercial failures were eighteen thousand; the money in circulation was less than three and one-half billions, and the Treasury income was seven hundred million.

In 1920, when the value of the dollar was reduced to the low limit of 64 cents, prices of all kinds were greatly increased so that the national income was sixty-nine billion; the value of farm property was sixty-six billion; the value of farm income was thirteen billion; the value of exports was eight billion; commercial failures had fallen to eight thousand; the money in circulation had increased to six billion two hundred million, and the Treasury income was over $6,000,000,000.

From 1922 to 1929, when the value of the dollar was fixed and kept fairly stable within a range of 96 to 104 cents, the national income was seventy-eight billion; the value of farm property was forty-nine billion; the value of farm income was eleven billion; the value of exports was four billion eight hundred million; commercial failures were twenty-one thousand; the money in circulation was less than $5,000,000,000, and the Treasury income was approximately $4,000,000,000.

Then in 1933, when the value of the dollar was increased to 167 cents, prices of all kinds were correspondingly decreased, and the national income was only thirty-nine billion; the value of farm property had fallen to thirty-six billion; the value of farm income was reduced to five billion; the value of exports had fallen to one billion, six hundred million; commercial failures had increased to thirty-one thousand; the money in circulation in July 1930 was only four billion, two hundred million, and the Treasury income in 1933 was only $2,100,000,000.

Since 1933 the dollar has been cheapened until, to date, it is worth some 128 cents and, as a result of the cheapening of the dollar, the following estimates are submitted:

For 1935 the national income was fifty-three billion, and the estimate for this year is fifty-nine billion.

For 1935 the value of farm property was thirty-two billion; the value of farm income was eight billion; the value of exports was two billion, three hundred million; the commercial failures were eleven thousand; the money in circulation at the present time is five billion, eight hundred million, and the estimated Treasury income for this year is $4,000,000,000.

The influence and control of the value of the dollar over prices, national income, and values of all kinds, are as instantaneous, positive, and complete as the laws of gravity. Every monetary authority who enjoys a reputation worth mentioning agrees to the position here taken.

The makers of the Constitution understood the importance of the value of the dollar and the effect of such value upon the economy of the Nation. The Constitution gave the Congress power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof. It is the constitutional duty of the Congress to provide an adequate supply of such dollars and to make such dollars reasonably available to the public.

This duty rests upon us here today.

If such agents as we have appointed to act for us in carrying out the mandate of the Constitution fail or refuse to act, then it is our solemn duty to act and to act at once.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to point out on the graph one or two further points.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, if it does not disturb the trend of the Senator's argument, I should like to ask him a question about the estimates of national income.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It does not disturb me at all.

Mr. STEIWER. I think I just heard the Senator from Oklahoma use the figure $59,000,000,000 as an estimate of national income for 1936. There has been some confusion upon that point, and it is a matter of some importance. Can the Senator tell us what it is that affords the basis for that opinion?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I presume economists have different means of computing these statistics; but I have here a statement, taken I think from this morning's newspaper, suggesting that the income for 1935 would be $59,000,000,000. I read from this morning's Washington Post:

Nation's 1935 income put at $59,000,000,000.

It takes a long time after the year is over for the statisticians to acquire the figures upon which to base their conclusions, so, of course, they could not have an estimate for 1936. Now the figures are coming in, and I will read this statement:

BOSTON, MASS., June 15.—The national income has a long way to go to reach $81,000,000,000, the high in 1929. However, the increase since the low point of 1932 has been very steady. If improvements in the first quarter of 1936 are continued, it is estimated our national income this year will be close to $59,000,000,000.

That is the authority for my statement.

Mr. STEIWER. I am indebted to the Senator for that explanation. If he will permit me to make an observation, I should like to do so.

Mr. Eccles, of the Federal Reserve Board, recently estimated the national income for 1936 at $60,000,000,000. The President of the United States, in an address at New York not long ago, used an estimate of $65,000,000,000. I take it from what the Senator says that there is no accurate information concerning the national income for 1936, but that the figure of $59,000,000,000 is arrived at by computing the gains on the theory that they will continue to the extent that has been evidenced during the first quarter of the year. That is the explanation, is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think the Senator has the matter correctly analyzed.

Mr. STEIWER. Does not the whole validity of the argument which the Senator from Oklahoma is now making depend on that being a substantially correct figure?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I take the reports of great organizations that make it their business to deal in figures, assemble figures, analyze figures, and announce conclusions. I depend upon them for my information.

Mr. STEIWER. I am not quarreling at all with the figures. Has the Senator more accurate figures for the year 1935?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No doubt I have them and could produce them, but I have not them here at the moment.

Mr. STEIWER. But no department of our Government has concluded its calculations for 1935. Is not that true?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I rather suspect that is correct. The figures I have are largely estimates. This is the first estimate I have seen that gives anything more than the $53,000,000,000 to which I have referred, although I do have here numerous other figures that might be cited.

Mr. STEIWER. Has the Senator placed in the RECORD the national income for 1934?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; I did not do so. Of course, I have the figure, but I did not use it.

Mr. STEIWER. I shall not intrude further upon the Senator's time; but it occurs to me that if it is possible to get sound estimates of national income, they would aid us all in our consideration of all these economic questions.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am giving the latest figures I can find. I have here a report, marked "Crops and markets." It is a Federal publication. Table no. 1 gives the gross income from farm production, 1909 to 1934, and the total value of farm property from 1919 to 1935. From this report the gross income for 1935 is lacking. The farm income for 1934 is fixed at $7,300,000,000; for 1933, $6,406,000,000, according to this report; and for 1932, $5,337,000,000.

The value of farm property in 1934 was $37,000,000,000, and in 1935, $32,000,000,000. So as the dollar becomes cheaper the value of farm property is reflected by a larger sum.

Mr. President, in addition to the figures on the graph, we can take anything, I do not care what it is, in either public or private ownership, and we find that the value of the dollar is reflected in the value of the thing we might have in mind.

For example, let us take industrial production. In 1929, with the dollar down to the point shown on the map, worth approximately a hundred cents, the industrial production was 119. That is, of course, an average. When the dollar had gone up in buying power from a hundred cents to 167 cents, industrial production had fallen to 64. Then as the dollar fell in buying power, we find that by April 1935 industrial production had gone back to 97. So, as the dollar goes up we find industrial production coming down, and as the dollar has come down industrial production has gone up.

The same thing is true of factory employment. In 1929 there was what might be termed stable employment. The figure here is 104.8. By 1932, with the high-valued dollar, the factory employment had fallen to 64. Then, as the dollar came down in value we find factory employment going up, and by April 1935 it was back to 86 again.

The same thing is reflected in pay rolls. In 1929 pay rolls were figured at 109, with a stable dollar worth around 100 cents. By 1932, with the high-valued dollar, the payroll figure had fallen to 45. Then, as the dollar was brought down in buying power, and prices increased, and times improved, the pay roll in April 1936 was at 78.

Let us take freight loadings. In 1929, with stable conditions, the freight-loading figure was 106. As the dollar went up in buying power, prices went down, and times became bad, the freight-loading figure fell from 106 to 56. Since 1932, with the cheapening of the dollar and higher prices, we find the freight-loading figure has gone from 56 up to 67.

Take department-store sales. In 1929, with the stable dollar, valued at 100 cents, the average is given here as 111. By 1932, with the high-valued dollar, lower prices, and the depression, we find department-store sales have fallen to 69. With an improvement in conditions through the cheapened dollar we find that department-store sales went up from 69 to 86.

Let us take building contracts. In 1929, with the rather stable dollar worth around 100 cents, we find the index figure of building contracts at 117. By 1932, with the high-valued dollar and bad times, the figure had fallen to 28. Since 1932, with the cheaper dollar, we find building contracts have increased, as per the index number, from 28 to 48.

I have here another sheet. Let us take the figures showing the number of passengers carried on the railroads. In 1920, when there was a cheap dollar and when prices were high, when everybody was at work, the passengers carried by the railroads numbered 1,234,000,000. By 1932, with the high-valued dollar and low prices, the number of passengers carried was only 478,000,000, a loss of a billion passengers per annum on the railroads from 1920 to 1932.

Take freight tonnage. In 1920 the freight tonnage carried by the railroads, with the low-valued dollar and high-priced materials and commodities, was 2,259,000,000 tons. In 1929, with the high-valued dollar and low prices, the railroads carried only 1,168,000,000 tons, showing a loss of over 1,000,000,000 tons. From 1932 to 1935 the freight tonnage increased from 1,168,000,000 in 1932 to 1,422,000,000 in 1935.

The gross-revenue figures likewise reflected the change. In 1920, with the low-valued dollar and high prices, the gross revenue of the railroads amounted to $6,178,000,000. By 1932, with the high-valued dollar and low commodity prices, the gross revenue had fallen from $6,178,000,000 to only $3,126,000,000. With the slight increase in the uptrend of business and the cheapening of the dollar from 1932 to 1935 the gross revenue increased to $3,450,000,000.

Let us consider the wage payments on railroads in 1920. In that year, with low-valued money and high prices, the annual wage payments to railroad employees amounted to $3,681,000,000. As the change came, and the dollar increased in buying power, and prices fell, until 1932, the annual wages paid to railroad employees had fallen from $3,681,000,000 to $1,500,000,000, or more than one-half.

One further observation: In 1920, with low-valued money and high-valued products, the average wage to railroad employees was $1,820 per annum. In 1932, with high-valued money and low-valued commodities, the average wage to railroad employees had fallen to $1,466 per annum. There has been some improvement since 1932. In 1935, with the cheaper dollar and higher-priced commodities, we find the average wage has increased from $1,466 per annum to $1,623 per annum.

Just one additional observation: I desire to place in the RECORD a statement showing the effect of the value of the dollar upon stocks, both common and preferred. In June 1930, less than a year after the depression struck, with the dollar still having a buying power of approximately 100 cents, stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange were valued, in current prices at that time, at $66,000,000,000. As the dollar went up along with commodity values, the values of stocks likewise correspondingly fell, so that in 1932 the values of common stocks had fallen from sixty-six billion in 1930 to the low point of $13,000,000,000 in 1932.

Preferred stocks in 1930 were worth $8,000,000,000. By June 1932 preferred stocks had fallen from that figure of $8,000,000,000 to $3,000,000,000.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. This afternoon I have listened to nearly all of the address of the able Senator, and I congratulate him and the Senate upon his speech.

Mr. President, when one begins to study the money question, it is like studying the beginning of time and the end of space—the mind reels before it. I have always felt that all of our financial woes and ills could be solved by an act of Congress which would permit the free and unlimited coinage of silver possibly at the ratio of 28 or 29 to 1. I have held that view for 40 years as one of the few opinions upon which I have never given ground or never relaxed. I began my public career with the belief that the free coinage of silver would cure all our financial woes and ills, and I believe it now.

Let me ask the able Senator, What would be the result in this country if we should pass a law providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver, say, at the ratio of 25 or 28 to 1? I ask the Senator because he and one other Senator, whom I shall not name, have a knowledge on this subject, and they know more about the money question when they are asleep than I do when I am awake, and I am seeking enlightenment on that subject.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, when we had the old gold dollar of a weight of 25.8 grains of gold, and when we had the silver dollar, which we still have, but when we had that dollar which was a legal tender prior to 1873, the ratio between those two coins was 16 to 1, approximately. That meant that the silver dollar was 16 times as heavy as the gold dollar. It meant that silver was worth one-sixteenth as much in terms of money as gold. In other words, it takes 16 ounces of silver to be worth 1 ounce of gold.

When silver was demonetized in 1873, the money characteristic was taken from silver and silver became a legal tender for only the sum of $10, and the mints were closed to the free coinage of silver. When that happened silver ceased to be a basic primary money and became only a token money, no more valuable than brass or copper or bronze, excepting silver is more rare than those metals, and for that reason is more valuable as a commodity.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, what would happen if we did open the mints to the free coinage of silver?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if the mints had been opened to the free coinage of silver when the 1933 law was passed, the depression would, in my opinion, have long since been a thing of the past.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am probably as happy now as I shall be any time during the rest of this day, because I believe the Senator is a financial expert, and he reinforces me in my opinion, which is 40 years old, that all the country needs is the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

Of course, I hesitate to say this because it is a sour note in the Senator's able speech; I desire to add—with a high protective tariff. With a high tariff and free silver coinage America's prosperity will be restored.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am talking only about the money question; not the tariff.

Mr. ASHURST. I know, but I hope the Senator will pardon me for including that in which I so profoundly believe.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have had a zinc plate made of this graph entitled:

Dollar value controls prices and prices control prosperity.

I tender that zinc plate. It is suitable for printing in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that it be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing; and, if the rules will permit, I ask that the plate be printed in the RECORD at an appropriate place in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The graph referred to appears on p. 9539 of today's RECORD.)

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question? What he said was extremely important. He said that we had one-half of the available gold of the world in this country. Did the able Senator include the gold which is sent to us from foreign countries which is reposing in our vaults, sometimes earmarked, or does he mean the gold that we could utilize in money uses for ourselves? I am interested in having his viewpoint.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, all gold that comes to American shores immediately becomes the property of the Treasury of the United States. The banks in making international settlements receive gold, and the moment the banks receive gold they must, under the law, turn that gold over to the Treasury. Of course, they take a credit for it, but the gold is in the possession of the Treasury, and title to the gold is actually in the United States.

TAXATION OF INTOXICATING LIQUOR

During the delivery of the speech of Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, the following business was transacted:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair) laid before the Senate the following action of the House of Representatives, which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 95 to the bill (H. (b) All proceedings, hearings, investigations, or other matters pending before, or being carried on by, the Administrator shall be continued and brought to determination by the Administration.

(c) No suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against any agency or officer of the United States shall abate by reason of the transfer of rights, privileges, powers, and duties, or the abolition of the office of Administrator, under the provisions of this title.

The unexpended balances of appropriations available for salaries and expenses of the Federal Alcohol Administration, as a division of the Treasury Department, shall be available for salaries and expenses of the Federal Alcohol Administration, as an independent establishment of the Government, including the salaries and expenses of the members of the Federal Alcohol Administration.

SEC. 505. The third paragraph of section 5 (e) of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"In order to prevent the sale or shipment or other introduction of distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages in interstate or foreign commerce if bottled, packaged, or labeled in violation of the requirements of this subsection, (1) no bottler of distilled spirits, no producer, blender, or wholesaler of wine, or proprietor of a bonded wine storeroom, and no brewer or wholesaler of malt beverages shall bottle, and (2) no person shall remove from customs custody, in bottles, for sale or any other commercial purpose, distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages, respectively, after such date as the Administrator fixes as the earliest practicable date for the application of the provisions of this subsection to any class of such persons (but not later than August 15, 1936, in the case of distilled spirits, and December 15, 1936, in the case of wine and malt beverages, and only after 30 days' public notice), unless, upon application to the Administrator, he has obtained and has in his possession a certificate of label approval covering the distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages, issued by the Administrator in such manner and form as he shall by regulations prescribe: Provided, That any such bottler of distilled spirits, or producer, blender, or wholesaler of wine, or proprietor of a bonded wine storeroom, or brewer or wholesaler of malt beverages shall be exempt from the requirements of this subsection if, upon application to the Administrator, he shows to the satisfaction of the Administrator that the distilled spirits, wine, or malt beverages to be bottled by the applicant are not to be sold, or offered for sale, or shipped or delivered for shipment, or otherwise introduced, in interstate or foreign commerce. Officers of internal revenue are authorized and directed to withhold the release of distilled spirits from the bottling plant unless such certificates have been obtained, or unless the application of the bottler for exemption has been granted by the Administrator; and customs officers are authorized and directed to withhold the release from customs custody of distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages, unless such certificates have been obtained. The District Courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States court for any Territory shall have jurisdiction of suits to enjoin, annul, or suspend in whole or in part any final action by the Administrator upon any application under this subsection; or".

SEC. 506. The second proviso of section 5 (e) of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act is amended to read as follows: "Provided further, That nothing herein nor any decision, ruling, regulation or other action of any department of the Government or official thereof shall deny the right of any person to use wholly or in part the wine names or brands port, sherry, Burgundy, sauterne, Haut Sauterne, Rhine (Hock), Moselle, Chianti, Chablis, Tokay, Malaga, Madeira, Marsala, claret, vermouth, barbera, cabernet, Saint Julien, Riesling, Zinfandel, Medoc, or cognac, or any other geographic name of foreign origin (except champagne), upon any of the foregoing produced in the United States if of the same type and the use of such name or brand is qualified by the name of the State or other locality in the United States in which the product is produced, and, in the case of the use of such name or brand on any label or in any advertisement, if such qualification is as conspicuous as such name or brand: And provided further, That except as herein expressly provided as to said names or brands, nothing in this section shall be held in any wise to affect or abridge any of the powers granted to the Federal Alcohol Administration to provide standards of identity, quality, labeling, or other regulations."

SEC. 507. Section 9 of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act (U. S. C., 1934 ed., supp. I, title 27, sec. 209) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Nothing in this section shall affect the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, under the customs or internal-revenue laws, to remit or mitigate the forfeiture, or alleged forfeiture, of such distilled spirits, wines, or malt beverages, or the authority of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to compromise any civil or criminal case in respect of such distilled spirits, wines, or malt beverages prior to commencement of suit thereon, or the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to compromise any claim under the customs laws in respect of such distilled spirits, wines, or malt beverages."

SEC. 508. This title, except sections 502, 505, and 507, shall take effect when a majority of the members of the Federal Alcohol Administration first appointed under the provisions of section 502 qualify and take office.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to Senate amendment numbered 136.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 25, 29, 31, 32, 36, 40, 41, 43, 45, 46, 47, 48, 55, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 76, 77, 80, 81, 82, 83, and 87 to the bill (H. R. 11581) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, and concurred therein; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 54, 56, and 57 to the bill and concurred therein severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 7, 11, 16, 17, 24, 26, 27, 28, 30, 33, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 42, 44, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 58, 64, 65, 66, 75, 78, 79, 84, 85, and 86 to the bill and requested a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and that Mr. BLANTON, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. JACOBSEN, Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia, and Mr. TABER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

CONVEYANCE OF LANDS TO MARYLAND-NATIONAL CAPITAL PARK AND PLANNING COMMISSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4105) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to convey certain lands to the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, of Maryland, for park, parkway, and playground purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey, by a good and sufficient deed, to the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, a public agency created by the General Assembly of Maryland, chapter 448 of laws of the 1927 session of said assembly, all of that piece or parcel of land situate, lying, and being in Montgomery County, in the State of Maryland, being a part of the area comprising the Bethesda Experimental Station of the Bureau of Animal Industry, designed and described as the east 18 acres. This land is to be used exclusively for public park, parkway, or playground purposes; and if the said Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission fails to use such lands for the purposes herein provided, or at any time discontinue the use of such lands for the purposes herein provided, or attempts to alienate such lands, title thereto shall revert to the United States of America. The control and supervision of this land shall remain in the Secretary of Agriculture until such time, after approval of this act, as will enable the Department of Agriculture to complete the transfer of the animal experiment station now located on the lands heretofore described to the new site at Beltsville, and to complete the emergency research studies now being conducted. The Secretary of Agriculture is further authorized, in his discretion, to issue to the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission a revocable permit for the remaining 32 acres of the Bethesda Experimental Station of the Bureau of Animal Industry. The plans for development of these lands for park, parkway, or playground purposes shall be approved by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment. The amendment has to do with a piece of land which the Department of Agriculture has for experimental purposes, and which it is desired to incorporate in the greater parking area of Washington as a part of the Park and Planning Commission grounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate disagree to House amendments to Senate amendments nos. 1, 54, 56, and 57; that the Senate further insist upon its amendments numbered 5, 7, 11, 16, 17, 24, 26, 27, 28, 30, 33, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 42, 44, 49, 53, 58, 64, 65, 66, 75, 78, 79, 84, 85, and 86, and agree to the further conference asked by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. GLASS, Mr. COPELAND, Mr. KING, Mr. NYE, and Mr. KEYES conferees on the part of the Senate.

LOW-COST HOUSING PROGRAM

After the conclusion of the speech of Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma,

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 4424) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the development of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Chavez	King	Pope
Ashurst	Clark	La Follette	Radcliffe
Austin	Connally	Lewis	Reynolds

Mr. WAGNER. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The clerk will state the first amendment reported by the Committee on Education and Labor.

The first amendment was, in section 2, at the top of page 4, to strike out:

(2) The term "families of low income" means families who cannot afford to pay enough to induce private enterprise in their locality to build an adequate supply of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for their use.

And insert:

(3) That the project conforms to a general program formulated by the Authority to distribute the benefits of this act as widely as practicable throughout the United States, consistently with the needs of the several States and their political subdivisions;

Any such covenant shall run in the case of a grant for a period of 60 years, and in the case of a loan for a period equal to the maximum period allowed for the repayment in full of such loan: Provided, That no such covenant shall continue to run after the acquisition of such project in a bona-fide foreclosure under a mortgage or other lien held by a third party if the Authority has received actual notice in writing of such foreclosure proceedings at least 30 days before sale.

And insert:

(1) When a loan or grant is made pursuant to section 9, and when a low-rent-housing project is sold pursuant to section 10 (b), the loan or grant agreement, contract of sale, or deed shall contain an option for the purchase by the Authority of the project involved, in the event of a substantial breach of the covenant (which shall be embodied in such agreement, contract, or deed) to maintain the low-rent character of such housing project. (1) When a loan or grant is made pursuant to section 9, and when a low-rent-housing project is sold pursuant to section 10 (b), the loan or grant agreement, contract of sale, or deed shall contain an option for the purchase by the Authority of the project involved, in the event of a substantial breach of the covenant (which shall be embodied in such agreement, contract, or deed) to maintain the low-rent character of such housing project. Such option may be exercised within such period (not to exceed 60 years) and upon such terms as shall be prescribed in said agreement, contract, or deed.

(2) When a loan is made pursuant to section 9, the Authority shall retain the right, in the event of a substantial breach of the covenant (pursuant to paragraph 1 of this section) to maintain the low-rent character of the housing project involved or in the event of the acquisition of such project by a third party in any manner including a bona-fide foreclosure under a mortgage or other lien held by a third party, to increase the interest payable thereafter on the balance of said loan then held by the Authority to a rate not in excess of the going Federal rate (at the time of such breach) plus 2 percent per annum or to declare the unpaid principal of said loan due forthwith.

(3) When a grant or any part thereof shall be made payable in annual contributions pursuant to section 9 (b), the Authority shall retain the right, in the event of a substantial breach of the covenant (pursuant to paragraph 1 of this section) to maintain the low-rent character of the housing project involved, to reduce or terminate said annual contributions. In the event of the acquisition of such project by a third party in any manner including a bona-fide foreclosure under a mortgage or other lien held by a third party, such annual contributions shall terminate.

(4) When a lease or contract for the administration of a low-rent-housing project is made pursuant to section 10 (c), the Authority shall retain the right to terminate such lease or contract in the event of a substantial breach of the covenant (which shall be embodied in such lease or contract) to maintain the low-rent character of such housing project.

(5) The Authority may also insert in any contract of loan or grant, contract of sale, lease, contract of administration, mortgage, or any other agreement or instrument made pursuant to this act, such other covenants, conditions, or provisions as it may deem necessary in order to insure the low-rent character of the housing project involved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 15, page 25, line 20, to change the section number; on page 26, line 3, after the word "fix", to strike out "The amount by which such development or acquisition cost (less depreciation) exceeds the sales price shall be considered a grant pursuant to section 9 (b), and the project shall then become eligible for a loan pursuant to section 9 (c) and for annual contributions pursuant to section 9 (b)" and insert "The amount by which such development or acquisition cost (less depreciation) exceeds the sale price shall be considered the lump-sum portion of a grant pursuant to section 9 (b), and the project shall then become eligible for annual contributions pursuant to section 9 (b) and for loans pursuant to section 9 (c). Any obligation of the purchaser accepted by the Authority as part of the consideration for the sale of such project shall be deemed a loan pursuant to section 9 (c)"; on page 26, line 20, after the word "section", to strike out "11 (c), the Authority shall fix the rentals (which in the case of a lease pursuant to section 11 (c) means the rentals payable by the public housing agency or the public housing society to the Authority) at an amount at least" and insert "10 (c), the Authority shall fix the rentals and the consideration for such lease or contract, as the case may be, at an amount at least", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 14. In order to protect the financial position of the Authority, and to prevent Federal assistance to any low-rent-housing project in excess of that contemplated by this act—

(1) The sale by the Authority of any low-rent-housing project shall be for a consideration, in whatever form may be satisfactory to the Authority, equal to at least 55 percent of the development or acquisition cost of the project less such allowance for depreciation as the Authority shall fix.

The amount by which such development or acquisition cost (less depreciation) exceeds the sale price shall be considered the lump-sum portion of a grant pursuant to section 9 (b), and the project shall then become eligible for annual contributions pursuant to section 9 (b) and for loans pursuant to section 9 (c). Any obligation of the purchaser accepted by the Authority as part of the consideration for the sale of such project shall be deemed a loan pursuant to section 9 (c).

(2) In the administration by the Authority of any low-rent-housing project, and in the leasing or administration under contract of any such project pursuant to section 10 (c), the Authority shall fix the rentals or the consideration for such lease or contract, as the case may be, at an amount at least sufficient to pay (a) all necessary and proper administrative expenses of the project (if administered by the Authority or administered under contract); (b) such sums as will suffice to repay, within a period not exceeding 60 years, at least 55 percent of the development or acquisition cost of the project, together with interest at such rate as the Authority deems advisable.

(2) Any contract for a loan, grant, annual contribution, sale, lease, or administration pursuant to this act shall contain a provision requiring that the wages prevailing in the locality, as determined by the Authority, shall be paid to all laborers and mechanics employed in the development or administration of the low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project involved.

(3) The act entitled "An act limiting the hours of daily services of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", as amended (37 Stat. 137), shall apply to contracts of the Authority for work in connection with the development and administration of low-rent-housing or slum-clearance demonstration projects.

(4) The benefits of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes" (39 Stat. 742), shall extend to officers and employees of the Authority.

(6) Any contractor engaged on any project financed in whole or in part with funds made available pursuant to this act shall report monthly, and shall cause all subcontractors to report in like manner (within 5 days after the close of each calendar month, on forms to be furnished by the United States Department of Labor), as to the number of persons on their respective pay rolls, the aggregate amount of such pay rolls, the total man-hours worked, and itemized expenditures for materials. Any such contractor shall furnish to the Department of Labor the names and addresses of all subcontractors on the work at the earliest date practicable.

SEC. 20. (a) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall make advances to the Authority from time to time upon its request, but not to exceed, in the aggregate outstanding, the sum of $100,000,000, which shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding cost plus one-eighth of 1 percent per annum and shall be repaid in full by the Authority to said Corporation or its successor within a period of 60 years from the time when made. Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 31, it is proposed to strike out—

An additional amount not to exceed $150,000,000 on and after July 1, 1937, and an additional amount not to exceed $150,000,000 on or after July 1, 1938—

So as to read:

The Authority may issue such obligations in an amount not to exceed $150,000,000 on or after July 1, 1936.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is obvious. This is essentially experimental legislation. In the form pending it would authorize $150,000,000 of Government obligations in the next fiscal year, and it would authorize thereafter an additional $150,000,000 for each of 2 subsequent years. These obligations are to be fully guaranteed by the Government in respect both of principal and interest.

Mr. President, I submit that there probably never was a piece of thoroughly fundamental and important—and in the latter term I quite agree with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]—legislation submitted to the final conclusion of the Senate concerning which there was less per-capita information possessed by Senators respecting it. I doubt whether there is any Senator in the Chamber, except the able Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who could stand even a kindergarten examination upon the bill.

That being the situation—and I doubt if it can be denied—it seems to me that if we deal with the next fiscal year, that is enough to deal with under such circumstances.

I confess I have not had time to study the matter. I have not been a member of the committee considering it. I undertook today to read the hearings during such free moments as I had.

Apparently there is some difference of opinion regarding the validity and the utility of the bill. I am not referring to objections which may have been voiced by self-serving interests with an ax to grind, but I find in the body of the hearings the testimony of those who would seem to have credentials beyond challenge as respects special interests at least. For example, I find the testimony of Mr. Walter Kruesi, who appears to be the economic consultant on housing for the Welfare Council of New York City itself. I find that Mr. Kruesi speaks definitely and specifically in his challenge against the bill. I do not know whether or not his position is warranted. I am in no position to pass upon it.

However, in the face of the situation which we thus confront, and with manifestly an inadequate period of time to probe all of the recesses of the problem, and apparently in the presence of a lack of any disposition on the part of the Senate to pay the slightest attention whatsoever to embarking upon a new undertaking, I submit that the least we can do by way of prudence is to limit our action to an experiment of 1 year.

The objectives of the proposed legislation are beyond argument; I raise no voice whatever against them; but it seems to me that wise and humane objectives cannot be substituted for deliberative consideration, which is utterly lacking in respect to the proposed legislation itself. After all, as submitted, it does obligate the Government of the United States in a sum approximating half a billion dollars. After all, half a billion dollars still remains a considerable sum of money in spite of the anesthesia which most of us have taken, the country included, in respect to Federal expenditures.

I submit that as a matter of elementary caution the least we can do is to confine the experiment to 1 year and pass upon the ultimate objective later. It is solely for that purpose that I submit the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I regret that my membership on the conference committee considering the pending tax measure has prevented my being in the Chamber during the discussion of the bill. Therefore it has been necessary for the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] to act for me and to make the explanation which he has done in a most satisfactory manner.

I should like to say, however, that the problem is not a new one to the Committee on Education and Labor. Extensive hearings were held a year ago on a bill then pending before the Senate, which resulted in no action being taken. Extensive hearings were held during the present session. Those hearings are printed and the evidence is contained in the volume containing 369 pages which I now hold in my hand. I think the hearings this session covered a period of 7 days.

Frankly, I must confess that the general problem of continuing Government activities in the direction of building homes for people of low incomes from public funds is a difficult one and one that should be strictly limited in its scope.

I do not hesitate to say that personally I feel that the money which has already been spent by the Federal Housing Administration in building houses for persons in the low-income group has been unwisely spent. I think everybody sincerely interested in the problem of slum clearance, and everybody connected with the Government outside of the particular officials who spent the money and who built these projects, has been somewhat disappointed in the result. I do not mean that it is not desirable and useful and beneficial for the Government to spend money to erect attractive and sanitary homes for persons of low income, so that they may live under healthful and comfortable circumstances, if done within well-defined limits and for the purpose of providing reasonably comfortable homes for those whose incomes force them into unhealthy dwellings. The problem is a tremendously broad and expansive one when we stop to think that 40 percent of all the workers in this country have a net income of less than $1,000 a year; and all of them, if we enter the field of housing them, have equal right to Government aid. If the Government is going into the business of building houses to rent to persons of low income, there is no limit, and I see no ultimate end, except some form of socialism; namely, the Government absorption and ownership of all the rental properties in the country.

There is no reason why one family with a moderately low income has a right to have a home provided for it at Government expense unless such homes are provided for all; and, furthermore, it is not a desirable objective to encourage the Government to go into the business of erecting homes and renting them in competition with privately owned property. That is just what has happened in several of the projects which the Government has undertaken during this depression. Why? Because there was no legislation limiting or directing the administrative authorities as to the financial limitations of the families to be housed in the Government projects. They were given a sum of money and told to build dwellings in order to help employ persons in the building trades. They were directed to help lift us out of this depression by spending some of the emergency funds for the purpose of building sanitary and reasonably comfortable homes, with healthful surroundings, for persons in the low-income group.

Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I have insisted and I now insist that the Government has no business whatsoever unless we are to abandon private property rights and home ownership in building homes for persons in the low-income group, except for those in the group of very lowest incomes, except for those whose incomes are so small that they live in hovels, in unsanitary, in unhealthful, in crime-breeding communities and localities. So far as I have had any share in drafting this bill, I have insisted again and again that whatever money is spent, whatever activities the Government undertakes in this direction, we must confine ourselves to slum clearance, and to persons who live in slums. I even went so far as to seek to have written into the bill a provision that only persons with incomes of less than $500 a year should be permitted to reside in the houses which are to be built by grants from the Government, and possibly also loans from the Government.

I must concede that this is largely a question of administrative policy. If we have not the proper administrative officers, no matter what language we use, no matter how much we announce that we desire to bring about slum clearance, no matter to what extent we may limit the use of these homes to persons of low incomes, we are going to be in the situation of these Government-built homes, homes built on Government loans and grants, being rented in competition with privately owned property to whomever politicians in any city or State may designate to occupy these tenements; and we shall have the spectacle of persons who can afford to pay $50 more or less a month, and who are now living in $50-a-month homes, going into homes which the Government furnishes them, better than they are now occupying, at $15 or $20 a month. If this should happen, private ownership of homes for family use or for rental will collapse.

So I desire to have it clearly understood, and I think the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] agrees with me, that we have had before us, fortunately, this experiment of which I cannot approve, of which I do not approve, which has already taken place; namely, expending money on these housing projects, all of which are desirable and commendable, but to which there is no end, when once undertaken, until you house the 40 percent of families with incomes less than $1,000.

Once the Government begins providing homes for persons who can afford to pay a reasonable rent for a home in a reasonably healthful locality it will be necessary to provide them for all unless we approve of favoritism and discrimination. So this bill does seek, so far as we could write our purpose into language, a real, serious effort in the direction I have stated. I desire now, before the bill is passed, to say that I think it will be a great calamity if the administrators of this measure fail to rent these properties to the poorest of the poor, to the scrubwoman with her children who is earning only three or four hundred dollars a year. If we are going into the business of renting these homes to persons with incomes of $1,000 or $1,200 or $1,500, as against the class to which I refer, we are going into a field that is unfair to the taxpayers, and points directly to public ownership of all properties; we are going into a form of socialism; we are going into a situation which means that ultimately all tenement properties will be owned, rented, and managed by the Government.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator think the bill, as now pending, protects us against being drawn into the field which he wishes us to keep out of?

Mr. WALSH. I am pleased that the Senator has asked that question. I answer emphatically, yes, so far as language could be devised. If the Senator will examine the hearings which he has stated he has read during the past day or two, he will observe that all through the hearings I was sounding that note again and again and again—"slum clearance", "slum clearance", and nothing else. It is to me unwise and unsound for a government to spend vast sums of money simply to build homes for people, and not provide for the occupation of the homes at low rentals to persons now in unhealthful homes, in insanitary homes, in crowded, disease-breeding and crime-breeding localities; and so far as I have been able to emphasize that idea, I have incorporated it in the bill. To provide dwellings at cheaper rents than private owners can build and rent dwelling for persons other than those in the slums is indefensible unless we set up a socialistic state.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and myself, as conferees, have had under consideration another housing bill. The Housing Division of the Public Works Administration has been operating, as is well known, in the housing field. They have undertaken housing projects in various cities. But the houses which they have built have been for occupancy by families of moderately low incomes and not, strictly speaking, of the slum-clearance type.

After spending large sums of money in the erection of houses, the Comptroller General ruled that they could not rent these Government owned and built houses at a lower rental than would pay back to the Government a portion of its investment so that the entire cost to the Government might be amortized from 40 to 60 years.

Distinction should be made between the housing activities of the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration and the Federal Housing Administration. The latter does not loan any Government money; it insures mortgages made by private interests on housing projects and has accomplished excellent results and made a notable record.

The House put an amendment in the housing bill, containing some other amendments which were very properly asked for, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to fix the rental fee at whatever rent he saw fit to charge. Now, just think of that—to charge whatever rent he saw fit to charge. That, of course, is to overcome the ruling of the Comptroller General, who has tied the hands of the Housing Division of the P. W. A. The amount of rent they would have to charge to prevent losses to the Government would be in excess of the rentals of privately built homes of the same character and type. The able Senator from Georgia and myself and the House conferees have insisted that a yardstick should be placed in the amendment, and that the present or any future Secretary of the Interior should be obliged to rent these properties to persons of very low incomes, and we attempted to go so far as to define what low-income families are, and what constitutes low income, so that the persons who occupy these premises will be in the slum-group class.

Now let me explain to the Senate—perhaps the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has already done it—the procedure under this bill—just what it provides and in what manner the city of New York, or the city of Philadelphia, or the city of Chicago, will undertake to obtain Federal aid for a slum-clearance project. The first thing they must do is to petition the United States Housing Authority, which is created in this bill, consisting of five members, and ask that their plans and scheme for a slum-clearance project in their locality—the city of New York, for illustration—be approved and that a 45-percent grant be made to them by the Federal Government. The United States Housing Authority then decides—and we have placed restrictions upon their authority—whether or not the situation in the locality is such that there is an actual slum-clearance problem; whether or not there are persons in that locality who are living in unhealthy and insanitary conditions; whether or not there are living there persons of such low income that they cannot afford to live in any but insanitary surroundings, and other similar restrictions.

When the authorities here determine those facts, and approve of the plans and the project, they may then grant a loan of 45 percent of the cost of the undertaking.

The other 55 percent of the cost may be required of the local authority—if it is a State government, the State authority; if it is a city government, the city authority. If it is a housing authority under the city government, such as exist in several cities, they may furnish the other 55 percent by issuing bonds, or through the credit of the State or municipality; but that is not required. Provision is made in the bill whereby the United States Housing Authority, set up in the bill, may loan the 55 percent from funds acquired by sale of their bonds, so that the total sum of money invested will be, from the Government, 45 percent grant, and 55 percent in the nature of a loan; and these bonds which are provided for, and toward which the Senator from Michigan has directed his amendment, represent the money to be used in making the loans to the local housing authority which decides to undertake a slum-clearance project. The committee has eliminated from the bill the provisions to make grants and loans to association and groups other than local governmental agencies.

In order to confine and restrict and limit the occupation of these homes to persons who are obliged to occupy slums, provision is made in the bill that in the mortgage or the contract for the grants and the loans, very strict requirements will be imposed as to the class of persons who will occupy these premises. I call attention to the fact that the committee for the purpose of carrying out this idea and making the restriction as strong as possible has strengthened the original bill by the language used in the committee amendment on page 4, subsection (2) of section 2. It reads as follows:

(2) The term "families of low income" means families who lack sufficient income, without the benefit of financial assistance, to enable them to live in decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings and under other than overcrowded housing conditions: Provided, That no family shall be accepted as a tenant in any low-rent-housing project whose aggregate income exceeds six times the rental of the quarters to be furnished such family.

The term "rental" as used in this section includes the average cost (as determined by the Authority) of heat, light, water, and cooking, where such services are not supplied by the lessor and included in the rent.

In no other housing legislation has any such restriction as this been imposed, defining the maximum rent that shall be charged, based upon the income of those applying for tenancy.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Provided I understand this language, I am wondering whether or not it in effect achieves the result which the Senator was addressing himself to in his earlier remarks, and I should like to add that I cordially concurred in his earlier remarks.

Mr. WALSH. I assumed the Senator would.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Suppose a family went into a low-rent housing project on the basis of $15 a month rent, which certainly would be a modest sum. Under this proviso a family with an income of $90 a month would be eligible to enter that project, would it not?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would the Senator say that a family with an income of $90 needs Government housing?

Mr. WALSH. That is the maximum amount of family income which the Government must require in order to permit occupancy. It is expected that the other language and the other terms imposed would lead to renting the houses to tenants with very much lower incomes. We had to fix a maximum. We could not fix a minimum. The Senator will agree to that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It will finally be necessary, then, to rely upon administration instead of upon this language for real protection, will it not?

Mr. WALSH. That is true.

Mr. WAGNER. Ninety dollars a month for a whole family would amount to about a thousand dollars a year. The average family, I assume, will consist of four or five persons. It has been shown by all the surveys that a family of that type needs an earning power of $2,500 a year in order to live even reasonably decently. That is the low-income family about which I am speaking, a family earning a thousand dollars a year or less. As a matter of fact, as it will work out, it will be found that the houses to be erected will be occupied by families earning less than a thousand dollars a year, because the Senator is figuring on the average rent at about four or five dollars a room, and taking a family of five, it will probably want four rooms, and that will mean $20. I rather think that we are serving both an economic and a humanitarian purpose in helping a family of that kind, because if they are not assisted, they cannot live anywhere, particularly in the larger communities, except in the hovels and slums about which we have been talking.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from New York assumes that the average family is going to pay probably $20 a month rent. That means, then, that a family with an income of $120 a month, which means $1,440 a year, is going to be eligible to live in a so-called slum-clearance project. I will readily sympathize with the family which has to live on $1,400 or $1,500 a year, but I think they are a very lucky family compared with a majority of the families of the United States, and I am unable to believe that they are eligible for what the Senator from Massachusetts calls slum-clearance treatment by the Government of the United States, because if we are to start on that basis, then there are billions and billions and billions of dollars of obligations ahead of us, are there not?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I raised the same objection the Senator has raised to this very language, and was persuaded to accept it for the reason that evidence was presented before us that in some of these projects the rent will be only $4 a room, and two rooms and a half will mean $10. That is only $60 a month, and surely as a maximum $60 a month for a $10 tenant is not out of proportion. When we come into the lower range of figures, and consider the fact that they expect to charge only $4 a room, we are up against the proposition of $10-a-month tenant payment to a family whose maximum income cannot be more than $60 a month. That is not so bad.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Am I not right at least in saying, then, that so far as protection is concerned against the thing which the Senator from Massachusetts and I desire to avoid, the protection is not in the language proposed, but will necessarily be in the administration?

Mr. WALSH. To an extent I agree with the Senator, but the Senator must not only read that proviso, but also the other language describing what constitutes a family of low income, as follows:

The term "families of low income" means families who lack sufficient income, without the benefit of financial assistance, to enable them to live in decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings and under other than overcrowded housing conditions.

Then there is the proviso.

Mr. VANDENBERG. My fear is that the proviso will be used as a definition of the preceding sentences.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator will agree with me, I am sure, that if all these houses were to rent for $4 a room the proviso would be a proper one and not too narrow. But I agree with the Senator that if we are going into the business of charging $10 a room or $15 a room a proviso of one-sixth of the rental compared with the income is too high. I assume that the rental is going to be confined entirely to a room to rent for approximately $4 a month. However, I will later, before the bill is passed, propose an amendment further lowering the maximum income requirement.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator did emphasize that that is, of course, the maximum.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I emphasized that.

Mr. WAGNER. I suppose, of course, the demand for this type of occupancy will be among the families of lower income, and then it becomes a matter of administration to favor those of the lowest income groups first.

Mr. WALSH. It will be a tragedy if the administrators of this act do not rent these properties to people in the lower status of incomes who are decent and who ought to get aid and assistance from the Government and ought to be able to live in healthy, sanitary surroundings. I believe the Senator from New York feels exactly as I do about that, because that is one of the things emphasized and the one thing I have always had in mind.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator knows that he and I are exactly in accord on that proposition.

Mr. WALSH. Now let me proceed with a further development of the process by which the Government is to aid in slum clearance.

The grant is limited to 45 percent of the cost of the development or acquisition cost. Local governmental authorities can furnish the balance of the 55 percent themselves, or they can borrow from the Government this amount.

The titles to the property will always remain in the local authorities, not in the Federal Government, except in the demonstration projects referred to later in the bill.

The property is to be rented by the local authorities, and there are imposed all through the bill many conditions as to rentals and management; and the tenants must be of the low-income group if grants or loans are to be made.

Very briefly, that presents an outline of this slum-clearance problem and of the Federal Government's relation to it.

Now let me state the difficulty with the amendment of the Senator from Michigan. He is right; the activity is experimental, and it should be experimental. But 1 year is too short a time in which to try it out. It is just inconceivable that we could get any results in the appropriation of $10,000,000 for the first year and the right to issue $150,000,000 in securities for the purpose of the loan.

The $10,000,000 is, in my opinion, I will say to the Senator from New York, altogether too small a sum for the grants. If the Government is going to grant 45 percent of the project, $10,000,000 is a very, very small sum. It is hoped and expected and desired that the Authority will not make many grants of 45 percent outright, but that the grants will be made in yearly proportional payments and cover a considerable number of years—40 or 50 years—before the 45 percent is used.

The idea of grants in the bill, as I interpret it, is that it would be possible for the local authorities to rent the properties on a basis of getting a fair return on the 55-percent loan, the 45 percent being a grant from the Government, such as grants made now for the building of bridges, the grants it makes now for building municipal buildings and for cooperation with municipalities and States in building public buildings and in erection of bridges and highways and other public projects of various kinds. So it is thought that the better way of handling the problem—of course, that will have to be worked out by the authorities themselves—would be to give only so much money a year to the local authorities by way of grants, which in a measure would be compensating for the shortage of the rental compared with the cost of the project.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator objects to my amendment, as I understand him, on the theory that $150,000,000 for the first year will be insufficient. However, I call his attention to the fact that my amendment does not touch the allowance for the first year. Under their own bill they can get only $150,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. I understand. The Senator wishes to end the experiment at the end of the first year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Pardon me; I do not wish to end the experiment at the end of the first year. I desire to force a report to Congress at the end of the first year in order to find out whether the undertaking is worth while.

Mr. WALSH. How is it humanly possible to set up a United States Housing Authority to get in touch with the local authorities, for the local authorities to prepare their projects, their plans and specifications with respect to slum-clearance projects, to submit them to the authorities, to have them approved, to get them granted, and to make the loans, and to have the homes constructed, and have tenants occupy them so that we can know the real situation? After all, the crux of the undertaking is, Who are the people who will occupy these dwellings? Are they taken from the slums? That is the crux of the undertaking. How can it possibly be done in a year? How can it be done in less than 3 years? The original proposal was 4 years, and it was cut down to 3 years for the objective that the Senator has in mind, that we should as quickly as possible—giving a reasonable time to determine what should be done—find out how the plan and scheme is working out, for a report to Congress, before any further funds should be granted. So I regret to say that I think the Senator's amendment, if adopted, would make useless any attempt to make a real experiment in this important field.

I know the Senator feels, as he has already expressed himself, and the rest of us feel, that it is a perfectly legitimate and a proper and a sound procedure for the Federal Government to lend aid and encouragement to municipalities and States in an effort to rid this country of those conditions of living which promote unhealthy conditions and which the evidence shows are crime-breeding and disease-breeding, and which lead to the development of a future generation of children that are emaciated and unhealthy in body and soul because of the unfortunate conditions in which they have to live, through no fault of their own except that the income of the family is at a very low ebb.

Therefore I ask the Senate to reject the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] was called from the Chamber and has asked me to propose three amendments. I submit the first one and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 8, line 9, after the word "President", it is proposed to insert the following: "(not more than three of whom shall be of the same political party)."

Mr. WAGNER. So far as I am concerned, I see no objection to that amendment.

Mr. McNARY. I think that provision in this particular form is in every piece of legislation we have passed in the last 40 years.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, have all committee amendments been disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I send forward a further amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 9, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$8,000."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, recently, within the last few days, we have increased the salary of the head of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, Mr. Hoover, to $10,000. We have a bill pending to create a new agency in the Treasury Department fixing a salary of $10,000 for the head of that agency. I think that men who are capable of handling this problem, in view of other salaries paid, ought to be given at least $10,000 a year. I am sorry to have to disagree with the able Senator from Oregon. I should like to say for the record while I am on my feet, that I am basing my position on the fact that men who shall serve on this board ought to have as good a salary and ought to have such prestige as the salaries given as the members of any other board. I cannot conceive of any more spiritual benefit that can be rendered to the people of this country, outside of the activities of religion, than driving people out of the miserable disease-breeding, congested, and dilapidated quarters of our large cities and giving them a chance to live in the sunlight and under clean, healthy conditions. God knows there are millions of people that are worthy and deserving of that opportunity. So I hope that the members who are called upon to serve on this board will feel that they have the salary that has now become recognized as the reasonable and fair salary. If they are appointees in sympathy with the problem of an honest effort at slum clearance, the salary in the bill will not be excessive.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what is that particular sum that has become recognized?

Mr. WALSH. I have just given two illustrations of $10,000 paid to persons who have not the responsibility, in my judgment, that the proposed commissioners will have.

Mr. McNARY. I recall that only a few years ago Members of this body received $5,000 a year salary. When I came to the Senate the emolument of Members of Congress was $7,500 a year. Through the adroitness of some member of the Appropriations Committee the salary was increased to $10,000. So we have plenty of illustrations that $8,000 is an adequate salary.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I venture to say to the Senator from Oregon that there is not a head of a commission in the Federal Government getting less than $10,000. I have in mind the Labor Board created last year. The maximum salaries there are $10,000 a year. I will say to the Senator that I personally should like to see a revision of salaries. In many instances—I do not think it is so in the case of the heads of the important bureaus, but I think in many instances it will be found that the salaries are far in excess of salaries paid for comparable work in private life. I think there are a great many disproportionate salaries in our governmental services, but I do not think they are in the case of heads of these departments. I hope the Senator will not press the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inferred from the statement made to me by the Senator from Delaware that the Senator in charge of the bill agreed to the amendment. If I am mistaken in that respect, I am willing to submit it to the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. WAGNER. I think I made it very clear to the Senator from Delaware that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the chairman of the committee, is in charge of the bill, but that I personally would make no objection to the reduction. The one whose judgment should be primarily consulted is the chairman of the committee who reported the bill with many amendments which reflected the views of the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. It is not a substantial matter. I am willing to submit it to the judgment of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I send forward another amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 17, lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to strike out the words, "subject to the approval of the President", and after the word "locality" in line 17 on the same page, to add the following:

Provided, That not more than one demonstration project shall be developed in any one city, and such demonstration project shall not exceed in cost the sum of $2,500,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, is that submitted as two amendments or as one amendment?

Mr. McNARY. That is submitted as one amendment.

Mr. WALSH. The first part of the amendment proposes to strike out "subject to the approval of the President"; the second part of the amendment of the Senator is to limit the development of such projects as may be initiated under this bill to one city?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection to the second part of the amendment. I think it is not objectionable. However, I should like to say to the Senator that we had a very serious debate in the committee as to whether we should have any demonstration projects or not. We thought that the large amount of experimental work, the knowledge and information that have already been acquired by the Government in the creation of housing conditions for people of low income in the large cities ought not to be lost; and that for the sake of presenting desirable projects to the local authorities and afford them the benefit of the knowledge and experience acquired by the Government in this experimental field, we felt that the President ought to determine the question, and that we ought not to agree to have demonstration projects as such without the authority and consent and responsibility of the President. On second thought I think the Senator will agree that that is a condition that improves the bill. It prevents demonstration projects being undertaken without the President knowing of the projects and assuming full responsibility.

If the Senator will omit the first part of the amendment, I will be perfectly willing to agree to the latter part.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the substance of the whole proposal is a limitation of the amount of money that may be expended and of the number of projects in a given city. I shall be very glad to withdraw the first proposal.

Mr. WALSH. Very well; then I accept the amendment so far as I am able to do so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, let the amendment as modified be again stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In line 17, page 17, after the word "locality", it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That not more than one demonstration project shall be developed in any one city, and such demonstration project shall not exceed in cost the sum of $2,500,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from New York, I beg his indulgence, but, in view of the lack of any debate whatsoever regarding this bill and in view of the magnitude of the problem, I again find myself forced to turn to the hearings, as best I may, to see whether there is any legitimate controversy involved. May I ask the Senator who is Mr. Walter Kruesi, of the Welfare Council of New York City, and whether or not he is a reliable and responsible witness.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I never heard of the gentleman. I have examined his testimony, from which I note that he appeared in his own behalf. I do not know what the New York Welfare Council is. I think the chairman of the committee may recall his testimony; but I doubt whether he spoke with any authority.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, when I find testimony in the printed hearings announcing that this bill is "clumsy, confused, extravagant, futile, dabbling with irresponsible local bodies over the heads of the sovereign States", and when I find that opinion expressed by one who is described as "economic consultant on housing, Welfare Council of New York City", I am challenged by the exhibit, and it sounds quite formidable.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, the Senator has read observations about other measures, and he knows that someone can always be found who will make similar statements about any Government activities. As I have said, I do not know the gentleman. But the Senator has no doubt read also the testimony of very prominent citizens from all over the country who appeared in favor of this proposed legislation. For instance, I was just noting the testimony of Mr. James G. Couffer, who is a well-known banker of New York, a member of the firm of Blythe & Co., which is one of the larger banking institutions of the United States. He said in regard to the bill:

I appear before this committee as a member of the investment firm of Blythe & Co., and my business is to endorse the Wagner bill. In my opinion, it means that private capital can be drawn into the investment field of low-rent better housing under the terms of the bill.

We have not had an opportunity as yet to study the bill in all of its details, and I am sure you realize the amount of time that would take, so that any testimony which I may give is dependent upon the details of the bill being satisfactory from an underwriting standpoint.

I am not an expert in the field of housing, and it is not my intention to express an opinion as to the social desirability or the technical phases of the bill.

I believe that the proper safeguards and the efficient administration which is made possible under the terms of the bill, its purposes being based on sound principles of economics, will be carried out, and that the social good which is to be derived from the bill will serve to strengthen economic soundness.

I do know the demand for such housing is great enough to insure the investment for many years to come. I also know there are many millions of dollars lying idle searching for investment with reasonable returns, and this law will provide a large field for such capital.

The Senator yesterday expressed interest in the question whether private capital will be attracted by the activities proposed under this bill. Here is an example of a very prominent banker who says that it will be.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to say so, he can prove without any argument that nine-tenths of the hearings completely favor the bill as submitted. The only point I was raising was that there has been no presentation whatever of the other side of the question on the floor of the Senate, and I was regretting that situation if there is another side to the question. I was simply inquiring about some of the testimony that I happened to stumble on as indicating that it is not a noncontroversial piece of legislation by any manner of means.

Mr. WAGNER. The bill was widely publicized, as the Senator perhaps knows, for a period of 2 years. That much the Senator from Massachusetts has just pointed out. Last year there were hearings upon a measure very similar to the one now pending, and representatives of numerous organizations appeared. I previously inserted a list of them in the RECORD. Incidentally, I have a separate list of organizations from the State of Michigan which have approved the bill, and perhaps some of them may speak with some authority. I will name some of these:

Representative Jesse P. Wolcott; Grand Rapids Federation of Labor; City Council of Dearborn; Mayor Frank Couzens, of Detroit; Kalamazoo City Commission; Detroit Housing Commission; Michigan State Federation of Labor; Council of Social Agencies, Kalamazoo; Calhoun County Council of Social Agencies; legislative committee of Trades and Labor Council, of Muskegon; Battle Creek Federation of Labor; M. & M. Trades Council, of Menominee; Kalamazoo Central Labor Union; Detroit Teachers' Agency; Central Fibre Products of Detroit; Fordson School Women's Club, of Dearborn; Philadelphia Tire & Battery Service, of Detroit; Howell Electric Motors Co., of Detroit; Imperial Electric Co., of Detroit; Master Upholstering Chapter, of Detroit; Kuhlman Electric Co., of Detroit; Virginia Flower Shops, of Detroit; Electric Machinery Manufacturing Co., Detroit; Delta-Star Electric Co., of Detroit; Blue Bird Fur Shop, of Detroit; Elwell Parker Electric Co., of Detroit; the—and this may appeal to the Senator from Michigan—Young Democratic Club, Jackson County, Jackson, Mich.; United Automobile Workers', Local 87, Muskegon, Mich.; Knights of Columbus, Council 923, of Petoskey, Mich.

Those are merely some of the organizations from the Senator's own State which have endorsed the pending bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I recall the testimony of the witness to whom the Senator from Michigan referred. I do not desire to make any harsh or unfair comment, except to say that he did not impress me as being an outstanding or influential citizen.

In connection with the statement made by the Senator from Michigan it is only fair to say in behalf of the bill as presented by the Senator from New York that several witnesses were very complimentary of its language and of its construction. I have particularly in mind Dr. Ryan. I think his very first sentence was an expression of appreciation and admiration for the draftsmanship of the bill. The Senator will note the amendments presented by the committee are all of a restrictive nature and have all tended to limit the time and the amount of money that can be expended, and have a tendency to confine the problem within the limits with which the Senator and I are in accord.

Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has impressed me with the importance, as I have been impressed from the outset, of restricting the class of people who should occupy at low rental the homes to be constructed by the loans and grants from the Federal Government to those who are really in need or who have not sufficient income to pay a reasonable rent. I am, therefore, going to take the responsibility, and I trust the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] will accept my responsibility, of asking for a reconsideration of the vote by which the committee amendment, on page 4, lines 5 to 16, was agreed to, in order that I may offer an amendment, in line 11, to strike out the word "six" and insert the word "five." That will have a further tendency to restrict and limit the class of tenants who may occupy the premises and bring the occupants nearer to the slum-clearance class. That is the substance of an amendment which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and myself and the House conferees are putting in a bill now pending dealing with the rental of homes which have already been constructed out of the Federal funds by the Federal Housing Commission.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I think the Senator will give me credit for having suggested that very formula when we first discussed the question.

Mr. WALSH. That is true.

I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby the Senate adopted the committee amendment on page 4, lines 5 to 16, may be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. WALSH. I now move to amend the committee amendment, on page 4, line 11, by striking out the word "six" and inserting the word "five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert "five", so as to make the paragraph read:

(2) The term "families of low income" means families who lack sufficient income, without the benefit of financial assistance, to enable them to live in decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings and under other than overcrowded housing conditions: Provided, That no family shall be accepted as a tenant in any low-rent housing project whose aggregate income exceeds five times the rental of the quarters to be furnished such family.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I dislike to inject myself into a matter which has been given so much thought, but I am unable to comprehend the need of five members on the board which is to be created. Every Senator knows that every time we increase or add to the membership of a board or create a new board each member has to have a separate office, a separate secretary, a separate stenographer, and a separate telephone, and thus the expense is materially increased. I should like to offer an amendment, if the proponents of the bill would accept it, to make the membership of the board three instead of five.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think the Senator has made a valuable contribution by his suggestion. The reason the membership was made five was that the bill as presented provided for five, and because of our many duties elsewhere, as well as in the consideration of the bill, we apparently overlooked the suggestion now made by the Senator from Michigan. I am very happy to agree to such an amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. Then I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment on page 8, lines 7 to 21, may be reconsidered in order that I may offer my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the vote by which the amendment was adopted is reconsidered.

Mr. COUZENS. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 8, it is proposed, in line 9, to strike out the word "five" and insert the word "three"; in line 13, to strike out the word "five" and insert the word "three"; in line 14, after the words "3 years", to strike out the words "one for a term of 4 years and one for a term of 5 years"; and in line 16, to strike out the word "five" and insert the word "three", so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) The management of the Authority shall be vested in a board of directors (hereinafter referred to as the "board") composed of three members, appointed by the President (not more than three of whom shall be of the same political party), by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and removable by the President, upon notice and hearing, for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office, but for no other cause. One of the three original members shall serve for a term of 1 year, one for a term of 2 years, one for a term of 3 years, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of 3 years each, except that any individual chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he shall succeed. The President shall annually designate one member to serve as executive and administrative officer of the board.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment, which will not be out of harmony with the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] just adopted. An amendment was adopted providing that not more than three of the members of the board shall be of the same political party. That will now have to be modified. Accordingly, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 8, line 9, in the parenthetical clause, it is proposed to strike out the word "three" and insert the word "two", so as to read:

(not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party).

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement regarding the bill.

For many weeks some of us have been engaged in the Finance Committee giving close attention to the Revenue Act of 1936. It has been entirely impossible for me to read consecutively the pending bill. I regret to make that statement and yet it is a fact. The conferees on the tax bill have been kept in almost constant session, or at least some of us have been constantly at work upon it. For that reason I am wholly unable to say whether this is a bill which commends itself to my mind. Reluctant as I am to make the statement, I think that legislation of this character ought not to be put forward at the end of the session when so many Members of the Senate cannot possibly give to it serious consideration.

Also there is some slight inconsistency in committees of the Senate and of the House working continuously for a number of weeks in an effort to raise some $620,000,000 odd of additional revenue, and at the same time the Congress, without adequate understanding of the bill, is appropriating approximately the same amount of money in one bill without due consideration, for a purpose obviously commendable and desirable; but there are many desirable things that the Government cannot do unless it takes upon itself a burden under which it cannot possibly travel.

In addition to that I must voice my sentiment in saying that I do not accept the doctrine, that it is not a sound doctrine, it is not the doctrine which the Supreme Court of the United States should follow, that the power of appropriation is without just limitation and restriction. I do not accept it at all.

To pass act after act without any due consideration of either validity or legality, but upon the bold assumption that we may pass anything and get by with it, is most deplorable.

Commendable as it is, desirous as it is, to provide low-rent housing facilities to the people of the country and to embark upon a program of slum clearance, it is a roadway when once we set our feet in it that will have literally no end. There is no need to mince words about it. In America, where the political power and authority is vested at last in each man and woman with a ballot in hand, we cannot build houses for a part of our people without building houses ultimately for the remainder of our people. We cannot restrict our program to the large cities. The smaller cities, the villages, and the countrysides have a right to be heard.

Mr. President, having made this statement and preserving for myself my record on this bill, I desire to reiterate that I do not accept the doctrine—it is not sound—that the power of appropriation is without just limit or limitation. I do not accept the doctrine that the Federal Government has any rightful power or authority as here proposed to provide homes for the citizens of the States. I do not accept the doctrine that we can enter upon this program without one day rueing it. I do not know whether the Congress will turn back before we have gone into a state of socialism; but if we do, we must do so promptly.

The members of your committee have been spending literally days and weeks trying to devise means by which we may raise some $620,000,000 in additional revenue; yet, with not more than 2 or 3 hours' debate, at the very end of the session, we are appropriating approximately $500,000,000! What possible excuse can I have for voting an additional tax upon the taxpayers of this country when, without having read consecutively this bill—and I dare say other Senators are in substantially the same unfortunate and unhappy position—I vote to impose an additional liability of nearly $500,000,000 upon the taxpayers, by way of bonds, of course, but bonds issued by the Government, and, as I understand, they are the direct obligations of the Government?

I will vote for taxes, and I shall be glad to vote for taxes, as burdensome as taxes are, if I can have assurance that some time we will hesitate before we incur additional liabilities upon the part of the Government which ultimately call for more taxes upon the people. My course is clear. I am through imposing tax burdens upon the people unless the Congress is at least within sight of the time when it will cease to spend money merely because the end in view is regarded as desirable; and so certainly as the sun shines, the people of this country will hold the majority party responsible for any such course of action as that.

I know the objective is good. I should like to rid every American city of slums. I should like to see every American family, at the cross roads and in the villages and in the cities of this country, in decent housing, and enjoying a decent opportunity for life and health and happiness so far as the house itself can give it; but I do know that there is some limitation—some limitation—upon our ability to spend and to continue to spend.

Mr. President, with every sympathy for the objective of this or any other proposed legislation that looks to the social betterment of the men and women of this country, but with a recognition of the fact that the Government cannot do everything, I am compelled to register my position as against this bill. Not only that, Mr. President, but the Government cannot go into private enterprise with any hope that private industry will again function in this country. American men who have had enough sense to make any money are not going to come in competition with the Government, however wise and beneficent the Government may be, and however it may strive not unfairly to enter into direct competition with its citizens.

Here is a housing program; here is the particular program that calls for a fuller operation of the heavy-goods industries in this country; here is a housing program that will call for reemployment in the heavy- or durable-goods industry but, as here undertaken, is in fact a threat to private enterprise.

You say you are not going to extend your operations all over the Nation. Certainly not; but how does any citizen know whether the housing authority will erect an apartment house across the street from where he contemplates the construction of his building? It is an invitation not to enter the field which has cried so loudly for the return of private capital, which has cried so loudly for private enterprise to step back in gear and put our people to work. Here is an invitation not to do it. It is a sign blazoned across the sky, "Dare not do it!" You may reason about it as you please, but no one with money is going to go into the business of building apartments and housing facilities anywhere with this bill in operation.

It was all right to try out some housing projects in the very depths of a depression that called for the expenditure of money in order that wages might be provided, in order that men might have something to live upon; but we have long since passed the crisis of this depression. American business wishes to go ahead. For months and months and months it has been anxious to go ahead, and every time it is feeling itself ready to take a great forward stride, we come in here with warnings—they are more than warnings—in the form of legislation, and we display to the American people the picture of a Congress that has not yet found the way to get six hundred and twenty additional million dollars in revenue voting away $500,000,000.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator. I am yielding the floor.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the bottom of page 13. I should not have raised the question, except that the Senator has been drawing attention to the matter of competition. I wish to direct his attention to the fact that he is referring to private initiative and private energy, and putting men back to work through private undertaking; and yet in this very bill not only is the Government competing in the sense to which the Senator has referred in his able remarks, but a provision of this very bill says:

The Authority—

That is, the Housing Authority—

including but not limited to its franchise, capital, reserves, surplus, loans, income, assets, and property of any kind, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority.

Mr. President, it seems to me that to pass legislation like that proposed and at the same time to be preaching from the house tops in an effort to encourage business to reemploy men is so inconsistent that no sound argument can be advanced for it.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. WALSH. Referring to the language quoted by the Senator from Michigan, similar language is now to be found in several acts on the statute books, including the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act.

Mr. COUZENS. I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation does not own the property on which it lends money. The pending measure includes a provision for grants where the authorities which borrow the money from the Federal Housing Authority own physical property, and are to be exempt from all taxation.

Mr. WALSH. Only in a limited degree, namely, properties known as demonstration properties will be owned by the Government. All the rest of the money will be spent for grants and loans advanced.

Mr. COUZENS. But the Senator knows there is no limitation on the number of demonstration cases.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if I may propound a question to the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator referred to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and stated that the exemptions proposed in the pending measure exist as to that. I was under the impression—and I ask the Senator to correct me if I am wrong—that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is not exempt as to any real property of which it may become the owner.

Mr. WALSH. From taxation?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes. That is my understanding.

Mr. WALSH. It is my understanding that on any real property owned by the Corporation, or which may be acquired through foreclosure, voluntary deed, or otherwise, the Corporation will pay real-estate taxes just the same as any other private corporation or individual, and so such real estate owned by the Corporation would not be relieved of local taxation, which might add to the tax burden of private-property owners.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. VANDENBERG and Mr. McNARY asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. I understand that if present he would vote as I am about to vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote and vote "yea."

Mr. BARKLEY (when Mr. LOGAN's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. LOGAN] on important official business. If present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who is absent. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am advised that, if present, the Senator from Virginia would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the general pair of the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS].

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] is paired on this question with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. If the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] were present and voting, he would vote "nay", and if the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] were present and voting, he would vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. BILBO. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], and vote "yea."

Mr. BARKLEY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. I am authorized to say that if he were present he would vote "nay." I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CAREY (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio has not voted.

Mr. CAREY. I have a general pair with that Senator, who, if present and voting, would vote "yea." I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] are detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mrs. LONG], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are detained on departmental business.

The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] and the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are unavoidably detained.

I am advised that if the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] were present and voting, they would vote "yea."

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. If present and voting, the Senator from Nevada would vote "yea" and the Senator from Virginia would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 24, as follows:

NATIONAL UNEMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF COMMISSION

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 284, providing for the appointment of a National Unemployment and Relief Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it is not a pleasant duty to object to any request made by the Senator from Montana. He asks for the consideration of a joint resolution which is different from any I have seen in a good many years of experience in the Senate. It provides for the appointment of a commission by the President. The peculiar thing about it is that it attempts to authorize the President to use $50,000 of funds now in his possession, heretofore appropriated by the Congress for relief purposes.

It occurs to me, Mr. President, that if Congress has parted with the title to this money, the President may use it as he believes best, and the President probably will. I do not know what right Congress has, by a joint resolution, to attempt to direct the expenditure of money now in the possession of the President. Customarily, and with almost unbroken record, when by resolution we take money out of the contingent fund of the Senate, the resolution must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. That committee determines whether the money should be expended. In this case there is no report from that committee. The money will not come out of the funds of the Senate. The joint resolution purports to authorize the President to spend money which has heretofore been put into his hands.

With all the work we have before us, I have not had time to go into the measure and give it proper study. The joint resolution is on the calendar. In view of the brief statement I have made, I should not feel authorized at this time to accede to the request and permit the joint resolution to be acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon object to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. McNARY. I have so indicated, Mr. President.

I wish the Senator from Montana to understand that the course he should pursue is the course we always pursue in connection with such matters. The joint resolution now under discussion goes in a wholly different direction. I think the Senator should revamp his proposal, and bring it to the Senate conformably with the precedents which have been established through long years of Senate practice. Therefore, on account of its peculiar form, and because I do not believe we should authorize the President to do something we have heretofore authorized him to do, and have given him the money with which to do it, I must object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, it seems to me that the problem dealt with by the joint resolution is undoubtedly the most important problem before the country today. Every Senator in this body has given careful thought to this subject. Relief and relief work and unemployment, to my mind, are the most important subjects before the people of the United States today. The Senate should act on this matter before adjournment.

It is obvious that if the measure is not considered at this time, it will not be acted on at all. It is absolutely within the power of the President to use the funds which have been appropriated for relief for the purpose of studying the problem dealt with in the measure. It seems to me we should not permit haphazard methods of handling unemployment relief and relief work. The commission which would be appointed would have time during the recess to consider this subject carefully, and to present a program for the next session of Congress.

I hope the Senator from Oregon will withdraw his objection and allow the joint resolution to be considered at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I rarely make up my mind carelessly. Therefore it is seldom I ever withdraw an objection. The question involved is a fundamental one. The Works Progress Administration is studying this problem. Various committees have studied it. I realize its importance. I say to the Senator that his measure is not in proper form for the Senate to act upon it. If the Senator will bring it up when we have a call of the calendar, when we can fully discuss the measure, I shall be glad to have it considered; but at this time, when the Senate is about to recess for the day, I cannot consent to the consideration of the joint resolution. Therefore I object.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, a short time ago I happened to attend a conference which was attended also by Mr. Hopkins, of the Works Progress Administration. There it was brought out that it is absolutely impossible for the Works Progress Administration to devote the necessary time to the consideration of this problem. It is a problem which ought to be considered by a nonpartisan commission appointed by the President, a commission which will consider it carefully and will be able to go into it in every detail. It seems to me the Senate will be doing a great injustice to the people of the country if it permits this question to go over without being presented to some commission to be acted upon during the recess.

INCLUSION OF SUGAR BEETS UNDER AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1275, being House bill 8555, the ship-subsidy bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have asked the Senator to yield in order that I may ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider at this time Senate Joint Resolution 278, Calendar No. 2450. I make the request with the understanding that probably there will be no debate upon the measure.

The joint resolution continues during the adjournment of Congress the sugar-quota system under the so-called Jones-Costigan Act. The committee has reported the joint resolution with several amendments. I am advised that all Members present have agreed not to make objection to the form in which the measure is submitted. While they may be desirous of making statements to explain their position, they are not going to object to the present consideration of the measure.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am sorry to say to the Senator—and it is embarrassing to me because of the peculiar situation—that I have an amendment which I should like to offer to the joint resolution. I should prefer, before doing it, to discuss it with the Senator. Would he not be willing to wait until tomorrow before submitting his request?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course the Senator appreciates as well as or better than any Senator present how imperative it is to secure action upon the measure at this time. The joint resolution would add nothing to the present law. Numerous Senators would like to offer amendments changing the present law. I am confident that the amendment which the Senator from New York has in mind would have that effect.

Mr. COPELAND. The amendment I have in mind relates to Puerto Rico. I often say facetiously that my colleague and I are the Senators from Puerto Rico. We have a large Puerto Rican population in our State.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator has very ably represented them.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is very kind to say that. The amendment which I desire to propose—and I am sorry

I have not had time to discuss it with the Senator from Wyoming——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. What is before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming requested the Senator from New York to yield to him for the purpose of asking unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a joint resolution. Consent has not as yet been given.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Oregon that I had moved to proceed to the consideration of the ship-subsidy bill when the Senator from Wyoming requested me to yield that he might ask permission for the consideration at this time of his joint resolution.

I may say that in the case of Puerto Rico my amendment would provide that the direct consumption of sugar shall be fixed by an amount not exceeding 22 percent of the quota established for Puerto Rico, which shall be prorated among the Puerto Rican producers on the basis of past participation in the quota. Would that interfere with the plan of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I regret to say that it would because it involves a change in the present quota system and would necessarily open the door to amendments being offered by other Members of the body. For example, both Senators from Louisiana would like very much to offer amendments which would change the present system. The senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and likewise the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. LOFTIN] would like to do that. On behalf of certain sugar producers in the West I should like to offer an amendment changing the preferential rate for domestic production. All those suggestions would involve debate and would make impossible the continuation of the system during the interim between the final adjournment of the present session and the beginning of the next session of Congress.

I may say further that I understand the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mrs. LONG] is desirous of making a statement setting forth in full the position of the sugar interests of Louisiana; but, as already stated, under the circumstances, she will not offer an amendment at this time.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall not insist if the Senator feels that way about it. I am not prepared to debate the question as I should like to do, and therefore I shall not press the amendment which I had in mind.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then I renew my request for unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 278.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 278) to modify and extend the act entitled "An act to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes", approved May 9, 1934, as amended, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not know that I shall enter any objection to the request if it does not lead to debate. I am very anxious to conclude the session today. I do not want to go too deeply into measures on the calendar.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. McNARY. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. I may say to the Senator that the Senate Finance Committee gave a great deal of consideration to the question involved in the joint resolution. A subcommittee of that committee held extended meetings and took considerable testimony. After we had concluded, we simplified the provisions of the joint resolution as much as possible so as not to disturb the status quo so far as quotas and other activities of the sugar section of the Agricultural Adjustment Act are concerned.

I believe consideration of the joint resolution will not take long and I hope there will not be any objection to considering it at this time.

Mr. McNARY. I shall withhold any objection unless it leads to debate, and then I shall have to ask for the regular order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I agree that the joint resolution should be passed, and promptly. I desire to speak only 2 or 3 minutes to explain the position which I must necessarily take in connection with it. I have no objection to the Senate proceeding to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] moved to proceed to the consideration of the so-called ship-subsidy bill. Is not that the pending question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York made the motion and then yielded by unanimous consent to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to submit his request, which temporarily sets aside the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. McNARY. That operates only temporarily to set aside the motion of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 278) to modify and extend the act entitled "An act to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes", approved May 9, 1934, as amended, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance, with amendments.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, there are a number of Senators who desire to offer amendments to the joint resolution. We are not entirely satisfied with it. I do not believe any debate will be involved.

Representing in part the sugar interests of Florida, I may say my constituents are opposed to the restrictive provisions of the law. They are in favor of unlimited production. They do not like the quota provisions. However, we are not going to offer amendments and we are not going to oppose the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement with reference to the pending joint resolution. I agree with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] that it is necessary to pass the joint resolution, but I agree only because we in the sugar-producing sections of the country find ourselves totally helpless to be protected otherwise.

The fact that the tariff was twice reduced on sugar by the President in the face of a clear demonstration by the Tariff Commission that it should not be reduced leaves us entirely at the mercy of foreign competition except as the quotas are continued. The only way the quotas can be made effective, at least until Congress can again assemble for the purpose of dealing with the subject rationally, is through the passage of the joint resolution.

On behalf of the sugar-beet producers of the eastern continental area, I assert that they favor the passage of the joint resolution, provided it is distinctly understood that they dissent completely from the philosophy of the restriction which is now being applied to a domestic agricultural crop which is not on a surplus basis. There would be no need for any legislation whatsoever respecting sugar if the American producer could have his own market; and it is an utterly amazing thing to me that he cannot have it. In the absence of legislation to secure it for him—and I assume we may hope to get it at the next session—the Senator from Wyoming is right; there is nothing left for us to do except to persist in the existing quotas; and I hope the joint resolution will be passed.

Mr. LOFTIN. Mr. President, I desire to state for the RECORD that the Florida sugar producers are in favor of abolishing all restrictions on production of sugar in continental United States, and repealing all benefit payments. As the joint resolution extends the present law only until January 1, 1937, and the whole subject will be considered at the next session of Congress, the Florida producers are agreeable to the extension for this period, but will urge their views for adoption when the present law expires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 17, before the words "per centum", to strike out "40" and insert "30"; in line 20, before the word "quota", to insert "sugar-marketing"; and at the end of the joint resolution, to strike out sections 3 and 4, in the following words:

SEC. 3. For the purpose of restoring the average purchasing power of the producers of sugar beets and sugar cane in continental United States, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make payments to such producers subject to any of the conditions heretofore made effective by the Secretary under the authority of said amendatory act at a rate not to exceed 50 cents per hundred pounds of sugar, raw value, commercially recoverable from sugar beets or sugar cane produced during each of the calendar years 1936 and 1937 not in excess of the proportionate share of the producer in the initial marketing quota for his area for each of said years. Such basic rate shall be that which is determined by the Secretary to be necessary to give producers of sugar cane and sugar beets in continental United States a purchasing power per such unit of 100 pounds raw value equal to the average purchasing power obtained therefrom for the 1935 crops, said rate to be adjusted to allow for any sums obtainable with respect to sugar beets or sugar cane production or land used for such production under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act.

SEC. 4. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $30,000,000 annually to carry out the purposes of this resolution, including all necessary expenses of administration.

So as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That under the act entitled "An act to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes", approved May 9, 1934, as amended, no further processing, compensating, or floor-stocks tax shall be levied or collected respecting sugar beets or sugar cane or the products thereof as defined by such act as amended nor shall any contract be entered into under the provisions of such act, as amended, with the producers of sugar beets or sugar cane, but in all other respects such amendatory act shall be and remain in force and effect until December 31, 1937, and the quotas established and allotments heretofore made by the Secretary of Agriculture are hereby ratified.

SEC. 2. In order to regulate commerce with Cuba and other foreign countries, among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States, and the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, with respect to sugar, the quotas for the respective sugar-producing areas shall be the same (subject to modification or adjustment by the Secretary of Agriculture under conditions set out in such act) for the calendar years 1936 and 1937 as those initially established by the Secretary of Agriculture for the calendar year 1936: Provided, That for the calendar year 1937 there shall be allotted to continental United States not less than 30 percent of any amount of consumption requirements therefor above 6,452,000 short tons, raw value: Provided further, That any sugar-marketing quota may be allotted by the Secretary of Agriculture, in order to prevent disorderly marketing or importation of sugar, on the basis of prior allotments under such act, changes in marketing since the first such allotment, marketings during the calendar year 1935, and ability to perform.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERMS OF COURT AT ORANGEBURG, S. C.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 12, providing for holding terms of the district court at Orangeburg, S. C. It involves no expense to the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

There being no objection, the bill, H. R. 12, to amend an act entitled "An act to divide the eastern district of South Carolina into four divisions and the western district into five divisions" by adding a new division to the eastern district and providing for terms of said court to be held at Orangeburg, S. C., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the eastern district of South Carolina is divided into five divisions, to be known as the Aiken, Charleston, Columbia, Florence, and Orangeburg divisions. The Aiken division shall include the territory embraced in the counties of Aiken, Allendale, Barnwell, and Hampton. The Charleston division shall include the territory embraced in the counties of Beaufort, Berkeley, Charleston, Clarendon, Colleton, Dorchester, and Jasper. The Columbia division shall include the territory embraced in the counties of Kershaw, Lee, Lexington, Richland, and Sumter. The Florence division shall include the territory embraced in the counties of Chesterfield, Darlington, Dillon, Florence, Georgetown, Horry, Marion, Marlboro, and Williamsburg. The Orangeburg division shall include the territory embraced in the counties of Calhoun, Bamberg, and Orangeburg. The terms of the district court for the Aiken division shall be held at Aiken, for the Charleston division at Charleston, for the Columbia division at Columbia, for the Florence division at Florence, and for the Orangeburg division at Orangeburg.

SEC. 2. That the divisions of the western district of South Carolina, as now provided by law, shall remain unchanged and are not affected by this act, and all other provisions of the said act remain unchanged, as now provided by law.

SEC. 3. That the terms of the District Court for the Eastern District of South Carolina, in addition to the times and places now provided by law, shall be held at Orangeburg, in the county of Orangeburg, in the State of South Carolina, on the third Monday in November and the second Monday in April of each year hereafter: Provided, That facilities for holding court at Orangeburg are furnished free of expense to the United States.

SENATOR GEORGE W. NORRIS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator from Washington wish me to yield in order that he may make a speech?

Mr. BONE. I should like to have the Senator yield to me for a brief observation as to one of our colleagues. I do not wish to take the Senator from the floor, and I hope no one will object to that procedure.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator desires to speak for some minutes, I really wish he would let me test the temper of the Senate and see whether or not my motion will prevail.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the request of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BONE. I merely wish to occupy the floor very briefly to make some observations on one of our distinguished colleagues; and I hope no one will object to the Senator from New York yielding the floor to me for that purpose.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if I will not lose the opportunity to press my motion, I will yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; by unanimous consent the Senator may temporarily yield for that purpose. If there should be any objection, the Senator could not yield the floor without losing it.

Mr. BONE. Then I ask unanimous consent that I may occupy the floor for the purpose I have stated, and that the Senator from New York may not thereby lose the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I cannot believe it possible that the people of Nebraska, or of the entire country, will permit GEORGE W. NORRIS, Senator of the United States from Nebraska, to retire from public life. I know that he has labored long, and that he is entitled to rest; but his outstanding work, his remarkable achievements, his record of unbroken promises, have developed among the masses of our people a confidence in him which cannot be ignored.

To this man have been given natural gifts which have been polished by experience until now, on almost any question, it is only natural for many Members of this body to turn to him for advice and counsel. He has been blessed with the vision, the courage, and the love for humanity which have made of him an institution, and the people are not ungrateful.

Our well-loved colleague has had a most remarkable career. He served several years as prosecuting attorney. Then in 1895 he was elected district judge of the fourteenth judicial district in Nebraska. He was reelected in 1899. On the bench, he gave evidence of his keen sense of justice and fairness. He was elected to the House of Representatives in the Fifty-eighth Congress, taking his seat in 1903, and remained a Member of that body until he entered the Senate in 1913.

While a Member of the House of Representatives, our colleague began his historic career in these legislative halls—a career which the American people, who now need him so much, cannot conceive as concluding. NORRIS, the restless champion, the ever young; how can any one conceive of it? In the House of Representatives he did not take the easy way. He joined in the fight against autocratic powers of the Speaker, and the door was opened to legislative progress.

It is hard, almost impossible, for the American people to sense the passage of time as affecting in the least great men and great events. There is a timelessness about them. It is hard for me to consider this body without a Senator NORRIS; and even those now just beginning to accept seriously the responsibilities of citizenship must have that feeling, too. A few weeks ago, young Democrats in California took a vote to select from all the men who have served in this body those who have made the most substantial contribution to this country. These young Democrats, idealistic, patriotic, selected Senator NORRIS' name to be joined with those of Clay, Calhoun, and Webster. Men in this body have an opportunity to serve the people regardless of party; and it makes me happy to know that these young Democrats in far-off California voiced their appreciation, as I now do across the aisle, to our illustrious colleague who has so completely earned the respect and confidence and faith of the American people, regardless of party.

In this greatest free forum in America, GEORGE NORRIS and a then contemptuously regarded few stood and spoke and voted against plunging this country into a conflict the ultimate dire consequences of which we do not know, and perhaps will not know for generations. I think of that fateful hour on each occasion when this body, in which I, too, am now privileged to serve, considers appropriations for hospitals, widows, the blind, and the economically crippled as a result of the consequences of war. We all recall the bitterness, the scorn with which the brave few were confronted who here gave voice to their courageous convictions on that occasion.

Committed to the war, the people of Nebraska gave magnificently of their substance, and their young manhood, as did the people of every other State, but even as the khaki-clad doughboys were marching down the streets of Nebraska cities to go to a war against which their Senator had voted, the citizens of Nebraska, in uniform and out, went marching to the polls in 1918, and returned to the United States Senate, in the face of the most frenzied attacks upon his patriotism and integrity, a beloved leader who their hearts as well as their heads told them was as courageous and loved his country as much as the very doughboys who were going away to fight for it. They then could not have foreseen, as he did, that the consequences of the war to save democracy would be an end to democracy in so much of the civilized world.

The Members of this body may take pride in the fact that not until the Democrats came into power in Congress under the outstanding leadership of Speaker Garner, now Vice President, and presiding officer of this body, was it possible to secure an untrammeled vote so that the Norris "lame duck" amendment to the Constitution could be passed, and the people of Nebraska must have felt toward their Republican Senator as did the Democratic Members of Congress, because in 1934 the people themselves accepted his judgment despite the opposition of the newspapers and the practical politicians, and themselves adopted an amendment to the State constitution providing for a one-house legislature.

It is not necessary to decide here the great contributions, both to this body and to the country, made by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. As a Democrat, I am happy in the knowledge that a great many of the high purposes to which Senator NORRIS has given years of struggle were brought to fruition with the aid of a Democratic President. One of the most monumental of all human achievements in American history, involving the future of millions of our countrymen, grew out of his long fight for the preservation of Muscle Shoals for the people, and it stands today a symbol of unbroken promises, a monument to a covenant with his people made 30 years ago that he would never forsake a fight for them.

I understand that, although Senator NORRIS did not submit his name in the primaries of his party, the people of Nebraska are now circulating petitions urging that they be permitted to send back to these Halls the Senator of the United States who comes from their State and of whom they are so proud and whom they love so well. I, for one—and I know that I voice the feeling of many here present—join in spirit with the people of Nebraska who are petitioning their Senator to carry on. These are troubled times. The people cannot afford to lose a valued soldier in their cause—the great statesman who speaks for them.

It is impossible to define the far-reaching effect of Senator GEORGE NORRIS on the life of America. We talk about the executive arm, the legislative arm, the judicial arm of the Government; but these can give no real and permanent security unless we have more men like Senator NORRIS in our public life. It is his type—an epitome of something fine and clean in this great Government of ours—that can give a new significance and commanding dignity to American political life. He must not go from our midst. His life, as manifested in service and complete devotion to his fellow men, is not of yesterday or of tomorrow; it is of all time.

Mr. President, at this point I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a very brief chapter from a book by Oswald Garrison Villard entitled "Prophets, True and False", covering the career and character and work of GEORGE W. NORRIS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From Prophets, True and False, by Oswald Garrison Villard]

GEORGE W. NORRIS—NOBLEST OF THE ROMANS

To GEORGE W. NORRIS, United States Senator, Greeting:

"For 20 years you have sat in the seats of the powerful in Washington and served your country faithfully and well. During all that time, unlike many of your legislative associates, your soul has been your own, your vote the vote of conscience. Wherever you have gone, men have respected you, political opponents have envied and feared you. They saw you enter the Senate a reformer, a progressive; some among them laughed cynically and, pointing to many an example in the Senate Chamber, declared: 'The system will overcome him.' The system found itself baffled by a brave and honest man. The years passed, you were progressive still. The Great War came, beclouding men's minds, instilling passion into their hearts, making them give out only words of hate and unreason. You remained clear in vision, temperate in speech, loyal to the core. You voted against the war which was a crime against America and its every ideal, and in so doing you kept the American faith. You have kept it ever since. Always you have been the captain of your soul."

In these words, the editor of the Nation began an appeal to GEORGE W. NORRIS, which had its share in inducing the Senator to reconsider his decision to retire and again to become a candidate. He was at that time, December 1923, not unnaturally depressed. He saw that the high hopes with which he had entered public life had come to naught; that the World War had effectively blocked any progress, had bound and trussed liberalism everywhere; that corruption was rife in American life even among the highest; that the public, emotionally exhausted during the war, was determined to be let alone with its pleasures and its prosperity; that there was no powerful progressive or humane sentiment to which to appeal. Weary and downcast, the thought of rest and tranquillity far from the madding strife of the Nation's Capitol wooed him. But when he came to take counsel by himself with his conscience, when he took note of the appeals to remain in public life with which he was flooded, there was only one decision he could reach. He put aside the ease that a man has earned at 62, and was triumphantly reelected to the Senate.

Yet this was another of the men who was branded as unpatriotic and damned from one end of the country to the other because he insisted on his right to his conscience—a right exercised by John Jay, by Abraham Lincoln, and in 1898 by some of the finest spirits in this land. The whole power of the Government was thrown against the dissenters in 1917 because the Government had a bad conscience and knew that the people but 6 months before had voted to sustain the policy of peace. Some men it broke, but some it could not. The character of Robert

La Follette and GEORGE NORRIS, and others, was not to be wrecked even in that convulsion of hate, and falsehood, and passion which shook the country in 1917. Those men had by their rectitude, their devotion, and their honor, won a place in the hearts of their constituents from which they could not be ousted.

Mr. NORRIS has himself set forth what happened to him after his refusal to vote for the armed-neutrality legislation, in a remarkable letter published in the Nation for January 25, 1928. He was at once the subject "of almost universal condemnation not only in the Senate but outside"; there were calls from the press of his State and from many organizations for his resignation. He neither recanted nor ran away nor trimmed nor sulked in his private office. On the contrary, he at once wrote to the Governor of Nebraska saying that he recognized the right of the citizens of Nebraska to have a Senator in Washington who voted as they wished, but that he would not have voted for the armed-neutrality bill "even if every voter in the State had demanded it." He therefore asked the Governor to obtain from the legislature authority to hold a recall election, so that the people could oust him from office if they saw fit. The Governor refused to do this, and Mr. NORRIS rented a public hall in Lincoln, Nebr., the capital of the State, advertised the fact, and stated that on the following Monday he would account for his acts to all who cared to come and hear him. On his arrival in Lincoln the day before, he was warned that his meeting would be broken up and that he would be mobbed—perhaps killed. Only one reporter called on him to get his views. His friends were afraid to be seen with him. It did not seem wise to ask anyone to serve as chairman of the meeting.

What finally happened Mr. NORRIS described in these words:

"Long before it was time for the hall to open, the street in front was crowded with people and, when the doors were opened, this auditorium, the largest audience-room in the city, was filled to overflowing. Extra chairs were carried in and the aisles were filled. Every seat on the stage was occupied. When I walked out from one of the wings I was met with absolute silence, but I had not proceeded far until I knew that the common sense of the Nebraska people was awake. The first sentence I uttered was that I intended to tell them the truth about the difficulty, and that it would be something that they had not been able to get from the newspapers. That was when the audience broke loose. The people stood up and yelled. I realized then that if an organized bunch of fellows were scattered through that audience, intending to break up the meeting, they, rather than I, would be the victims of the mob. The audience included members of the legislature and people who had come to Lincoln from 150 miles away. These people had become impressed with the fact that the press had not been fair; that it had not told the truth.

"It seemed to me a demonstration that the American mind demands fair play; that it insists that the under dog shall have his hearing and his day in court; and it demonstrated to me that underneath the deception and the misrepresentation, the political power and the influence, there was, in the hearts of the common people, a belief that there was something artificial about this propaganda, and that so-called leaders of public sentiment, both in and out of public life, were being carried off their feet by misrepresentation and even by falsehood. In that hour I felt repaid for all the turmoil, the agony, and the suffering that I had endured. I would be willing to go through it all again, for a vindication such as I received on that occasion. I was deluged with requests to deliver other speeches on the subject of the armed-neutrality bill, but, as my stay in the State lasted only 2 or 3 days, I was unable to accept many of them. My experience was the same, however, in every meeting that I addressed while I was in the State."

It is alleged by the Nebraska State Journal, in commenting on this letter that Mr. NORRIS exaggerated the danger he was in and the temper of the people, and it suggests that he is of those who are apt to feel, and happy to feel, that they are martyrs. That may be. But no one who went through that period of history and opposed the Wilson policies slept upon a bed of roses. Mr. NORRIS went back to Washington and upheld its finest traditions by voting against our going into the war.

What that plunge into the maelstrom of European hatreds, jealousies, and rivalries netted the United States Mr. NORRIS has set forth in an interview he gave on the tenth anniversary of Congress's yielding to Mr. Wilson's wishes, and our entering the war:

"We went to war to make an end to militarism, and there is more militarism today than ever before.

"We went to war to make the world safe for democracy, and there is less democracy today than ever before.

"We went to war to dethrone autocracy and special privilege, and they thrive everywhere throughout the world today.

"We went to war to win the friendship of the world, and they hate us today.

"We went to war to purify the soul of America, and instead we only drugged it.

"We went to war to awaken the American people to the idealistic concepts of liberty, justice, and fraternity, and, instead, we awakened them only to the mad pursuit of money.

"All this, and more, the war brought us. It is our harvest from what we sowed.

"You ask me if I would vote again today as I voted 10 years ago. The answer is, I would."

This man typifies within himself the best in America: unselfishness, devotion to duty and to principle, absolute fidelity to a trust, courage, and integrity. If ever there was a self-made man, this is he. His illiterate father, dying when George was 4 years old, left 10 daughters besides his son; their mother could barely read or write. His life as a child was embraced "within 80 acres of stumps" in Sandusky County, Ohio. It is only the exceptional spirit that can rise out of such surroundings, such grinding poverty, and overcome such handicaps. Even when they are overcome, the marks they leave are too often permanent; too often the bitterness of the struggle hardens the nature, renders callous the spirit. The extraordinary thing about this man is that he came through it all and has weathered the storms of 25 years as Congressman and Senator without becoming in the least embittered or hard, despite his periods of intense depression.

Go to his offices and you will find him accessible, dignified, modest, unassuming, straightforward in his thinking and his acting; a quiet-mannered and low-voiced gentleman, who knows what he talks about or else keeps silent. No "side" here; no assumption that his long public service has made him Sir Oracle; but plenty of deep and sincere feeling, the earnestness of a truly religious and devoted character. He is the greatest antidote for pessimism that we have in Washington since the death of Robert La Follette. For he has proved that a man may always be true to the faith that is in him and yet win the abiding support of an American electorate. He constantly revives our belief in the usefulness of legislators in Washington; yes, of Congress itself. It is now the fashion to gibe and sneer at the National Legislature, to assert that its Members do nothing but loaf and talk, and that the country would be much better off if it met only every other year for 5 or 6 weeks and then went home. It is a falsehood. The amount of business that Congress transacts, and of that which it ought to transact, is truly enormous, and, as the issues before the country become more and more economic rather than political, their importance and their difficulty will steadily increase. A comparison between the questions confronting Congress during the first administration of Grover Cleveland and those with which it is endeavoring to grapple today will cure any honest man of the belief that a congressional job is a sinecure.

One can, of course, loaf through 2 years in Congress or 6 years in the Senate. But not if one is made of the same fiber as Senator NORRIS. Once I asked him his views on a foreign issue. To my surprise he had none. This was his apology: "For 2 years I have been absolutely absorbed in the Muscle Shoals problem. It is so difficult, so far reaching in its ramifications, that in order to master it I have had to concentrate upon it and to exclude from my mind all other matters that were not absolutely essential." Yet Muscle Shoals was only one of the gigantic problems which the Senate was compelled to face, problems that can only be solved by deep and intelligent study of technical points as a rule considered exclusively by technicians and engineers. When one considers that in this same session the Senate has also had to grapple with Mississippi River flood prevention, with the Boulder Dam problem gravely involving the future of seven States, to say nothing of naval policy, of taxation, of foreign affairs, and of the oil scandals, and all the other issues, one comes to recognize that he who sneers at or would ridicule the Senate writes himself down as ignorant and without understanding of the burdens upon the most interesting, and educational, and useful institution in our political life.

To return to Muscle Shoals, Mr. NORRIS began his study of it 6 years ago—in 1922—and speedily realized that it was one of the most important subjects before the country. He became convinced that this great power plant, upon which the United States has expended more than $150,000,000, originally to manufacture nitrate for munitions, presented a problem of vital importance to the Nation. After the war it was decided to dedicate it to the making of nitrates for fertilizer and everybody, except Mr. NORRIS, said, "Oh, let's turn it over to the highest private bidder and get rid of the plaguey thing." But Senator NORRIS discovered that cheaper methods of making nitrate have appeared and that the real possibilities lay in the use of the huge water power for the manufacturing of electric current—cheap current that would enormously benefit manufacturing and industry throughout that part of the South to which it could be made to minister. Twice Mr. NORRIS appeared to have lost his fight, first when the House passed a bill to accept Henry Ford's offer to take it all over. But Mr. NORRIS studied and punctured Ford's plan and, finally, Ford withdrew his offer.

Next, Senator Underwood drafted a bill turning Muscle Shoals over to private power interests, presumably the great Alabama Power Co. In 1926, Congress adopted the Underwood proposal, Senator HARRISON of Mississippi fathering it. With his back to the wall, Senator NORRIS defeated the bill on a point of order after it had passed both House and Senate and a conference report had been submitted. It seemed then, and it seems now, a miracle. In 1927 the Senate Committee on Agriculture favorably reported the Senator's plan, and in 1928 a first victory came to this great-hearted fighter. The Senate by a vote of 48 to 25 adopted his plan for Government control and management. Mr. NORRIS had been ill for weeks. But he pulled himself together and went into action, talking for the better part of 3 whole days despite his weakened condition—and won. Yet there are those who would cloture debate in the Senate. Years of talking, years of incessant labor, of almost incredibly severe industry, carried the day. The House of Representatives is yet to vote—Mr. NORRIS testified for 4 hours before the responsible House committee with marked effect. The outcome is still doubtful, but at least the chances are that it will be a long time, if ever, before Muscle Shoals goes into private hands.

Like everybody else, I admire profoundly Colonel Lindbergh's great feat. But when I think of the medals showered upon him by all the world and think of what Senator NORRIS' work in the Senate has meant for his country, I bemoan the fact that Senator NORRIS, too, is not given the highest award within his country's gift. As I write, the Navy Department is seeking to obtain from Congress a medal of honor for an officer who bombed some Nicaraguan "bandits" and then stood their fire while he helped remove our wounded. Will the world, one asks, never recognise adequately its greatest heroes?

Well, Senator NORRIS seeks no medals, and no reward, save that of his own conscience. With him the fight's the thing. Four times he has seen the Senate pass his bill to end the so-called "lame duck sessions" of Congress—the session after an election in which sit the defeated candidates for a year after their defeat, many of them trying their best to bargain offices into their keeping. Four times the House has killed it by order of the Republican clique which controls the House. Eventually it must pass. Senator NORRIS may not be there to see the victory, but it will come and will be another monument to his preeminent public service. Merely to call the roll of the measures he has fought for and sponsored would take pages. Indeed, he began his career of courage and independence by demanding in 1903 a revision of the choking rules of the House of Representatives, upheld by Speaker Cannon, and by taking the lead in that fight, although a new Member. In this same contest, as told elsewhere, Senator Curtis fought for Speaker Cannon; and today, although a mere rubber stamp for the party, he is a serious candidate for the Republican nomination for the Presidency. The Republican Party which will not think of nominating Senator BORAH, its ablest Senator, would still less think of nominating its most high-minded, its most industrious, its most unselfish; in short, its finest Senator—NORRIS, of Nebraska.

So Mr. NORRIS looks forward to going back to Nebraska in 1931, but not to rest. He has seen another great vision and would like to become Governor of Nebraska in order to make that vision take on reality. He wishes to lead in reforming our State governments now utterly outworn in form, governed by Lilliputian politicians for private or party advantage, pretending to split on the lines of national issues—Republicans against Democrats! Mr. NORRIS wishes to brush this all aside and to make over State governments at one swoop by creating a one-house legislature of about 25 members to be elected, together with a small slate of officials, on a nonpartisan ticket. He would consolidate or abolish many of the State officers and put all employees under civil-service rules. A dream? No; a perfectly practical, sensible, businesslike scheme which would be instantly adopted if politics could be banished and our States treated as the simple business entities that they are. It is no more revolutionary than was the city-manager plan when first proposed, and it would do far more good for the country than any single measure for the reorganization of our governmental machinery since the Civil War.

Here let us leave GEORGE W. NORRIS, quickener of our faith in our Congress; yes, more than that, in our country and its institutions. No one can believe that this Nation is likely to be wholly submerged by a crass materialism when men such as he can be produced to achieve great things by their own unaided efforts, by their courage, their simple bravery, the force of their unspotted characters. Here is one to offer a wreath of admiration and gratitude to him not after he is dead, but while he still lives and serves his fellow men—the noblest Roman of them all.

Mr. BONE. I also ask that as a part of my remarks there be inserted in the RECORD an article from The Forum of April 1936 on Pillars of Government, dealing with the career of the Nebraska statesman.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From The Forum, April 1936]

PILLARS OF GOVERNMENT—GEORGE W. NORRIS

By Oswald Garrison Villard

The man who sat across the desk from me swung in his seat and looked away, not fast enough, however, to hide the moisture in his eyes. For he is deeply emotional, as he is profoundly spiritual—and religious in the true sense. I had been making the most earnest and eloquent appeal to him of which I was capable, begging him to stay in public life. He only shook his head.

"Ask", I said, "a group of your friends to come together and advise you."

"What is the use?" he replied. "I know what they would say and I cannot do it."

Weeks later President Roosevelt declared to the assembled correspondents in the White House offices that the people of this man's State should insist on GEORGE W. NORRIS staying in the Senate of the United States as long as he lives. I do not recall a similar Presidential appeal, or at least one as unreserved and enthusiastic, in all my years of journalism; yet at this writing Senator NORRIS still refuses to let his name go before the Republican primary, with the result that his most enthusiastic backers declare that they will elect him, willing or unwilling, even if he stays out.

It is natural that Senator NORRIS should seek to retire and equally natural that the public should demand more service from him. He is in his seventy-fifth year. He has spent 33 years in Washington—they will be 34 by next fall—first serving five terms as Congressman and then four 6-year terms as Senator. It is hardly to be wondered that, after all these years of unremitting labor, marked by few real vacations or sharp breaks in his official career, he should seek to spend his remaining years in rest and quiet, to control his own time for what is left of his life. More than that, he is deeply saddened by much of what he sees going on around him; his is the nature to be conscious of the futility of much that is happening even in the moment of a great achievement. So are all true idealists never without pain in their moment of happiness—pain because of the needless misery and suffering about them, the incredibly slow progress of justice and reform, the folly and stupidity of men set down in a most beautiful world. Then, like the Czechoslovakian President Masaryk and other wise statesmen, GEORGE NORRIS is eager to retire with faculties unimpaired, with his mind as keen as ever, his zest for his work unabated. Yet—after 34 years in Washington it is not so easy to cut one's self off from official life and retire to relative obscurity.

Not that glory and power have meant anything to him—as little as to any statesman I have ever seen. But he is conscious of the devotion of his friends and what he owes to them, and his gratitude toward the people of his own State he could not, I am sure, trust himself to put into words on any platform. They stood by him in days of evil as well as good repute; they have been loyalty itself in the face of the bitterest denunciation, the fiercest antagonism. They have never allowed themselves to be fooled about him very long. Nebraskans have known him for what he was and is, an utterly unselfish and devoted man never seeking to aggrandize himself and bent only upon serving them well. They recognize him rightly as one of themselves. He is more than that. He concentrates in himself the finest qualities of the average American. He is no great orator, no pretentious leader, no cocksure vendor of sovereign cure-alls for our ills. Indeed, it has been written of him that he is "a Senator without a political formula." That is true; but even more so is the fact that he is a Senator with the highest personal standards, a Senator with a conscience, a Senator who knows that his electorate sends him to Washington not to do blindly what it wishes but what his conscience and his principles tell him to do. This he knows because, as we shall see, on one historic occasion he received their direct assent to this guiding rule of his personal and political life.

MEMORIALS

Four great monuments GEORGE W. NORRIS has builded to himself, in addition to many lesser ones, in addition to the example he has set of Spartan and high-minded virtue. Thereby he has once and for all given the lie to those who say that it is no longer any use to send good men to Congress; that the party machine is all-powerful; and that if you do not stand in with it and thus win high committee assignments you can never get anywhere; that political independence in Congress is an impossible thing. Almost by himself GEORGE NORRIS brought about an amendment to the Constitution abolishing the "lame duck" session of Congress and moving ahead the inauguration of the President from March to January. He simply stuck to the fight year in, year out, with that marvelous patience of his, until, after one defeat after another, he won his victory.

What this reform means we do not yet wholly realize; it will be brought forcibly to the public's attention when Mr. Roosevelt's first term ends in January 1937, 2 months short of a full 4-year term. Already it has toned up public life and speeded democracy, because the new Congress now meets in January and the old Congress no longer comes together in December to drag out its existence until March 4, with its defeated Members concerned chiefly with finding easy berths for themselves in Government jobs before their terms of office are up. The House of Representatives defeated this proposal again and again. NORRIS stuck to it undismayed, rightly certain of eventual victory.

Then there is Muscle Shoals. The naming of this great dam there for him was but simple justice. It has become the keystone of the great Tennessee Valley Authority experiment, which Mr. Roosevelt has dubbed the "national yardstick for the measuring of electric-power rates throughout the country", and which many people believe to be the most important and far-reaching of all Mr. Roosevelt's experiments in government. As to GEORGE W. NORRIS, R. L. Duffus has well written:

"Muscle Shoals has come to symbolize for him a philosophy of the proper relation between government and people. Behind his long fight for Government ownership and control of the great Tennessee River plant is a belief that the power industry must necessarily be a monopoly—that it cannot effectively be anything else—and that the public welfare demands that it be publicly controlled."

Many others shared this view and aided him in his fight. The Progressive group in the Senate was wholeheartedly behind him. Yet I think it is not only the truth that if at any time GEORGE NORRIS had lost heart or faith in the fight, it would have been in vain.

He, a Republican, antagonized three Republican Presidents—Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover—on this issue, to be denounced times without number as a renegade Republican—yes; as a Socialist, Communist, and anarchist. Epithets meant nothing to him in the face of his belief:

"A free people cannot permanently submit to the private monopoly of a necessity of life."

There you have in a nutshell the belief of so many who grew up like GEORGE NORRIS in a carefree age, when everybody believed in laissez faire, in the Government's letting all private business alone—only to be brought up sharply to realize that with human greed what it is, the Government must step in to safeguard the interest of the masses, with no one able to say just how far this process shall go and where it shall stop. NORRIS has never stated where he thinks all this will lead. He knows one thing, however, that wherever there are underprivileged, wherever there are victims of injustice, wherever there are the underdogs of our social system, there he must take his stand—and he never asks the cost.

VICTORY SINGLE-HANDED

Perhaps his third great monument is the most illuminating. For years he felt that the next great forward step to be taken to make our democracy more efficient, the more ready to meet the challenge of communism and fascism, was to reorganize our State governments and take them out of politics. In 1922 he urged it. In 1929, when he also tried to leave the Senate, he wanted to run for the governorship of Nebraska in order to reorganize the State's government, do away with the bicameral legislature, and take the whole State government out of party politics. Apparently he forgot about it—but only apparently. That marvelous patience was not exhausted. Finally, in 1934, he decided that it was time to act. He went home for the summer and, with $750, of which he contributed $500 and his own voice, he undertook to put through this radical, unprecedented reform, to upset the traditional two-house legislative system inherited from Great Britain and unchallenged, from Vermont's abandonment of the unicameral system after using it for 40 or 50 years, to the day that NORRIS took the stump for it. At the age of 73, without a machine behind him or any organization, with 95 percent of the press of Nebraska against him, and 98 percent of the politicians, he set up his banner for a 2-month contest and asked the people of his State to hear his story and to pass upon his proposal.

Youth flocked to him in numbers. Of this encouraging response he said:

"I had at the end of my campaign the finest and most enthusiastic machine I ever saw—all unpaid workers, mostly young men and women—and I carried the State by a majority of 92,934; 286,086 voting for the amendment of the Constitution and 193,152 against."

Nebraska now has one house or soon will have, with a membership not to exceed 32, upon whom the white light of publicity can be directly focused. Members are, moreover, elected not as Democrats or Republicans, but without party designation—there never has been any sound reason why national politics should dominate the political life of the States, although the politicians insist that if they cannot have strong State machines they cannot have strong national ones. This does not weaken the democratic principle, for the people will still choose their representatives, and there will be enough of them to legislate far more intelligently and honestly, without the domination of party leaders and bosses who regard every piece of legislation from the point of view of the good or the harm it will do to the two great parties. This change should eliminate endless graft, save an enormous amount of wasted time and motion, as well as much money, and end bickering and bartering between two houses with the inevitable and undesirable compromising which invariably results from it.

Senator NORRIS wrote me just after his great victory:

"I have reached the conclusion that this question is really one that has only one side, and I do not believe any honest student of Government can study the question without coming to the same conclusion."

Already in a dozen other States movements are under way to follow suit. It is quite possible, if the Nebraskan experiment succeeds, that history will credit GEORGE W. NORRIS with having, all by himself, brought about one of the greatest advances in the history of government in the United States—the removal of State governments from national party politics. At least he has made students everywhere face the fact that the two-house legislature was adopted in the United States for two reasons only—because of the example of Great Britain and the belief in certain American States that there were still, as in the colonies, two distinct classes, the landed proprietors and the common people, and that the assembly in each State was needed to provide a large house fully representative of the common people.

DISGRACE

The fourth great monument GEORGE W. NORRIS has created to himself is not as tangible in its results as the other three. No great work of masonry and cement will commemorate it. It will not find its expression in any great change in governmental structure. Yet to my mind it stands out as the greatest, the most dramatic, and most heroic of GEORGE W. NORRIS' services. I refer to his attitude during the days leading up to our entry into the World War and thereafter. He was one of the "willful 12" (really 11) Members of the Senate who by a daring filibuster defeated the armed-ship legislation asked for by President Wilson at the end of February 1917. Denounced by the President because they refused to obey his will, the storm of abuse and vilification which burst over them is almost without parallel in American history. Besides NORRIS, that roll of honor includes the names of Stone, of Missouri; O'Gorman, of New York; Kirby, of Arkansas; Lane, of Oregon; Vardaman, of Mississippi; Cummins, of Iowa; Gronna, of North Dakota; Clapp, of Minnesota; Works, of California; and La Follette, of Wisconsin. President Wilson wrote:

"A little group of willful men, representing no opinion but their own, have rendered the great Government of the United States helpless and contemptible."

The yelping pack of deluded and half-crazed editors of the press followed the President's lead. Overnight these men were traitors and anathema.

What was their offense? Simply that they did represent their own opinions. They took the oath to perform honestly and conscientiously the duties of their office. Foremost among these duties was that of voting on each measure laid before the Senate according to their consciences and best judgments as to what was best for their country. An arrogant, determined President flared out against them when they defeated his will by means of a filibuster, which they would never have undertaken without being aware of what it would cost them to do so and without being certain that the gravity of the issue compelled them to resort to this political stratagem. When he used all his power to strike at them in an hour of national hysteria, President Wilson abused that power and established a most dangerous precedent for other Presidents to follow, although it may be a life-and-death matter for Congress or a part of it to exert its will—especially in this very matter of war and peace.

The willful men won—yet lost. Several died soon of broken hearts; others were driven out of public life with contumely; but their States are beginning to erect monuments to them today. One to Stone has been unveiled by the son of Champ Clark; another to La Follette, once hanged in effigy a dozen times, is in the Capitol in Washington. And the latest historian of these bitter days of defeat for the American people, Walter Millis, has written of the group in his Road to War:

"On the whole, their impulse seems a notable and honorable one."

VINDICATION

But at that time there was none so poor to do them honor. The opened floodgates of vituperation overwhelmed them and swept them along with almost no power to resist. GEORGE W. NORRIS was not beaten, however. He had done his duty as he saw it. He had functioned as a Senator should who puts conscience above safety and selfish considerations. He was ready to answer to any and all who had the right to question and cross-examine. But here he shall tell his own story as he wrote it in a letter of December 21, 1927. Calls had come to him from the press of his State and all sorts of organizations demanding that he resign. The Nebraska Legislature was in session, so he wrote to the Governor that he had always believed in the recall; that he recognized that the people of the State had a right to have, if they wished, a Senator who would vote their convictions. He declared that he would "under no circumstances have voted for this bill even if every voter in the State had demanded it", and that he would be glad to have the legislature devise a means for a recall election, and that he would abide by the result. The Governor refused to act, but he gave wide publicity to NORRIS' letter and to his own. Thereupon NORRIS wrote:

"I decided to go back to Nebraska and debate the question before the people. * * * I got into Lincoln on a Sunday morning. The meeting was to be Monday night. * * * I reached the conclusion during the day that I was to be ostracized even by the newspaper correspondents. As a general thing the few people who called on me and who were friendly advised and urged me to get out of town. I was told quietly that the meeting would be broken up; that I would be mobbed. * * * It was to me a day of terrible suspense. As I look back over my life, I cannot remember a single day when I suffered more from a lonely feeling of despondency than I did upon that particular Sunday. * * * Long before it was time for the hall to open, the street in front of it was crowded with people. * * * At the appointed time I walked out from one of the wings onto the stage. I was met at first with absolute silence, but I had not proceeded far until I knew that the common sense of the Nebraska people represented at that meeting was awake to the situation and that they realized the truth had not been told them by the press. The first sentence I uttered was that I intended to tell them the truth about the difficulty and that it would be something they had not been able to get from the newspapers. That was when the audience broke loose. That is when the people stood on their feet and yelled. * * * I realized that if there had been an organized bunch of fellows scattered through that audience intending to break up the meeting, instead of my being the victim of the mob, it would be those who were trying to prevent me from making my defense. The audience was composed of many members of the legislature and people who had come to Lincoln from as far as a hundred and a hundred and fifty miles distant. * * * In that hour I felt repaid for all the turmoil, the agony, and the suffering that I had endured, and I would be willing to go through it all again for a vindication such as I received on that occasion. * * * My experience was the same, however, in every meeting that I addressed while I was in the State."

There you have GEORGE W. NORRIS. This is the man whom the Republicans 6 years ago tried to defeat for reelection by running against him an obscure grocer of the same name. The trick was exposed in time, and the Republican leader responsible has just served a 6-month jail sentence and paid a $500 fine. The bogus George W. Norris has similarly been found guilty. No expression of regret ever came from Mr. Hoover, but he, like Woodrow Wilson, is unforgiving of those who question his greatness and his infallibility. Indeed, Mr. NORRIS' refusal to "stay on the reservation" has vexed many besides the recent Republican Presidents. He never was a party man. In the House of Representatives he was of those who fought successfully to deprive Speaker Cannon of his czar-like powers over the House.

Had GEORGE NORRIS used the methods of others to boom himself he would, of course, be far better known and appreciated. Instead he happens to be a modest and unpretentious man, concerned not with publicity but with his job. The politicians do not know how to deal with one who tells you that he does not care if he is reelected or not; whose patience and persistence are so appallingly certain to achieve their aims; who wants to take every office out of politics; whose every day consists of endless labor at his tasks. Often he is deeply depressed because he cannot accomplish all that he seeks to achieve or is asked to do. Sometimes he walks the streets most of the night in despair. Once he wrote me:

"The Progressive group is too small for the work which is crowded upon it. * * * Others take vacations, go away for a few days, rest up. I am not able to do that. I am here, and the work goes on day and night. I have almost reached the point of explosion."

But the explosion never comes. It is the continuing battle, I believe, which saves him. He must go into action when the bugle blows.

Fortunate man to be so trusted and loved by innumerable friends all over the United States! Fortunate United States to have one such public servant, such a patriot, within its confines!

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS TRUST FUND BOARD

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. For what purpose?

Mr. BILBO. For the purpose of enabling me to call up House bill 12353, to amend the act creating a Library of Congress Trust Fund Board. The bill should receive attention, and I do not think there will be any objection to it.

Mr. COPELAND. If it can be considered by unanimous consent and there will be no debate, I shall have no objection.

Mr. BILBO. I ask that the motion of the Senator from New York be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12353.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion of the Senator from New York being temporarily laid aside?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, what is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the motion of the Senator from New York be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12353.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, in explanation let me say that this bill is requested by the Library of Congress Trust Fund Board. The bill has passed the House, and the Board is very anxious to have it enacted. It is a short bill, and I am sure no one will object to it, because the Board asks it, and the Committee on the Library has recommended it unanimously.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, in further explanation of the bill, it simply amends in a very slight degree the present law with reference to the Congressional Library trust fund. The Senator from Vermont no doubt is familiar with the fact that liberal-minded people in this country very often make donations to the Congressional Library. Under the present law, unless the donor stipulates that the interest on the money which is deposited in the Treasury shall be a certain rate, it does not draw that rate. By reason of the fact that donors have stipulated 4-percent interest on the money, the Treasury is now paying 4 percent.

The bill referred to by the Senator from Mississippi would merely allow the Treasury to pay 4 percent on the funds deposited by the Library Trust Fund Board regardless of whether the donor makes such a stipulation.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am informed that Senators have left the Chamber with the understanding that no legislative action would be taken this evening except as affecting certain matters, and this is not one of them. Although I myself have no objection to the measure referred to, under the circumstances I feel bound to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, while I have the floor by the consent of the Senator from New York, I desire to announce that tomorrow afternoon, after the regular order, I shall make some observations on a subject in which I believe the American people are intensely interested.

PENSIONS OF CERTAIN VETERANS

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. I ask the Senator from New York to yield for the purpose of permitting me to make a unanimous-consent request.

On yesterday the House of Representatives passed House bill 12758, which is identical in every particular with Senate bill 4752, Order of Business 2452. It is a bill to increase pensions to certain veterans of the Regular Establishment on the rolls on March 19, 1933.

In explanation, in order that the matter may be clear before my request is made, I may say that these veterans constitute some 4,500 who were formerly in the Regular Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, or the Coast Guard and some 10,500 persons who enlisted immediately following the armistice, November 11, 1918, some of whom served overseas and some in this country, and it applies to no one except persons who incurred disability in the line of duty.

The veterans covered were affected by the so-called Economy Act. They are the only veterans on the pension rolls being paid anything by the Veterans' Administration at the time the Economy Act was passed who have not been restored. This bill would make it possible for them to receive 75 percent of what they were receiving prior to the enactment of the Economy Act.

I discussed the matter with the leader on the minority side this afternoon and I understood he had no objection to the consideration of the bill. The bill was passed by the House yesterday without debate.

I ask unanimous consent that the House bill may be substituted for the Senate bill, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, regardless of the merits of the proposed legislation, I am bound to object, in view of the parliamentary situation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its labors today it take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow, and that upon convening tomorrow the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, commencing with Calendar No. 2218, where the Senate left off yesterday, and that the unfinished business, if any, be temporarily laid aside until that order shall have been concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the bill which the Senator from New York is moving to have taken up for consideration shall be made the unfinished business, it is my purpose to move an executive session, and I should like to announce that a number of Senators have expressed a desire to have a treaty on the Executive Calendar considered today. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] informed me before he left the Chamber that he was in accord with that purpose and that he would like to have the treaty acted upon.

I make this statement for the benefit of the Senator from Vermont, who is acting in the stead of the Senator from Oregon, and also for the benefit of other Senators who may be interested in the subject.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York to proceed to the consideration of House bill 8555.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. There is now on the calendar Senate bill 4668, commonly known as the Guffey coal bill, or what might be called the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1936.

This afternoon the House of Representatives passed a bill identical with this measure. The friends of the bill hope to have it considered at an early date and passed before the final adjournment of Congress. If the motion of the Senator from New York prevails, will he be willing, when the House bill to which I have referred comes to the Senate, to consent to the shipping bill being laid aside temporarily in order to give the friends of the Guffey coal bill an opportunity to have it considered and passed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the request is acted upon I should like to call attention to the fact that the hearings on this very important measure have not as yet been made available to those who are interested in it. Without expressing my views adversely or favorably to the bill, I may say that I certainly desire to have an opportunity to read the hearings. I ask the Senator from West Virginia when they will be available to those who desire to inform themselves on the subject.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I am not in charge of printing the record; but I understand the hearings will be printed, and probably copies of them will be on the Senators' desks tomorrow morning.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from West Virginia if he has filed a report on the bill?

Mr. NEELY. Yes; it was filed yesterday, and is now available.

Mr. COPELAND. In reply to the question of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] I wish to say that I shall be in the hands of our leader. If the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] feels tomorrow that it is wise to set the bill aside temporarily, so far as I am concerned I shall not object.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I object to the request for present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No request has been made for unanimous consent. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8555) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, with an amendment.

CORPORATION BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3841) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That subsection (e) of section 77 of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", as amended, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"(e) Upon the certification of a plan by the Commission to the court, the court shall give due notice to all parties in interest of the time within which such parties may file with the court their objections to such plan, and such parties shall file, within such time as may be fixed in said notice, detailed and specific objections in writing to the plan and their claims for equitable treatment. The judge shall, after notice in such manner as he may determine to the debtor, its trustee or trustees, stockholders, creditors, and the Commission, hear all parties in interest in support of, and in opposition to, such objections to the plan and such claims for equitable treatment. After such hearing, and without any hearing if no objections are filed, the judge shall approve the plan if satisfied that: (1) It complies with the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, is fair and equitable, affords due recognition to the rights of each class of creditors and stockholders, does not discriminate unfairly in favor of any class of creditors or stockholders, and will conform to the requirements of the law of the land regarding the participation of the various classes of creditors and stockholders; (2) the approximate amounts to be paid by the debtor, or by any corporation or corporations acquiring the debtor's assets, for expenses and fees incident to the reorganization, have been fully disclosed so far as they can be ascertained at the date of such hearing, are reasonable, are within such maximum limits as are fixed by the Commission, and are within such maximum limits to be subject to the approval of the judge; (3) the plan provides for the payment of all costs of administration and all other allowances made or to be made by the judge, except that allowances provided for in subsection (c), paragraph (12) of this section, may be paid in securities provided for in the plan if those entitled thereto will accept such payment, and the judge is hereby given power to approve the same.

"If the judge shall not approve the plan, he shall file an opinion, stating his conclusions and the reason therefor, and he shall enter an order in which he may either dismiss the proceedings, or in his discretion and on motion of any party in interest refer the proceedings back to the Commission for further action, in which event he shall transmit to the Commission a copy of any evidence received. If the proceedings are referred back to the Commission, it shall proceed to a reconsideration of the proceedings under the provisions of subsection (d) hereof. If the judge shall approve the plan, he shall file an opinion, stating his conclusions and the reasons therefor, and enter an order to that effect, and shall send a certified copy of such opinion and order to the Commission. The plan shall then be submitted by the Commission to the creditors of each class whose claims have been filed and allowed in accordance with the requirements of subsection (c) hereof, and to the stockholders of each class, and/or to the committees or other represenatives thereof, for acceptance or rejection, within such time as the Commission shall specify, together with the report or reports of the Commission thereon or such a summarization thereof as the Commission may approve, and the opinion and order of the judge: Provided, That submission to any class of stockholders shall not be necessary if the Commission shall have found, and the judge shall have affirmed the finding, (a) that at the time of the finding the corporation is insolvent, or that at the time of the finding the equity of such class of stockholders has no value, or that the plan provides for the payment in cash to such class of stockholders of an amount not less than the value of their equity, if any, or (b) that the interests of such class of stockholders will not be adversely and materially affected by the plan, or (c) that the debtor has pursuant to authorized corporate action accepted the plan and its stockholders are bound by such acceptance: Provided further, That submission to any class of creditors shall not be necessary if the Commission shall have found, and the judge shall have affirmed the finding, that the interests of such class of creditors will not be adversely and materially affected by the plan, or that at the time of the finding the interests of such class of creditors have no value, or that the plan provides for the payment in cash to such class of creditors of an amount not less than the value of their interests. For the purpose of this section the acceptance or rejection by any creditor or stockholder shall be in writing, executed by him or by his duly authorized attorney, committee, or representative. If the United States of America, or any agency thereof, or any corporation (other than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation) the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States of America, is a creditor or stockholder, the interests or claims thereof shall be deemed to be affected by the plan, and the President of the United States, or any officer or agency he may designate, is hereby authorized to act in respect of the interests or claims of the United States or of such agency or other corporation. The expense of such submission shall be certified by the Commission and shall be borne by the debtor's estate. The Commission shall certify to the judge the results of such submission.

"Upon receipt of such certification, the judge shall confirm the plan if satisfied that it has been accepted by or on behalf of creditors of each class to which submission is required under this subsection holding more than two-thirds in amount of the total of the allowed claims of such class which have been reported in said submission as voting on said plan, and by or on behalf of stockholders of each class to which submission is required under this subsection holding more than two-thirds of the stock of such class which has been reported in said submission as voting on said plan; and that such acceptances have not been made or procured by any means forbidden by law: Provided, That, if the plan has not been so accepted by the creditors and stockholders, the judge may nevertheless confirm the plan if he is satisfied and finds, after hearing, that it makes adequate provision for fair and equitable treatment for the interests or claims of those rejecting it; that such rejection is not reasonably justified in the light of the respective rights and interests of those rejecting it and all the relevant facts; and that the plan conforms to the requirements of clauses (1) to (3), inclusive, of the first paragraph of this subsection (e): Provided further, That if, in any reorganization proceeding under this section, the United States is a creditor on claims for taxes or customs duties (whether or not the United States has any other interest in, or claim against, the debtor, as creditor or stockholder), no plan which does not provide for the payment thereof shall be confirmed by the judge except upon the acceptance, certified to the court, of a lesser amount by the President of the United States or the officer or agency designated by him pursuant to the provisions of the preceding paragraph hereof: Provided further, That if the President of the United States or such officer or agency shall fail to accept or reject such lesser amount for more than 90 days after receipt of written notice so to do from the court, accompanied by a certified copy of the plan, the consent of the United States insofar as its claims for taxes or customs duties are concerned shall be conclusively presumed. If the judge shall confirm the plan, he shall enter an order and file an opinion with a statement of his conclusions and his reasons therefor. If the judge shall not confirm the plan, he shall file an opinion, with a statement of his conclusions and his reasons therefor, and enter an order in which he shall either dismiss the proceedings, or, in his discretion and on the motion of any party in interest, refer the case back to the Commission for further proceedings, including the consideration of modifications of the plan or the proposal of new plans. In the event of such a reference back to the Commission, the proceedings with respect to any modified or new plan shall be governed by the provisions of this section in like manner as in an original proceeding hereunder.

"If it shall be necessary to determine the value of any property for any purpose under this section, the Commission shall determine such value and certify the same to the court in its report on the plan. The value of any property used in railroad operation shall be determined on a basis which will give due consideration to the earning power of the property, past, present, and prospective, and all other relevant facts. In determining such value only such effect shall be given to the present cost of reproduction new and less depreciation and original cost of the property, and the actual investment therein, as may be required under the law of the land, in light of its earning power and all other relevant facts."

Mr. BURKE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have been informed that this is a matter in which several Senators who are not present are interested. I ask that the matter lie over until tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon request of the Senator from Vermont, action on the amendment of the House will go over until tomorrow.

SOCKEYE SALMON FISHERIES—TREATY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive M (71st Cong., 2d sess.), a convention between the United States and Canada for the protection, preservation, and extension of the sockeye salmon fisheries of the Fraser River system, signed at Washington on May 26, 1930, which was read the second time, as follows:

The President of the United States of America and His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland and the British dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, in respect of the Dominion of Canada, recognizing that the protection, preservation and extension of the sockeye salmon fisheries in the Fraser River system are of common concern to the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada; that the supply of this fish in recent years has been greatly depleted and that it is of importance in the mutual interest of both countries that this source of wealth should be restored and maintained, have resolved to conclude a Convention and to that end have named as their respective plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America: Mr. Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of State of the United States of America; and

His Majesty, for the Dominion of Canada: The Honorable Vincent Massey, a member of His Majesty's Privy Council for Canada and His Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary for Canada at Washington;

Who, after having communicated to each other their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:

ARTICLE I

The provisions of this Convention and the orders and regulations issued under the authority thereof shall apply, in the manner and to the extent hereinafter provided in this Convention, to the following waters:

1. The territorial waters and the high seas westward from the western coast of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada and from a direct line drawn from Bonilla Point, Vancouver Island, to the lighthouse on Tatoosh Island, Washington,—which line marks the entrance to Juan de Fuca Strait,—and embraced between 48 and 49 degrees north latitude, excepting therefrom, however, all the waters of Barklay Sound, eastward of a straight line drawn from Amphitrite Point to Cape Beale and all the waters of Nitinat Lake and the entrance thereto.

2. The waters included within the following boundaries:

Beginning at Bonilla Point, Vancouver Island, thence along the aforesaid direct line drawn from Bonilla Point to Tatoosh Lighthouse, Washington, described in paragraph numbered 1 of this article, then to the nearest point of Cape Flattery, thence following the southerly shore of Juan de Fuca Strait to Point Wilson, on Quimper Peninsula, thence in a straight line to Point Partridge on Whidbey Island, thence following the western shore of the said Whidbey Island, to the entrance to Deception Pass, thence across said entrance to the southern side of Reservation Bay, on Fidalgo Island, thence following the western and northern shore line of the said Fidalgo Island to Swinomish Slough, crossing the said Swinomish Slough, in line with the track of the Great Northern Railway, thence northerly following the shore line of the mainland to Atkinson Point at the northerly entrance to Burrard Inlet, British Columbia, thence in a straight line to the southern end of Bowen Island, thence westerly following the southern shore of Bowen Island to Cape Roger Curtis, thence in a straight line to Gower Point, thence westerly following the shore line to Welcome Point on Seechelt Peninsula, thence in a straight line to Point Young on Lasqueti Island, thence in a straight line to Dorcas Point on Vancouver Island, thence following the eastern and southern shores of the said Vancouver Island to the starting point at Bonilla Point, as shown on the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey Chart Number 6300, as corrected to March 14, 1930, and on the British Admiralty Chart Number 579, copies of which are annexed to this Convention and made a part thereof.

3. The Fraser River and the streams and lakes tributary thereto.

The High Contracting Parties engage to have prepared as soon as practicable charts of the waters described in this Article, with the above described boundaries thereof and the international boundary indicated thereon. Such charts, when approved by the appropriate authorities of the Governments of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada, shall be considered to have been substituted for the charts annexed to this Convention and shall be authentic for the purposes of the Convention.

The High Contracting Parties further agree to establish within the territory of the United States of America and the territory of the Dominion of Canada such buoys and marks for the purposes of this Convention as may be recommended by the Commission hereinafter authorized to be established, and to refer such recommendations as the Commission may make as relate to the establishment of buoys or marks at points on the international boundary to the International Boundary Commission, United States, Alaska, and Canada, for action pursuant to the provisions of the Treaty between the United States of America and His Majesty, in respect of Canada, respecting the boundary between the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada, signed February 24, 1925.

ARTICLE II

The High Contracting Parties agree to establish and maintain a Commission to be known as the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission, hereinafter called the Commission, consisting of six members, three on the part of the United States of America and three on the part of the Dominion of Canada.

The Commissioners on the part of the United States of America shall be appointed by the President of the United States of America. The Commissioners on the part of the Dominion of Canada shall be appointed by His Majesty on the recommendation of the Governor General in Council.

The Commissioners appointed by each of the High Contracting Parties shall hold office during the pleasure of the High Contracting Party by which they were appointed.

The Commission shall continue in existence so long as this Convention shall continue in force, and each High Contracting Party shall have power to fill and shall fill from time to time vacancies which may occur in its representation on the Commission in the same manner as the original appointments are made. Each High Contracting Party shall pay the salaries and expenses of its own Commissioners, and joint expenses incurred by the Commission shall be paid by the two High Contracting Parties in equal moieties.

ARTICLE III

The Commission shall make a thorough investigation into the natural history of the Fraser River sockeye salmon, into hatchery methods, spawning ground conditions and other related matters. It shall conduct the sockeye salmon fish cultural operations in the waters described in paragraphs numbered 2 and 3 of Article I of this Convention, and to that end it shall have power to improve spawning grounds, construct, and maintain hatcheries, rearing ponds and other such facilities as it may determine to be necessary for the propagation of sockeye salmon in any of the waters covered by this Convention, and to stock any such waters with sockeye salmon by such methods as it may determine to be most advisable. The Commission shall also have authority to recommend to the Governments of the High Contracting Parties removing or otherwise overcoming obstructions to the ascent of sockeye salmon, that may now exist or may from time to time occur, in any of the waters covered by this Convention, where investigation may show such removal of or other action to overcome obstructions to be desirable. The Commission shall make an annual report to the two Governments as to the investigations which it has made and other action which it has taken in execution of the provisions of this Article, or of other Articles of this Convention.

The cost of all work done pursuant to the provisions of this Article, or of other Articles of this Convention, including removing or otherwise overcoming obstructions that may be approved, shall be borne equally by the two Governments, and the said Governments agree to appropriate annually such money as each may deem desirable for such work in the light of the reports of the Commission.

ARTICLE IV

The Commission is hereby empowered to limit or prohibit taking sockeye salmon in respect of all or any of the waters described in Article I of this Convention, provided that when any order is adopted by the Commission limiting or prohibiting taking sockeye salmon in any of the territorial waters or on the High Seas described in paragraph numbered 1 of Article I, such order shall extend to all such territorial waters and High Seas, and, similarly, when in any of the waters of the United States of America embraced in paragraph numbered 2 of Article I, such order shall extend to all such waters of the United States of America, and when in any of the Canadian waters embraced in paragraphs numbered 2 and 3 of Article I, such order shall extend to all such Canadian waters, and provided further, that no order limiting or prohibiting taking sockeye salmon adopted by the Commission shall be construed to suspend or otherwise affect the requirements of the laws of the State of Washington or of the Dominion of Canada as to the procuring of a license to fish in the waters on their respective sides of the boundary, or in their respective territorial waters embraced in paragraph numbered 1 of Article I of this Convention, and provided further that any order adopted by the Commission limiting or prohibiting taking sockeye salmon on the High Seas embraced in paragraph numbered 1 of Article I of this Convention shall apply only to nationals and inhabitants and vessels and boats of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada.

Any order adopted by the Commission limiting or prohibiting taking sockeye salmon in the waters covered by this Convention, or any part thereof, shall remain in full force and effect unless and until the same be modified or set aside by the Commission. Taking sockeye salmon in said waters in violation of an order of the Commission shall be prohibited.

ARTICLE V

In order to secure a proper escapement of sockeye salmon during the spring or chinook salmon fishing season, the Commission may prescribe the size of the meshes in all fishing gear and appliances that may be operated during said season in the waters of the United States of America and/or the Canadian waters described in Article I of this Convention. At all seasons of the year the Commission may prescribe the size of the meshes in all salmon fishing gear and appliances that may be operated on the High Seas embraced in paragraph numbered 1 of Article I of this Convention, provided, however, that in so far as concerns the High Seas, requirements prescribed by the Commission under the authority of this paragraph shall apply only to nationals and inhabitants and vessels and boats of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada.

Whenever, at any other time than the spring or chinook salmon fishing season, the taking of sockeye salmon in waters of the United States of America or in Canadian waters is not prohibited under an order adopted by the Commission, any fishing gear or appliance authorized by the State of Washington may be used in waters of the United States of America by any person thereunto authorized by the State of Washington, and any fishing gear or appliance authorized by the laws of the Dominion of Canada may be used in Canadian waters by any person thereunto duly authorized. Whenever the taking of sockeye salmon on the High Seas embraced in paragraph numbered 1 of Article I of this Convention is not prohibited, under an order adopted by the Commission, to the nationals or inhabitants or vessels or boats of the United States of America or the Dominion of Canada, only such salmon fishing gear and appliances as may have been approved by the Commission may be used on such High Seas by said nationals, inhabitants, vessels or boats.

ARTICLE VI

No action taken by the Commission under the authority of this Convention shall be effective unless it is affirmatively voted for by at least two of the Commissioners of each High Contracting Party.

ARTICLE VII

Inasmuch as the purpose of this Convention is to establish for the High Contracting Parties, by their joint effort and expense, a fishery that is now largely nonexistent, it is agreed by the High Contracting Parties that they should share equally in the fishery. The Commission shall, consequently, regulate the fishery with a view to allowing, as nearly as may be practicable, an equal portion of the fish that may be caught each year to be taken by the fishermen of each High Contracting Party.

ARTICLE VIII

Each High Contracting Party shall be responsible for the enforcement of the orders and regulations adopted by the Commission under the authority of this convention, in the portion of its waters covered by the Convention.

Except as hereinafter provided in Article IX of this Convention, each High Contracting Party shall be responsible, in respect of its own nationals and inhabitants and vessels and boats, for the enforcement of the orders and regulations adopted by the Commission, under the authority of this Convention, on the High Seas embraced in paragraph numbered 1 of Article I of the Convention.

Each High Contracting Party shall acquire and place at the disposition of the Commission any land within its territory required for the construction and maintenance of hatcheries, rearing ponds, and other such facilities as set forth in Article III.

ARTICLE IX

Every national or inhabitant, vessel or boat of the United States of America or of the Dominion of Canada, that engages in sockeye salmon fishing on the High Seas embraced in paragraph numbered 1 of Article I of this Convention, in violation of an order or regulation adopted by the Commission, under the authority of this Convention, may be seized and detained by the duly authorized officers of either High Contracting Party, and when so seized and detained shall be delivered by the said officers, as soon as practicable, to an authorized official of the country to which such person, vessel or boat belongs, at the nearest point to the place of seizure, or elsewhere, as may be agreed upon with the competent authorities. The authorities of the country to which a person, vessel or boat belongs alone shall have jurisdiction to conduct prosecutions for the violation of any order or regulation, adopted by the Commission in respect of fishing for sockeye salmon on the High Seas embraced in paragraph numbered 1 of Article I of this Convention, or of any law or regulation which either High Contracting Party may have made to carry such order or regulation of the Commission into effect, and to impose penalties for such violations; and the witnesses and proofs necessary for such prosecutions, so far as such witnesses or proofs are under the control of the other High Contracting Party, shall be furnished with all reasonable promptitude to the authorities having jurisdiction to conduct the prosecutions.

ARTICLE X

The High Contracting Parties agree to enact and enforce such legislation as may be necessary to make effective the provisions of this Convention and the orders and regulations adopted by the Commission under the authority thereof, with appropriate penalties for violations.

ARTICLE XI

The present Convention shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by His Majesty in accordance with constitutional practice, and it shall become effective upon the date of the exchange of ratifications which shall take place at Washington as soon as possible and shall continue in force for a period of sixteen years, and thereafter until one year from the day on which either of the High Contracting Parties shall give notice to the other of its desire to terminate it.

In witness whereof, the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention, and have affixed their seals thereto.

Done in duplicate at Washington on the twenty-sixth day of May, one thousand nine hundred and thirty.

[SEAL] HENRY L. STIMSON
[SEAL] VINCENT MASSEY

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Washington to explain the treaty.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, in this connection I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a number of resolutions adopted by different organizations of the Pacific Northwest in reference to the treaty; and I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD certain statistics with reference to the sockeye-salmon business of the State of Washington and the Province of British Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

B. C. Trollers' Association: Joe Pepper.

Fishing Vessels Owners' Association: C. M. L. Planta, M. L. A.

Washington State Sportsmen's Council: Don Johnson and Harry LeGear.

Fishermen's Packing Corporation and independent canners: Lee Makovich.

Ratification of the pending 1930 sockeye salmon treaty was agreed upon unanimously, provided that it can be determined to the satisfaction of both delegations that the following reservations or amendments can be made to the 1930 treaty, making them a part of such treaty before it becomes effective:

1. That the Commission shall have no power to authorize any type of fishing gear contrary to the laws of the State of Washington or the Dominion of Canada.

2. That the Commission shall not promulgate or enforce regulations pending the scientific investigations, which shall be for a period of two cycles of sockeye salmon runs, or 8 years.

3. That the Commission shall set up an advisory committee composed of five from each country, who shall be representatives of the various branches of the industry (purse seine, gill net, troll, sport fishing, and one other). The advisory committee shall be invited to all meetings of the Commission and shall be given full opportunity to examine any amendments and recommendations before being recommended for approval by the United States Senate and the Dominion Parliament, and/or the respective fisheries departments of the two countries.

In the event that these points cannot be made a part of the 1930 treaty, then the delegates agreed that they would move for a new treaty.

The above procedure "approved with the request that the 1930 treaty be ratified at this session of Congress with the reservations enumerated."

Senator LEWIS SCHWELLENBACH,
Washington, D. C.:

I am pleased to advise fishing interests of Washington responding to unselfish and conciliatory leadership have reached agreement favoring ratification 1930 treaty with following reservations which seemingly are acceptable to British Columbia:

1. That Commission shall have no power to authorize any type of fishing gear contrary to laws of Washington or Canada.

2. That Commission shall not promulgate or enforce regulations pending scientific investigations which shall be for period of two cycles of sockeye salmon runs or 8 years.

3. That Commission shall set up advisory committee of five from each country who shall be representatives of various branches of industry (purse seine, gill net, troll, sport fishing, and one other). The advisory committee shall be invited to all meetings of Commission and shall be given full opportunity to examine any amendments and recommendations before being recommended for approval by United States Senate and Dominion Parliament and/or respective fisheries departments of the two countries. If these three points cannot be included in 1930 treaty various interests agreed 1930 treaty not acceptable and will move for new treaty. If reservations are acceptable, commercial and sports fishermen, State planning council, and State administration will appreciate your immediate move and influence for prompt ratification to begin rehabilitation of sockeye salmon soon as possible. Your interest for welfare this basic industry greatly appreciated by Governor, fishing interests, and cooperative bodies.

CLARENCE D. MARTIN,
Governor of Washington.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF FISHERIES,
Washington, May 16, 1936.

Subject: International salmon treaty.

Hon. LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Mr. Ken McLeod, secretary of the Salmon Conservation League, Seattle, Wash., advises me that he has written you regarding an agreement that has been reached among American and Canadian fishing organizations and the Washington State Planning Council for the approval of the pending sockeye salmon treaty with certain reservations.

These reservations do not materially alter the effect of the treaty or limit its usefulness, with the possible exception of the second reservation, which provides that the Commission shall not promulgate or enforce regulations for an 8-year period pending the conduct of scientific investigations. During the 8-year period the Commission can recommend legislation for the control of any abuses that may endanger the resource in territorial waters; and if it is clearly apparent as a result of the study of the Commission that the fishery in the extraterritorial waters is dangerously encroaching upon the supply, doubtless a new agreement can be reached among those vitally affected to correct that condition. In any case, the treaty will represent the beginning of constructive work in the interests of the fishery, even with this doubtful reservation; and since for the first time all the important interests are in agreement, I believe that the treaty should be ratified without delay.

As you know, the Bureau has always been favorable to the conclusion of a treaty that will provide protection for the dwindling run of sockeyes in the Fraser River and, indeed, may be instrumental in restoring it to its former productivity, and hence I respectfully urge you to use your good offices in securing its ratification with binding diplomatic understandings regarding the three reservations outlined by Mr. McLeod and approved by the Washington State Planning Council.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. BELL, Commissioner.

PACIFIC NORTHWEST REGIONAL PLANNING COMMISSION,
Portland, Oreg., May 18, 1936.

Hon. LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SCHWELLENBACH: The Pacific Northwest Regional Planning Commission has taken a position that ratification of an international treaty with Canada is necessary to prevent the extinction of the sockeye-salmon industry.

We have previously advised you of the studies that support this conclusion and of the necessity for decisive action under date of June 5, 1935. There have recently been discussions between the directly interested agencies of British Columbia and the Washington State Planning Council, and in consequence an agreement has been reached for the ratification of the treaty, provided there be incorporated in the proposal for administration by an international commission the following:

1. That the Commission shall have no power to authorize any type of fishing gear contrary to the laws of the State of Washington or the Dominion of Canada.

2. That the Commission shall not promulgate or enforce regulations pending the scientific investigations, which shall be for a period of two cycles of sockeye-salmon runs, or 8 years.

3. That the Commission shall set up an advisory committee composed of five from each country, who shall be representatives of the various branches of the industry (purse seine, gill net, troll, sport fishing, and one other). The advisory committee shall be invited to all meetings of the Commission and shall be given full opportunity to examine any amendments and recommendations before being recommended for approval by the United States Senate and the Dominion Parliament, and/or the respective fisheries departments of the two countries.

This is an agreement reached after 6 years of effort, and that such an agreement could be reached may well constitute great encouragement that the treaty itself can be approved and ratified.

May I add that the sockeye-salmon treaty represents, really, the conservation of a national food resource? Since this resource has a national market and demand, the depletion of the sockeye-salmon runs is, accordingly, detrimental to national interest. To be able to ratify the treaty at the present session of Congress would have importance in preserving the resource from erasure since time is of the essence.

Very truly yours,

MARSHALL N. DANA,
Chairman, Pacific Northwest Regional Planning Commission.

MAY 14, 1936.

Hon. CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.:

Referring my telegram 6th to President, also copy of my letter November 29 to B. H. Kizer, sent you regard salmon treaty with Canada. Our organizations now in favor of immediate ratification this session, provided three reservations contained in Salmon Conservation League letter May 11 to you can first be made part of 1930 treaty through diplomatic agreement with Canada.

DON JOHNSON,
President, Washington State Sportsmen's Council.

EXCERPT FROM MINUTES OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE SPOKANE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1935

Mr. Hutcheck reported that correspondence had been received by the chamber of commerce which had been referred to the national legislation committee, involving the proposed international salmon treaty.

The report of the committee was submitted, as follows:

"The matter of the proposed international salmon treaty involves a treaty which information before the committee indicated has been approved by the Canadian Parliament some 3 years ago, but is still awaiting action in the United States Senate.

"Information furnished indicates that the sockeye salmon is becoming rapidly extinct in Puget Sound waters, and that the principal remaining spawning ground of this specie is the Fraser River in Canada, but owing to the lack of restriction upon the commercial catch and pack, the sockeye salmon pack has diminished from 2,401,000 cases in 1913 to only 273,000 cases in 1933.

"It appears that Canada has at several times ratified previous treaties, but objection has been made by one or another group in this country, and the others have not been previously ratified. This treaty has been ratified again by Canada and is now awaiting action by the United States Senate.

"Briefly, the present treaty provides for a Commission of six, three to be appointed by the President and three by the Canadian Governor General. Of the three United States commissioners, two are to be citizens of the State of Washington. The treaty vests in the Commission jurisdiction of commercial fishing in Puget Sound and the Straits of Juan de Fuca, as well as the entire waters of the Fraser River in Canada.

"It appeared from the report furnished the committee that several independent commercial fishermen are for such a treaty. One seine fishermen's association favors further research, and the other seine fishermen's association is against. The majority of salmon packers appear to be in favor.

"Your committee had no time to study the situation, and felt it had not sufficient knowledge to pass upon the details of the treaty, but was constrained to recommend that the principle of protection of the salmon and regulation of the catch was sound.

"The committee also felt that the salmon industry was of sufficient importance to the entire State of Washington that this chamber go on record as being in favor of the proper regulation, which can be only through an international treaty."

Motion that the report of the committee be approved, seconded, and carried.

Attest:

J. A. FORD, Managing Secretary.

BELLINGHAM CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Bellingham, Wash., November 29, 1935.

Mr. R. K. TIFFANY,
Executive Officer, Washington State Planning Council, 107 Old Capital Building, Olympia, Wash.

DEAR MR. TIFFANY: We acknowledge receipt of your mimeographed letter of November 2 in which you presented some facts in relation to the salmon fishery in Washington and the proposed treaty between the United States and Canada and asked for our expression of opinion as to what should be done to prevent the extermination of the sockeye salmon and the destruction of a major industry of this State.

This matter has been taken up and discussed with men engaged in the fishing business here, and the census of opinion is that the sockeye-salmon treaty as proposed in 1930 should be adopted without change, as at the time that the treaty was written up it was gone into very thoroughly by the fishing interests and was ironed out to a very satisfactory document, and was endorsed by the fishing interests here at that time. Likewise this organization endorsed it and we are still anxious to do anything to have the treaty consummated.

As you know, Bellingham is the largest salmon center in the world, having three large canneries here, one of which is the largest in the world and owned by a company that has 15 or more canneries in Alaska. With us this is a big industry and means much to the community, and naturally we have this matter of preservation of salmon much at heart, and if there is any way we can assist the State planning council in furthering this movement we assure you we are more than willing to do all that we can.

Yours very truly,

BELLINGHAM CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
A. B. CULMER, Secretary.

Whereas we believe that the pending treaty between the United States of America and Canada, for the protection, preservation, and extension of sockeye salmon fisheries industries of the Fraser River system, filed at Washington, D. C., May 26, 1930, if adopted, will conserve, preserve, and protect the sockeye salmon fisheries; and that the same is for the best interests of the people of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved:

I

That the Chamber of Commerce of Port Townsend, Wash., duly assembled, does hereby indorse said treaty, and does recommend the ratification of the same by the Senate of the United States.

II

That the secretary of this organization be, and he hereby is, directed to mail a copy of this resolution to Miller Freeman, Esq., Chairman of Fisheries Division, State Planning Council, Seattle, Wash.; a copy to Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States, at Washington, D. C.; a copy to each of the United States Senators from the State of Washington; and a copy to all other interested parties.

STATE OF WASHINGTON,
County of Jefferson, ss.:

The undersigned, Clark Aldrich, president, and James McCurdy, secretary, of Port Townsend Chamber of Commerce, each duly elected, qualified, and acting, do hereby certify that the within, annexed, and foregoing resolution was duly passed and adopted by the Port Townsend Chamber of Commerce at a regular meeting thereof held in the city of Port Townsend, county of Jefferson, and State of Washington, on the 18th day of November, 1935.

In testimony whereof they have hereunto subscribed their names as president and secretary, respectively, this the 13th day of November 1935.

CLARK ALDRICH,
President.

Resolution adopted by the Western Society of Naturalists at a meeting held at Stanford University, California, December 28, 1935

Whereas it is clear that the important sockeye-salmon runs of the Fraser River are seriously depleted; and

Whereas by proper protection and culture it is reasonably certain that these runs can be restored to their former magnitude; and

Whereas the pending treaty between the United States and Canada will provide adequately for such restoration and has been approved in principle by the Governor of Washington, the United States Commissioner of Fisheries, and the fisheries division of the Washington State Planning Council: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Western Society of Naturalists urge the Senators of the Western States to use every reasonable effort to secure the ratification of this treaty. The secretary of the society is hereby directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to each of the Senators of the States of Washington, Oregon, and California, to the Governor of Washington, to the United States Commissioner of Fisheries, to the editors of Science, Forest, and Stream, National Waltonian, Pacific Fisherman, and to the secretary of the American Fisheries Society.

INTERNATIONAL LIONS CLUB,
Gig Harbor, Wash., December 28, 1935.

Hon. LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SCHWELLENBACH: The Lions Club of Gig Harbor has directed me to voice its protest against the international sockeye treaty; two paragraphs of the protest of the Salmon Purse Seiners Union are quoted below:

Therefore be it resolved, That the Salmon Purse Seiners Union of the Pacific, regularly met in convention, condemned the international sockeye treaty as being detrimental to the interests of the workers in the industry and of the general public and demand that the Senate of the United States refuse its ratification; and be it further

Resolved, That the Salmon Purse Seiners Union urge the newly elected liberal Government of Canada, with the Government of the United States, to take immediate steps toward drafting a new treaty properly designed to conserve effectively the Fraser River sockeye salmon.

The Lions Club is in sympathy with the sentiment expressed in the above paragraphs and respectfully urges your support in behalf of the purse seiners.

Very sincerely yours,

LEO PARADIS, Secretary.

MONTESANO, WASH., December 28, 1935.

Hon. LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH,
Senator from Washington, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SCHWELLENBACH: At its meeting December 17 the Grays Harbor County Planning Commission unanimously adopted the enclosed report of its fisheries committee, which had been studying the sockeye treaty for several weeks.

The commission is very much in favor of the treaty, believing that only by a proper international agreement and regulation can the sockeye runs be retained as a commercial resource for this region.

We understand that you are in favor of ratification of the treaty and trust nothing will occur to prevent such ratification.

Wishing you a happy new year, we remain,

Yours very truly,

GRAYS HARBOR COUNTY PLANNING COMMISSION,
By A. WENDELL BRACKETT, Secretary.

EAST STANWOOD, WASH., January 8, 1936.

Hon. L. B. SCHWELLENBACH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SCHWELLENBACH: It has been called to the attention of our organization by the Washington State Planning Council that a treaty with regard to the sockeye salmon industry has been concluded between Canada and the United States. All that remains to be done is ratification by the United States Senate, the treaty having been ratified by the Canadian Parliament.

We are told that with the approval of yourself and Senator BONE the Senate will ratify this treaty without further investigation. We feel that this industry, which is worth some $33,000,000, should be protected by a treaty of this nature. It would seem to be clearly to the advantage of the State of Washington to enter into such a treaty for the reason that the spawning waters are all within the Dominion of Canada.

I trust that you will feel free to give this treaty your every effort of support, and for your anticipated cooperation we thank you.

Most sincerely yours,

EAST STANWOOD COMMERCIAL CLUB,
By HOWARD C. GRAHAM, Secretary.

Whereas the people of the State of Washington reposed control and direction of the salmon industry (the third largest industry in the State) by a majority of 122,000 at the last general election: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, By Pierce County Pomona Grange No. 16 that we earnestly urge Senator BONE and Senator SCHWELLENBACH not to permit the resurrection of the 1930 sockeye treaty as it would undo the mandate expressed by the people of this State; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Senator BONE and Senator SCHWELLENBACH and a copy to Washington State Grange.

EAST SIDE SPORTMEN'S CLUB,
Bellevue, Wash., May 12, 1936.

Hon. LOUIS SCHWELLENBACH,
Senator, State of Washington, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SCHWELLENBACH: Enclosed please find report of action of Bellingham meeting, May 10, 1936, regarding the sockeye-salmon treaty.

You will notice that the interested parties agreed to the recommendations of the previous report which I sent to you.

Considerable interest has been taken by all organizations over the State in this matter. Enclosed are some newspaper clippings showing the headlines given to this subject. Since some 200 organizations belonging to the Sportmen's Association and all the fishing interests are interested in this matter, we hope you will be successful in having this treaty ratified in this session of Congress. It will mean a great deal to the two Senators of this State personally if you can put it over when so many failures have occurred in the past 44 years.

Everyone concerned wants you to know that we are behind you in this matter.

Sincerely,

JOSHUA H. VOGEL,
East Side Sportmen's Club.

Be it resolved by the Okanogan Commercial Club, That—

Whereas it appears that the sockeye-salmon industry is in danger of destruction unless regulated and controlled by an international commission as provided by a proposed treaty between the United States and Canada, which treaty has been ratified by Canada and is now pending before the United States Senate; and

Whereas the Washington State Planning Council, after careful consideration, has recommended the ratification of said treaty: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we favor the ratification of the pending treaty and request our Senators to support and vote for the approval of it, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to each of our Senators and one to the State planning council.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a resolution unanimously adopted by the Okanogan Commercial Club at a regular meeting held on the 25th day of November 1935.

Dated this 25th day of November 1935.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 16, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed be the name of our Heavenly Father, whose goodness and mercy never faileth. We beseech Thee to be everywhere as an abiding power and influence, shaping the destinies of men and nations. We wait upon Thee, O Lord, that our minds and hearts may be in harmony with Thy holy will. Give us a large outlook upon life; may the needs of a better world inspire us to noble and unselfish service. With patience and fortitude may we fulfill the obligations which the citizens of our land have placed upon us. Out of Thy abundance, do Thou bestow blessings of happiness and good health upon all. Be Thou the lamp unto our pathways when our skies are overcast and the way is confused. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

LAYING OF THE CORNERSTONE, BRONX (N. Y.) POST OFFICE BUILDING

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address made by the Postmaster General, Hon. James A. Farley, at the laying of a cornerstone in the Bronx, N. Y., on June 13, 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, is that James A. Farley? Is he the man who is running Roosevelt for President?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Postmaster General James A. Farley at the laying of the cornerstone of the Bronx (N. Y.) Post Office Building at 12 o'clock noon, Saturday, June 13, 1936:

This is a historic day in the postal, social, and business life of the great Borough of the Bronx and it is a particularly happy day for me. I feel deeply honored in being permitted to join old friends in laying the cornerstone, which is the beginning of a magnificent post-office building—a building which will be a monument to the business enterprise of the citizens of this borough.

I understand that all of my predecessors for the past 35 years studied the problem as to whether a central post office should be located in the Bronx. When I became Postmaster General I learned that property had been acquired as early as 1910 upon which to erect an adequate post-office building, and that in 1914 additional land was purchased.

For more than 20 years the need for a central post office in the Bronx has been realized and I do not know why one has not long ago been provided. I have found no reason why the Bronx should not have as adequate postal facilities as any other city. Post-office records show that as early as the year 1900 there was correspondence and discussions about such a building as the one for which we are laying the cornerstone today, but the plans for the present building necessarily are on a much larger scale than were those contemplated 36 years ago, when the population of the borough was but 200,000.

I feel that I know the postal needs of the city of New York. This city provides one-tenth of the entire postal revenues of the United States. It is the greatest national and international business center in the world. Annually there are mailed here for dispatch to the several States of the Union and all parts of the world approximately 1,000,000,000 letters, 600,000,000 pieces of advertising mail, and 50,000,000 parcel-post packages.

The population of this borough is now estimated at more than 1,500,000, with a social, commercial, financial, and educational life requiring the very highest type of mail service. This immense population brings this borough into the group of the five greatest cities of the United States.

This splendid edifice will provide a central delivery point for mail in the entire Bronx area and for the delivery district in Manhattan north of One Hundred and Thirtieth Street. It will also be used as a distribution point for outgoing letter mail collected after delivery hours. The building will be 280 by 196 feet, with basement and three stories. The exterior walls will be of faced brick, with granite base to first-floor line and glazed or enamel-faced brick above and trimmed in limestone. There will be approximately 57,700 square feet available for post-office work space. The first floor and part of the second floor will be devoted to post-office activities, and the balance of the space will be assigned to other Government agencies and devoted to storage and miscellaneous uses. The basement space will contain a garage for our motor vehicles, and in every way the building will be a credit and an ornament to your community. It is to be constructed within 400 calendar days from September 19, 1935, which was the date of the notice to proceed with construction.

It is pleasing to me that the present administration so early and so clearly saw the necessity for such a post-office building as we are erecting. I am confident that the allotment made by the Secretary of the Treasury and myself for this building will be wisely expended and will result in many advantages to the community and the Postal Service.

The contract for the construction was awarded to the Caldwell, Wingate Co. of New York, for a building to cost $1,320,273.

At this time I would like to commend the business interests of the Borough of the Bronx who have labored so earnestly in securing what I know will be a magnificent and serviceable post-office building. When it is dedicated within a few short months a well-deserved tribute can be paid to the architects of the Treasury Department, to the contractors, and to the artisans whose skill and good work will be manifested in the building, at once imposing in appearance and designed to afford the best possible postal service. It will be so arranged that those who work within its walls will do so under the most pleasant and healthful conditions.

Realizing that efficiency is promoted by pleasant and healthful surroundings, the Post Office Department is constantly endeavoring to improve the working conditions of the men and women in the Postal Service. There are more than 250,000 of these employees, and they are, as a rule, the best type of American citizen. They are industrious, conscientious, capable, and loyal, and they take a special pride in the Service. I have visited with them in post offices, in railway terminals, and mail cars in many parts of the country and have been greatly impressed by the fine spirit in which they perform their tasks. The morale of those in the Service is really remarkable and is the source of great pride.

Recently I was privileged to speak at the dedication of the New York City Post Office Annex and I pointed out that Federal buildings to house 16 postal stations in New York City and 4 in Brooklyn were then under construction or were about to be placed under construction. These 20 postal stations, together with the New York Post Office Annex and the Bronx Post Office, make up a Federal building program which is designed to provide modern structures with ample space for present and future needs at points where it has been determined that postal accommodations of a permanent nature are required.

During the past 3 years many improvements have been made in the Postal Service. Under the act of June 19, 1934, Congress appropriated $65,000,000 for public-building construction, and on August 12, 1935, an additional sum of $60,000,000 was provided for this purpose.

Under these authorizations 713 projects will be consummated. Of this number, 89 have already been completed and more than 250 additional are under contract.

These new buildings are being erected in every State of the Union as well as in the Territorial and island possessions.

Legislation now pending in Congress contemplates an additional $60,000,000 for public buildings, which will permit construction in approximately 350 additional towns and cities.

The Railway Mail Service has been very largely reorganized during the past 3 years and much excess railway mail-car space has been eliminated.

The domestic air-mail system has been entirely reconstructed so that we have 15 percent more service than we had 2 years ago, and we are obtaining the greatly expanded service for $12,000,000 a year as against approximately $20,000,000 in 1932.

The foreign air-mail system, which connects the United States with the various countries of South and Central America, Cuba, Mexico, and Canada, is now operated with better planes and faster schedules and at a saving of about $1,000,000 a year.

Last October we inaugurated a trans-Pacific air-mail service and we expect that by next summer a trans-Atlantic service will be in operation.

In addition to these air-mail services we have established a route connecting the islands of the Hawaiian group and we are operating services in Alaska.

The Rural Free Delivery Service has been greatly improved and its cost to the Government has been reduced to the extent of several million dollars a year.

The ocean-mail service has likewise been improved and savings have been effected in this service which amount to more than $2,000,000 a year.

The system of accounting has been brought up to date so that the Department has current information as to its receipts and expenditures, whereas formerly it was at least 4 months after a given period when such information was available.

Last October a 40-hour working week for postal employees was put into effect.

These are some of the improvements which have been made under the present administration.

Postal receipts for the last fiscal year were approximately $44,000,000 more than for the preceding fiscal year. The Department's deficit for ordinary postal operations of $150,000,000 during the fiscal year 1932 was last year turned into a surplus of $4,000,000. Postal receipts show a steady and consistent increase, which is real evidence of constantly improving business conditions throughout the country.

The Post Office Department performs many services which are entirely apart from postal activities. It administers the merchant marine and aviation subsidies; it conducts a great postal savings system; it sells Government bonds for the Treasury Department; and it sells revenue stamps and migratory bird stamps. During the heavy snowstorms of the winter rural carriers feed the birds in outlying sections, and at one time the Department took a Nation-wide census for the Department of Agriculture. Through its inspectors it assists local, State, and Federal law-enforcement agencies in apprehending criminals.

Beginning Monday, the Department, through the post offices, will handle the payment of veterans' bonus bonds. This is one of the most important duties outside of its regular activities which has ever been placed upon the Department. Every effort is being made to the end that these bonds may be gotten into the hands of the veterans with as little delay and inconvenience to them as possible. The Department is ever ready and eager to serve the public.

As I think of this and other hundreds of new post-office buildings which the Government is erecting in all parts of the country for the benefit of the people and the improvement of the postal service, I wonder if those critics of the Roosevelt administration who find fault with everything it does and everything it tries to do will condemn this building program. So far they have not done so and, in fact, most of their criticisms are of a very general nature. They rarely, if ever, present a bill of particulars.

When I read the howls and moans of the so-called Liberty League, the spokesmen for the special interests, and the Old Guard Republican leaders about how the Roosevelt administration is "destroying American institutions", "wrecking the American system", and "establishing a despotic dictatorship", I naturally look around to see upon what these howls and moans are all about, and, to save my life, I cannot discover any basis whatsoever.

What do they mean by "destroying American institutions"? What do they mean by "wrecking the American system"? What do they mean by the "setting up of a dictatorship"? I am forced to conclude that these are the general terms with which they hope to create a bugaboo to frighten the American voters.

Have they condemned the saving of the banks by the Roosevelt administration?

Have they objected to the life line which the Roosevelt administration has thrown out to railroads, to insurance companies, and to many important industrial interests?

Would they repeal the law passed by this administration which insures the bank deposits of the people?

Are they willing to assert that the administration should not have protected and saved the homes and farms of hundreds of thousands of American citizens who were on the verge of being thrown out because they were unable to meet mortgages?

Will they go on record as declaring that the administration was wrong in its efforts to put the farmers of the country back on a self-sustaining basis?

Would they stop relief for destitute citizens and permit these unfortunates to starve?

Would they repeal the law which protects investors against worthless securities?

Would they repeal the law which eliminates the abuses that have characterized many of the great public utility holding companies?

Do they object to the action of the administration in providing the C. C. C. camps, which took hundreds of thousands of young men off the streets and highways and put them into useful work?

Do they condemn the efforts of the administration to bring about better working conditions, hours, and wages for labor?

Do they advocate the repeal of the social security law?

Are they opposed to the efforts of the administration to break down trade barriers between the United States and foreign countries so that American agricultural and industrial products can find a market in other countries?

Let them answer these questions specifically and unequivocally. Whether they do or do not make open and frank answers to these questions, the people of this country can determine for themselves if the enlightened and progressive policies of the Roosevelt administration are "destroying American institutions", "wrecking the American system", and "setting up a dictatorship."

Many of these critics seem to regard special privileges and indifference to the welfare of the people generally as the American system. If this is the case, the quicker we substitute a real American system the better.

It has been a great pleasure for me to be with you today. I hope to be with you again when this building is opened for business so that I may rejoice with you in the fulfillment of a hope which the citizens of the Bronx have labored so long to accomplish.

P. W. A.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, today is the birthday of P. W. A. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement by Administrator Ickes on this anniversary occasion, in which he gives account of the competence of P. W. A. since its inception.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, today is the birthday of P. W. A.! Under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement of Administrator Ickes on this anniversary occasion, in which he gives a very competent accounting of the accomplishments of P. W. A. since its inception:

Tomorrow P. W. A. will be 3 years old and "going on 4."

P. W. A.'s first program, embracing both Federal and local projects, a number of them of monumental character and therefore requiring several years for completion, has been practically finished. The second program, entirely non-Federal in character, is climbing to its peak. A third program, likewise a cooperative effort between the Federal Government and local communities, is about to be undertaken in conformity with the policies and practices that were controlling in the second program.

This birthday statement is in the nature of a report to the people of what P. W. A. has done during the past 3 years, while affording me an opportunity, as Administrator, to express my appreciation to the country for its generous acceptance of that program. The widespread interest manifested in public works has been due to the fact that, through P. W. A., States, counties, and municipalities, even to the smallest of villages, have had an opportunity to share directly in the President's recovery program through their own planning and initiative and by the selection of those projects that they considered the most needed and useful.

P. W. A. has required tangible proof of community interest in the form of local cash and local votes before a project was undertaken. Always P. W. A. has insisted that localities pay out of their local resources the major part of the money needed. Formal declaration of local desires in many instances has also been mandatory with the result that over 10,000,000 votes have been cast in local elections on P. W. A. projects with more than 83 percent of such projects receiving endorsements. The public-works policy has been that projects must be good enough for the community to be served before they are good enough for P. W. A. That policy will be continued.

We of P. W. A. take genuine pride in our record. True, P. W. A. has had its ups and downs; its bright and dark days. But with it all the Public Works Administration has performed the task assigned to it and after 3 years it has, in my opinion, proved itself an effective instrument of recovery. No one asserts that P. W. A. has been responsible for all of the economic improvement that has taken place, but I do say that through the creation of direct and indirect employment made possible by the construction of useful public works and by the production and transportation of materials and supplies that are built into the projects the Public Works Administration has been a potent factor in the fight against the depression.

PURPOSES OF P. W. A.

Three years ago tomorrow morning President Roosevelt affixed his signature to the act of Congress which created the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works. The title of that act declared, among other things, that its purpose was "to provide for the construction of certain useful public works." A declaration of policy, embodied in the very first section of the act, also asserted that it was the policy of the Congress "to reduce and relieve unemployment, to improve standards of labor, and otherwise to rehabilitate industry and to conserve natural resources."

That was the mandate from the American people; that was the direct order from the President and the Congress; and that direction has been and will continue to be carried out.

USEFULNESS OF P. W. A. PROJECTS

It is agreed that the thousands of projects that have been built with the assistance of P. W. A. loans and grants are "useful public works." The great Triborough Bridge in New York City is a "useful public work", and so, too, are the schoolhouse at Lyme, Conn., and the disposal plant at Lumpkin, Ga.

As well as being "useful" in the accepted sense, P. W. A. projects must also qualify as "socially desirable." Usefulness and social desirability are important criteria for public works, but before we recommend a non-Federal project to the President for an allotment it must also undergo rigid tests as to legality, engineering feasibility, and, of equal importance, financial soundness.

The thousands of serviceable public facilities now in use and other thousands now under construction are the best evidence that this policy has been sound. No contention has been made that P. W. A. projects are not "useful." Our record for 3 years on the score of the usefulness of the work we have done would meet any such challenge.

EMPLOYMENT—DIRECT AND INDIRECT

In 36 months P. W. A. has provided approximately 5,801,000 man-years of direct and indirect employment.

Over a 3-year period this is equivalent to jobs for nearly 2,000,000 men a year, many on construction sites and more in indirect labor.

Had it not been for our program many persons who shared in this work would have been forced to apply for relief.

P. W. A. has accomplished much more in providing employment than is commonly supposed. Tables of figures of the number of men working on P. W. A. projects frequently reflect only the number working at the site of the project. In reality, this site construction employment is a small part of the vast volume of work that has been created by P. W. A.

A factual study by the Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics recently, showed that the ratio of indirect to direct employment on completed P. W. A. municipal power plant projects is 4½ to 1. In other words, for every man employed on the site of these projects there are between four and five men employed off the site in mines, manufacturing plants, and transportation. The indirect labor on power projects is higher than on many other types.

I am neither an economist nor a statistician, but even a Chicago lawyer knows that the materials that go into schoolhouses, waterworks, sewer systems, bridges, and similar construction projects have to be produced and transported. Assuming that this ratio may be 3 to 1—estimates range all the way from 1 for 1, on upward—it can be readily seen that if P. W. A. has an average monthly site employment of 250,000 men, actually the total employment is 1,000,000.

One of our difficulties has been to get people to realize the existence of this "behind-the-lines" employment. But as the public-works program has grown in popular favor, people generally are coming to appreciate the fact that it is the so-called indirect labor that has benefited most from P. W. A. allotments.

After all, what difference does it make whether a man has a job on the site of a project or whether he is employed in a mill or a shop a thousand miles distant? That he has a job that he holds on merit, working just as if on a private construction task at prevailing wages, is what is important.

INDUSTRIAL REHABILITATION

P. W. A. allotments and other expenditures which have resulted from P. W. A. aid to local communities have had a tremendously beneficial effect in the construction trades and on business and industry generally.

Creation of work at prevailing wages, the purchase of vast quantities of steel, iron, lumber, cement, brick, and other building materials and orders for new machinery and other plant equipment not only have reopened fields of employment throughout industry but have provided a much-needed increased national purchasing power.

To date about $1,352,000,000 of the money allotted to P. W. A. have been expended for materials and supplies. The biggest part of this has gone directly to labor.

All of this, of course, has been of incalculable benefit to the capital-goods industries. Records are kept of orders for materials, making it possible to measure with some degree of accuracy the upward trend induced by this stimulation. Naturally it is more difficult to trace the beneficial influences that have been felt in consumers' goods, but we know that a very large proportion of the money that goes for wages soon finds its way to the grocer, the clothier, the shoe store, and in other channels of trade.

LOCAL CONTRIBUTIONS

The local contribution to every one of the more than 8,000 non-Federal P. W. A. projects has been considerably more than the amount granted by the Federal Government.

P. W. A. loans for local projects are regarded as local contributions, because the borrower in good faith contracts to and will repay the amount of the loan, plus interest at 4 percent. Instead of borrowing from P. W. A. the amount of its loan, a local community frequently draws upon its own cash reserves or raises money through the sale of its securities to some purchaser other than P. W. A.

In the first public-works program, where the grant was 30 percent of the cost of the labor and materials involved in the project, the local public bodies provided, either from their own resources or through the sale of bonds to P. W. A. or outside sources, $870,083,862 to supplement P. W. A. grants of $275,917,501. Thus P. W. A., through the granting of slightly over $275,000,000, enabled States, counties, municipalities, and other public bodies to construct useful public-works projects valued at $1,146,001,363.

P. W. A. also loaned approximately $200,000,000 to more than 30 railroad companies for steel rails and equipment, and to date has sold more than $180,000,000 worth of the securities it held as collateral.

In the so-called second public-works program, P. W. A. received from the $4,880,000,000 works-relief appropriation some $336,000,000 for 45-percent grants. Local communities, however, either borrowed from the P. W. A. revolving fund or supplied from their own resources funds to the extent of $468,580,679 enabling them to proceed with a construction program estimated to cost $805,246,679.

By granting $612,583,501 since June 1933 to approximately 8,000 community projects, P. W. A. has set in motion a Nation-wide construction program, the value of which is estimated at nearly $2,000,000,000. The exact figure at the close of April was $1,951,248,042.

STATUS OF P. W. A. PROGRAM

It is a mistaken idea that all of the funds appropriated in the national industrial recovery and subsequent acts have gone for public works. To June 1 of this year a little less than $3,000,000,000 has been allotted through P. W. A. for construction purposes, or about $1,000,000,000 a year during the past 3 years. About half of this total, or $1,558,051,270 was allotted for Federal projects, including large outlays for naval vessels, Army housing, rivers and harbors, Federal-aid highways, and other regular activities of the Government. P. W. A. allotments for non-Federal construction purposes have been $1,215,200,396, exclusive of railroad loans.

The estimated expenditures on P. W. A.'s Federal and non-Federal program amount to $2,292,000,000. Of nearly 17,000 projects started during the first program, 86.7 percent are completed and in use, including 14,149, or 90.8 percent of the Federal projects, and 2,786 or 70.7 percent of the non-Federal undertakings. About three-fourths of the money allotted under the first program has been expended.

More than 90 percent of the 4,031 projects under the second program are under construction. More than 100 of these new projects have been completed. With the exception of a few of the larger engineering structures all of the projects in the second program will be completed by this winter.

P. W. A. has never made forecasts. It is now ordered to continue its work and undertake a new program. It again refrains from prophecies and will make no promises as to how many new projects it will approve or when or for what amounts. As has been customary, the record will be written on the basis of performance.

The same established policies and methods of administration that have prevailed in the past 3 years will continue in the future. P. W. A. will not fail to give the country its best.

PRODUCTION OF SUGAR AND RICE

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include a letter from Secretary Hull, which has to do with reciprocity, and tables showing imports and exports of commodities and production within continental United States and abroad.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, it seems to me if you put in the tables showing the imports and exports, which will show the great amount of imports that are coming into this country, it would be a mighty fine thing for the people of the country, and they will stop these one-man reciprocity-trade agreements.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I have in mind particularly a discussion of the problems of our cane-sugar production as well as our rice production. We are the largest cane-sugar and rice-producing State in the Union. We feel that we are not receiving our just dues with the present quota of 220,000 tons when in fact the State produces 350,000 or 450,000 tons of sugarcane.

Secondly, it is the only sugar-producing State that does not receive benefit payments on its entire production. We receive those payments on less than 50 percent of our production. I feel I must protest and put into the RECORD that particular phase of the situation.

Of course, I have in mind particularly to deal with Cuba as our rice market. Cuba is our closest neighbor. Cuba has received many concessions from the States producing sugar, and it seems to me that Cuba ought to reciprocate to the extent of allowing us to recoup some of the losses made on our sugar, by entering the Cuban market with a certain quantity of our rice free of duty.

The Cuban market is our salvation. There are many reasons why Cuba should permit our United States rice to enter free of duty. For instance, as I previously stated, the State of Louisiana is the largest rice-producing State in the Union, and it is also the largest cane-sugar-producing State in the Nation. Cuba has enjoyed for years many concessions on sugar, while Louisiana has always and is now suffering and penalized in the present sugar quota of 220,000 tons allotted to us, when, in fact, the State produces 350,000 tons to 450,000 tons of sugar, and besides it is the only State producing sugar which does not receive benefit payments on its entire production.

I shall now proceed with the world picture of American rice as the industry and myself view it, and I now read a letter I received from the Honorable Cordell Hull, of the Department of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 4, 1936.

The Honorable RENÉ L. DEROUEN,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. DEROUEN: I have received your letter of March 23, 1936, with reference to the United States exports of rice to Cuba. I am glad that you have given me this opportunity to point out several facts in connection with our rice exports to Cuba, and to comment upon bilateral balancing of foreign trade and upon the Government's trade-agreements program.

Under the trade agreement with Cuba, the Cuban duty on unhulled rice from the United States was reduced from ₱1.92 to ₱1.60 per 100 kilograms, and on hulled or semihulled rice, from ₱2.22 to ₱1.85 per 100 kilograms. Furthermore, the Government of Cuba guaranteed that rice from the United States should enjoy a preferential reduction of 50 percent from the lowest duty applicable to imports of rice into Cuba from any other country.

These reductions in duty have already resulted in a substantial increase in United States exports of rice to Cuba. In the year preceding the conclusion of the trade agreement, September 1933 to August 1934, our shipments of rice to Cuba amounted to 71,400 pounds, valued at $2,493. In the year following the effective date of the Cuban agreement, September 3, 1934, our exports of rice increased to 36,307,117 pounds, valued at $980,512.

It may interest you to note that since the conclusion of the trade agreement with Cuba that country has been able to increase its purchases from us by more than 100 percent. In 1933 our exports to Cuba were valued at $25,092,862, and by 1935 they had increased to $59,847,674. While the value of our imports from Cuba increased from $58,497,548 in 1933 to $111,500,992 in 1935, the relationship of imports to total trade has remained approximately the same. Through larger shipments of lard, wheat flour, rice, and similar commodities, agriculture received a good share of this increased export trade with Cuba.

I may point out a fact which should interest the rice producers of your State. Concessions on rice have been secured in 6 of the 11 agreements which have been concluded. In addition to the Cuban concession, Belgium has bound rice on the free list, and the Netherlands, Sweden, and Switzerland have bound (guaranteed against increase) the moderate prevailing rates. Switzerland has also bound an annual quota of 20,000 metric quintals, which is large enough to take care of the normal Swiss demand for American rice. Under the Canadian agreement, a 28 percent decrease, from $1 to 72 cents per 100 pounds, was granted on cleaned rice.

You, of course, appreciate the fact that the duties, quotas, or other restrictions which a foreign government may impose upon the products of a third country are within the competence of that government. The keynote of this Government's trade-agreements program is the reciprocal reduction of arbitrary and uneconomic restrictions and discriminations against international trade. In view of our Government's policy of seeking the removal of existing discriminations against American trade and guarantees against new discriminations, and of obtaining, through reciprocal negotiations, reductions in excessive barriers to our exports, you will undoubtedly recognize the inconsistency of any endeavor to secure new discriminations and barriers to trade in the form of higher Cuban duties on rice imported from other countries.

You are doubtless familiar with the Government's policy of granting equality of trade opportunity, on the basis of the unconditional most-favored-nation principle, to all countries which do not discriminate against American commerce. To attempt a bilateral balancing of our trade with individual countries would not only be contrary to that policy but would lead to retaliation, and otherwise have severe repercussions on our domestic economy. Agriculture would suffer most severely, because normally 15 percent of its products are exported as compared with 7 or 8 percent of its output which industry exports.

Bilateral balancing of trade leads inevitably to an effort to equalize the value of exports and imports between individual countries, which, in many instances, would be extremely disadvantageous to the United States. Our foreign trade is inherently triangular. As an example I shall cite our trade with the principal and essentially industrial countries of western Europe. In 1935 our exports to the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, and the Netherlands, including large quantities of our raw materials, such as cotton, wheat, hog products, and fruits, amounted to $821,000,000. Our imports from the same countries were valued at $405,000,000, giving us an export balance with those countries of approximately $400,000,000. With other sections of the world, notably the tropical countries producing coffee, tea, rubber, tin, and the like, our unfavorable balance is approximately $300,000,000. It is evident that any attempt to equalize either the favorable or the unfavorable balance would be harmful to the economic life of the United States.

That agreements for the purpose of effecting a bilateral balancing of trade are not successful in increasing trade has been proved by a number of major foreign countries during the past few years. It is becoming increasingly clear that the sound method of restoring and expanding foreign trade is by tariff adjustments and by a liberalization of international trade practices to permit commerce to flow in the natural channels of multilateral trade.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call your particular attention to two underlying facts that the record brings out; first, that aside from the price structure, our exports are being adversely affected by import and currency restrictions of other countries; secondly, that Brazil as a producer of Blue Rose rice is rapidly supplanting us in world markets. Their growth in the past 3 years has been phenomenal, and they are now well entrenched in every foreign territory once dominated by American rices. Brazil is the only country of the world that so far has been able to produce quality comparable to ours, and it is my opinion that from now on they must be recognized as serious competitors.

From my files I submit the following information on the world markets of American rices:

AFRICA

There is a limited market on the west coast. The business is slightly hazardous, but so far it has been satisfactory and offers our millers an outlet of approximately 2,000 tons maximum yearly.

ARGENTINA

This territory at one time was a heavy consumer of American rice but is now definitely closed to us on account of exchange and currency control, plus heavy duties placed on milled rice in order to protect their rapidly developing home industry.

I quote the following from a letter of the American consul general, Mr. A. M. Warren, dated Buenos Aires, Argentina, July 17, 1935:

According to statistics compiled for 1934, Argentine imports of rice were as follows:

Bags of rice imported during 1934 and source

Brazil	416,952
Italy	308,076
Spain	142,027
Egypt	55,444
Germany	3,048
United States	300
Japan	231
Total	926,078
Total during 1933	1,135,457

AUSTRIA

This was a limited but steady outlet up to last year, but there has now been formed a monopoly, tied in with a reciprocal-trade agreement with Italy, and while American importations are not prohibited they are made difficult because Italy is a rice-producing country itself, and we can only secure the business when the Italian importers are not in a position to supply the desired quality. Recently, by reason of the Italian-Ethiopian war, Brazil has been a sizeable shipper to Austria, using the medium of the Italian importers.

BELGIUM

This is one of the few large markets for United States of America rices where no restrictions of any nature are in force. The market, however, is highly competitive and has recently been completely monopolized by Brazilian rices.

CHILE

This country at one time was a sizeable market. Exchange restrictions, credit hazards, and competition from foreign rices have completely destroyed the business at present.

COLOMBIA

Although a producer of limited quantities of rice, its consumption exceeds its production. Colombia at one time offered a fair market. Unfortunately, due to import restrictions and disastrous competition from foreign rices, this territory has now completely slipped from us. However, a reciprocal-trade agreement became effective May 20, 1936.

CANADA

On account of heavy duties on milled rices, to protect the home industry, business with Canada is only possible on rough and brown rice, principally rough rice, and while it offers to the United States farmers an outlet for a sizeable quantity of rough rice each year, by reason of the fact that rough rice moves in duty free, still it offers no market for rice in any other form. Not even under a subsidy export arrangement, due to the Canadian antidumping law, which requires that any product moving into Canada under a subsidy must be sold in Canada at the same basis of prices that it is sold within the country of its origin. These same conditions are also true of British Columbia.

CENTRAL AMERICA

Rice being one of the prime necessities of life in these countries, and the station of life of the majority of the population being such as to make necessary the securing of food at the lowest possible prices, the rice business of these countries goes to the Orient. They are not considered quality markets and for American rices to participate in the business it will be necessary that our prices compare favorably with the lowest-priced foreign production. Business with these countries under present circumstances seems impossible.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC AND HAITI

These communities are heavy consumers of rice, but their supplies are drawn from the Orient. They do not present very favorable markets, as quality plays no part whatever. It is entirely a price market, and in order to get the business it will be necessary for American rice to sell at the low point of world levels.

DENMARK

Import restrictions have completely cut off any sizeable volume of business. Denmark is only a limited market, but in the last 3 years the importers of American rices have bought very little, and the importations have fallen off to such an extent that this season they were practically nil. This is a quality market, and were it not for restrictions, and regardless of prices, it would probably be possible for us to do some little business.

ECUADOR

This country is also a rice producer. The production is not equal to the consumption, but the surplus is drawn from Asiatic sources. This is a price market entirely and except at a disastrous basis of prices United States rices cannot be sold successfully.

UNITED KINGDOM, ENGLAND, IRELAND, SCOTLAND

A peculiar condition exists. The English people have cultivated a taste for the better grades of rice and therefore have preferred the Brazil and United States rices. The English Government has heavily taxed the United States and Brazil grades, with the hope of increasing the consumption of British colonial rices. Only fair success has been attained because the quality of the British colonial production has been inferior to what the English people have demanded, but on account of the heavy duties the importation of the United States and Brazil grades have been adversely affected.

FRANCE

In order to protect French rice millers, France for the past several years has been prohibiting the importation of milled rices from the United States in any form. There has, however, prevailed up to a few months ago a very splendid market for United States brown and undermilled grades suitable for remilling, for the reason that these grades move into France for a small duty.

Since the early part of October, however, the exports of United States rice into France have been practically nil for the reason that France has effected a trade arrangement with Brazil whereby the Brazilian rices of all grades and descriptions enter France at half of the duty that is imposed upon the United States grades. It was difficult—in fact, well-nigh impossible—for the United States millers to compete with the Brazilian millers on an equal tariff, and, consequently since the Brazilian shippers now enjoy a half tariff, the United States industry has been completely eliminated and the business with this nation lost, unless it is possible to get on an equal footing with the Brazilian shippers. It is unfortunate, because in the last 3 years records indicate that France took 40 percent of our total exports of brown and undermilled rices, quite a substantial tonnage.

GERMANY

Germany some several years ago was our best customer, and a tremendous amount of satisfactory business in both brown undermilled and milled rices, also byproducts, each year was transacted. Today, by reason of the scarcity of currency and import restrictions, business in a barter form only is possible; and, though several attempts have been made at business on a barter basis, to the best of my knowledge nothing has as yet definitely resulted. I am advised that the German Government now has a delegation in New York City, who have managed to work out a few small trades.

GREECE

In the past several years the exportation of United States rice into Greece has been quite heavy. The volume of the market seems to have been expanded, probably because this business was coming direct to the United States millers and exporters, whereas several years ago, when the exportation of United States rices was general, the business was being done by continental European importers, located principally at Hamburg, Germany. With the elimination of these importers at Hamburg, the business has taken on a direct relationship, and in the past few years, so far as our business is concerned, Greece has been one of the best customers in the export field of the American rice industry.

HOLLAND

This is a sizable market for United States rices, which up to the middle of April was closed or, in fact, was sharply reduced on account of import restrictions. However, a reciprocal-trade agreement has been effected recently between the two Governments, the terms of which permitted the United States to double her rice exportations, in consideration of which Dutch brewers were to come into the United States at half duty.

The duty on brewers' rice is 65 cents per 100 pounds, and the Dutch brewers are moving in at 32½ cents per 100 pounds. Unfortunately the work-out thus far on the reciprocal trade has not proven very satisfactory, because in the treaty the Dutch Government had the privilege of anticipating their requirements in the United States grades, either direct from the United States or any other country, the only provision being that the rice must be a product of the United States. The result has been that Holland has been buying United States rices from other countries, principally England and Greece.

It is true that these rices were originally produced in the United States and their sale could be counted as export business, but these foreign importers who have been securing the Dutch sales on American grades sold the United States grades to Holland and anticipated their requirements in Brazilian rices at cheaper prices, so the United States rices have really not profited to any great extent as yet.

On the other hand, the Dutch brewers have found a ready outlet for tremendous quantities of brewers' rice. Recently our brewers' market has steadily declined, and our stocks of broken and brewers ordinarily used for brewing purposes are heavy and our market sluggish, notwithstanding the fact that the market on table grades has advanced approximately a cent a pound in the past 90 days. Ordinarily under such circumstances the brokers and brewers markets, in sympathy with the advance in the table grades, would likewise have improved, but unfortunately importations at the lower range of prices made advances in these grades impossible.

HUNGARY

This also was a sizable market for milled rices and undermilled and brown rice suitable for remilling purposes, but for the past several years this market has been closed completely to us on account of a commercial treaty effected between Hungary and Italy. We are only permitted to do business in Hungary when Italy cannot supply the rice.

ITALY

Although a rice-producing nation, business in the past has been possible with the Italian importers because of the clientele built up by the United States industry in Jugoslavia. The volume is small, but the general out-turn of the business has been more or less satisfactory; but within the past year, although no restrictions exist, the financial status of the Italian Government has made shipping for payment against documents impractical, forcing the United States millers and exporters to demand payment against an irrevocable confirmed credit, which the Italian importers have not been able to do.

LATVIA

While this country has never been directly associated with the consumption of United States rice, there are sizable milling institutions located there who were buyers of our brown and undermilled grades several years ago, before the entry of United States rices was prohibited.

MEXICO

No business is possible, the country being both a producer and exporter.

NORWAY AND SWEDEN

Although restrictions exist in a minor degree, business is still possible with these two countries, but, unfortunately, the consumption of rice is not very great. The business is available only around the Christmas period; consequently, the importance of the market, while not underestimated, should not be overestimated. Brazilian rices are each year becoming more serious competition, and this season, after the subsidy was removed, dominated both countries.

PORTUGAL

Up to 1934 free trade was permitted, but thereafter, in order to encourage the production of rice in Portugal, restrictions were placed upon importations, and so stringent have become these restrictions that no business at present could possibly be done except in case of a crop failure there. As yet the production does not equal the consumption, but it is fast approaching that point.

RUMANIA

A fair-size volume of business was possible up to a few years ago with this country, both on the milled rices and rices for remilling purposes. Now, on account of trade restrictions, the business has been completely lost. It is only possible to do business with Rumania through countries which enjoy a favorable trade balance with Rumania. Several attempts to do business through English and Holland agents of the United States rice industry proved fruitless, despite the fact that both countries are on satisfactory standing with Rumania.

We are given to understand by our connections in Rumania that an excellent opportunity exists for a reciprocal trade treaty, particularly so if the proper financial arrangements could be made.

SPAIN

The nation offers no business whatever, being both a producer and exporter.

SWITZERLAND

For many years Switzerland offered a limited volume of business on United States milled rices, but restrictions have been imposed and few transactions have been made during the last 2 years. Within the past several months, however, a reciprocal-trade arrangement has been effected between the United States and Switzerland whereby an annual importation of not to exceed 2,000 tons of United States rice may move into Switzerland each year.

This arrangement was effected after the heavy crop movement and at the time when our market was reacting. As a result, both Holland and England have thus far benefited, because they had afloat then purchases of United States rice made before the elimination of the export subsidy. I consider this simply a coincidence and am sincere in my belief that the reciprocal-trade arrangement that now exists with Switzerland is going to make possible business to the extent of 2,000 tons each year, and, although the volume involved is not great, still from a trading standpoint, Switzerland, by reason of the reciprocal trade, today represents one of the few countries of continental Europe where a satisfactory business on United States rice can be conducted.

BRAZIL

This country is now producing far in excess of its normal requirements, and, as has been indicated throughout these pages, is our chief competitor in world markets, because it is the only country in the world that produces grades and qualities very similar to United States Blue Rose rice.

The other countries of the world not mentioned offer no prospective market. Those that consume rice secure their supplies from the Orient and at prices that make the territories unattractive, even as a dumping ground.

CUBA

This is the high spot on the export horizon. It is the one and only market that we know of that offers an outlet for enormous quantities of rice, providing a proper understanding can be arrived at between the two Governments. Developments within the past 2 years convey the impression that there is a serious desire on the part of the present Cuban Government to work out an arrangement whereby the rice supplies of Cuba may be procured from the United States.

Rice is considered a prime necessity in Cuba. There was promulgated some 20 months ago by the Cuban Government a law no. 14, establishing a sliding scale of import duties bearing on the relationship of imports and exports into Cuba.

The United States, by reason of the fact that her imports from Cuba exceeded her exports to Cuba, enjoyed the 100-percent preferential, whereas in the case of the Asiatic countries now supplying Cuba with rice, the conditions were just the reverse. These Asiatic countries buy nothing of Cuba, whereas Cuba is a heavy purchaser from them. The effect of this tariff arrangement would increase the duty on Saigon and Siam rices to $7.40 per 100 kilos, as compared to the present duty of $3.70 per 100 kilos. At a glance it is evident that such a duty on these Asiatic rices would make business impossible, whereas U. S. A. rices would enjoy the maximum preferential, which, as we calculate it, would under no conditions exceed 40 percent of the import duty imposed upon rices from the Orient.

The significance of these figures is apparent, and had this law remained in full force and effect it would have resulted in Cuba anticipating her full requirement ultimately, in rice, from the United States, but unfortunately, the consumer resistance was so forceful as to accomplish the suspension of the law. Since that time, two additional suspensions have occurred. It will now be October 2, 1936, before the higher duties can be assessed on any of the Asiatic importations into Cuba, provided, of course, that the presently suspended law no. 14 is not canceled or nullified. We further understand that under the terms of the law, only three suspensions are permitted. Consequently, if the Cuban Government intends to continue to permit Asiatic rices to move into Cuba after October 1936, on the present basis of their tariffs, it will not only be necessary to nullify law no. 14, but further legislation will have to be enacted. The Cuban market, by virtue of its geographical position, is truly our market, and it will be ours if law no. 14 can be made to stand.

Considering the volume of business available from Cuba on rice, it is our opinion that the industry need go no further if that market can be opened up, because the importations into Cuba of rice from the United States will, in all probability, exceed normal exportations of rice from the United States to all other markets of the world. In fact, at a glance it would appear henceforth that our opportunities for business lie within the Americas, principally the West Indies, Cuba, Central and South America, for the general set-up abroad is not favorable, nor can I see at any time in the immediate future any possibility of reinstating it to its former position of some 15 to 20 years ago; but getting back to Cuba, your particular attention is called to decree no. 716 of the Cuban Treasury Department, which extended the suspension of law no. 14.

This decree no. 716 is quite plain in its intent and it is our hope that further capitalization may be permitted by our industry on the opportunities presented. This is particularly true of the incoming season where production, barring crop failures and harvest hazards, bids to exceed considerably the normal supplies required by our present trade channels.

Mr. Speaker, rice is produced in the United States in the area bordering the Gulf of Mexico; and since the United States produces about 18 percent in excess of the quantity consumed in the continental United States and its Territorial possessions—the Philippine Islands excepted—our industry must look to some foreign market to absorb this excess production.

Trade relations between the United States and Cuba are favorable, and since Louisiana and the rice-producing area of the United States is very much closer to Cuba than any other country, and because Cuba enjoys certain concessions on sugar, it seems to me Cuba should permit our rices to enter duty free, or at least admit a quota of, say, 2,000,000 pockets of rice, from the United States duty free.

Since sugar and rice are produced in the same Gulf States of the United States—and let us not forget the imports of sugar in 1935 were very large—and I quote from a letter received from Mr. Sidney Morgan, Secretary, United States Tariff Commission, under date of April 21, 1936, to wit:

The present rate of duty on 96° sugar from countries other than Cuba is 1.875 cents per pound. The rate of duty on 96° sugar from Cuba is nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound. The latter rate became effective September 3, 1934, under the reciprocity agreement with Cuba and is contingent upon a quota or an equivalent limitation on imports from Cuba. Should this limitation on imports become inoperative the duty on Cuban sugar would revert to 20 percent under the rate effective on imports from countries other than Cuba.

The imports of sugar from Cuba in 1935 amounted to 1,995,444 short tons, valued at $80,449,827, regardless of polarization. Of this quantity approximately 336,000 short tons were refined sugar and the balance was raw sugar intended principally for further refining in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit some very interesting data, together with the source of information, and to be numbered tables 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5.

The United States imports annually from Cuba better than $80,000,000 of sugar, and Cuba now imports about 92 percent of its rice consumption. If, then, on the one hand, we are to permit Cuban sugars to come into the United States, by the same token Cuba should grant every preferential asked on rice from the United States, so that the farmers of the States which produce sugar might at least offset a part of their losses by increasing their rice income.

The possibility of getting into the Cuban market with our rice is of vital importance to the rice industry of this country. That the rice industry needs help seems very obvious, as rice is one of the commodities included in the administration's agricultural relief bill. I feel that the present administration has done much for agriculture, and I am firmly of the opinion that with proper representations to the Cuban Government a quota of 2,000,000 pockets of rice from the United States would be admitted free. I earnestly urge the aggressive cooperation of the State Department to bring this result.

Gentlemen, this is a world picture of the position occupied by United States rice. It is far from a satisfactory one, particularly in the light of increased production.

Cuba is the salvation of the industry. Its importance cannot be overestimated, and it is my opinion that if this market can be opened up on a satisfactory basis the future of the industry is assured. It will permit expansion in the milling and distributing end of the industry. In fact, it will allow rice to take its position among the industries of this country, and unless this territory is opened up production will have to be retarded until such time if and when some other export outlets now closed can be opened up to us.

CLAY COUNTY, GA.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Mr. Speaker, for the edification of any who have concluded that economical government is a lost art, I desire to read a short extract from one of Georgia's best weekly papers, the Dawson News, published in Dawson, Ga. It is as follows:

CLAY COUNTY HAS AN UNUSUAL DISTINCTION—ONLY COUNTY IN GEORGIA THAT DOES NOT LEVY TAX FOR COUNTY PURPOSES

Clay County commissioners have gone on record against levying taxes for county purposes this year. The county is out of debt and has sufficient money to operate upon without making any levy.

Clay County is one of the few in the State that has no bonded indebtedness and money in the bank. For many years it has held the record of having the lowest tax rate of any county in the State.

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I desire to congratulate the splendid commissioners of that excellent county and its most worthy citizenship. It is one of the small counties. My observation in regard to these matters is that the smaller the unit of government the less the per-capita expense of operation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the farmer is the mainstay of the Nation. Nothing has ever yet been found to fill the stomach and to clothe the back successfully except by the toil of the farmer and the farmer's wife. Bread is still the staff of life, and regardless of the attitude of the industrialist and the great bankers of the Nation, nevertheless the Nation prospers when the farmer prospers and the Nation becomes bankrupt when the farmer is bankrupt.

This present administration, under the leadership of President Roosevelt, found the farmers broke and agriculture in its all-time low. Three years under a safe, sound, fair, and equitable program for the farmer and agriculture shows them definitely coming back. The index price for farm products has more than doubled since February 1933. Gross farm income of the United States has increased nearly $3,000,000,000 since 1932. The farm real-estate market has been increasingly active, with advancing prices, until now the average value of farms in the United States is 82 percent of the pre-war years of 1912 to 1914, while during the period ending in 1932 it was very difficult to tell what, if any, value the farms of the United States had. Likewise, the farm mortgage debt, which was nine and one-half billion dollars in 1928, is now listed at seven and one-half billion dollars, a reduction of more than 20 percent. Interest reductions to the farmers of the United States in the past year amount to more than $68,000,000.

Further proof of the recovery of agriculture is the steadily increasing demand for farm real estate. This is shown by the fact that the 12 Federal land banks during the first quarter of 1936 sold 60 percent more farms than in the first quarter of 1935, and, likewise, there was a large gain in 1935 sales over the preceding year.

The statements just made are broad statements giving results and benefits to agriculture of the Nation. I will now briefly set out some of the major things that this administration has done for the State of Indiana. Farmers of Indiana, as well as the laborer and almost everyone else, were in a state of rout and destruction when the Roosevelt administration was ushered in; and today all farm prices are materially improved, farm lands are salable, and, with increased selling prices, decreased taxes and interest charges, the farmers of Indiana are now well on the way out; and when the farmers of Indiana are prosperous we find a good and ready market for the products of the factory and mill; so it is an endless cycle, and the spiral is going up, and prosperity is not around the corner any longer but is among us everywhere.

Cash receipts from the sale of principal farm products in Indiana increased from $136,000,000 in 1932 to $247,000,000 in 1935. This is an increase of 87 percent. I want to compare some prices of farm products and base my figures on the prices of March 15, 1933, and show you the favorable comparison as of December 15, 1935; and I will say the prices today are averaging approximately what they were in December 1935. I quote as follows:

Commodity	Mar. 15, 1933	Dec. 15, 1935
Wheat (per bushel)	$0.43	$0.89

The above figures were obtained from the United States Department of Agriculture. During the 3-year period ending March 15, 1933, the number of forced farm sales in Indiana was 44.9 per thousand, whereas they have now declined to 26.1 per thousand. The bettered farm conditions also reflect themselves in labor. The average farm wage in Indiana has also improved with improved conditions and is now 25 percent higher than during the depression years.

Approximately $50,000,000 have been available to the United States under the A. A. A. for the eradication of cattle diseases, of which Indiana has received $595,000.

We have read and heard much propaganda in newspapers and otherwise ridiculing the corn-hog program. It developed, however, that in Indiana the official returns showed that 67,000 farmers approved the program while only 8,000 opposed it. A total of more than $36,000,000 of benefit payments were disbursed among the farmers of Indiana.

We find some chambers of commerce in the larger cities who become greatly concerned and excited when there is indication that the farmer is receiving a fair price for his products. They immediately begin to howl and wring their hands and sympathize with the laborer. The facts are that there is only one-half cent more cost to the flour that goes in a loaf of bread when wheat is $1.75 a bushel than there is when wheat is 35 cents a bushel. The trouble is that when the wheat is 35 cents and 40 cents and when the price of all farm products is down, the farmer has nothing with which to buy the product of the factory. Consequently, the secretary of the city chamber of commerce who complains because the farmer is fairly remunerated for his product is ignorant and knows nothing of his subject. I desire to give you some proof of the statement just made and will give it to you in the automobile sales in the State of Indiana. The comparison shows very clearly that when the farmer receives a fair price for his product, he at once spends it for his home and for his farm and for his comfort. The following gives the automobile sales for the State of Indiana for the past 4 years:

1933	46,297
1934	64,270
1935	109,038

The increase from 1932 to 1935 was 220 percent. The increase in the use of gasoline in 1935 over the year of 1933 amounted to 13 percent.

Prosperity to the farmer in Indiana is further reflected in his use of fertilizer, which shows an increase of 95 percent over 1933.

A further indication of the prosperity of Indiana is shown through the Chicago Federal Reserve district, which includes the greater part of Indiana, which amounted to $38,000,000,000 in 1932, while in 1935 the figures totaled $49,000,000,000, an increase of 30 percent over 1932 figures.

A further indication of the return of prosperity to Indiana is shown in time deposits and postal-savings deposits, which show an increase in 1935 of 54 percent over 1933.

Another barometer is reflected in the commercial failures in Indiana and shows them to be rapidly declining. In 1932 there were 563 such failures in Indiana. During the year 1935 they were reduced to 160, which shows there was only 28 commercial failures in Indiana in the year 1935 where there had been 100 in the year 1932.

Newspaper propaganda and political barnstorming would attempt to frighten the farmer, telling him of his loss of foreign markets and telling him that he has been regimented and attempt to make mountains out of molehills. In the face of present-day prices and in the face of the prosperity of the farmers of my State, it will not be possible to fool them by such foolish newspaper propaganda and political harangue. It will be difficult to fool the housewife who sold her eggs for 6 to 8 cents a dozen and is now getting from 25 cents to 35 cents a dozen. It will be difficult to fool the farmer who sold his wheat at 35 cents to 45 cents a bushel, who of late has been getting 80 cents to $1 a bushel. It will be difficult to fool the farmer who sold his hogs for $2.25 to $3 per hundredweight, but who is now getting from $9 to $12.

The farmer has been promised relief for a number of years. He has been promised help when he was sinking under the burden of high taxes and high interest and suffering because of receipt of the lowest prices for his product in all history. All he got from the party in power were promises to be broken more quickly than they were made. Promises were again made to the farmer in 1932, and it was left for President Roosevelt and this administration, of which I am glad to be a part, to have supported the program promised the farmer and to pass laws for his benefit. These laws, including all the other legislation which has been passed for the general good, have brought not only the farmer but the Nation from a nation of bankruptcy and fear to a nation of prosperity and confidence.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman already has that permission.

INCREASE OF FACILITIES FOR INTEROCEANIC COMMUNICATION THROUGH THE CENTRAL ISTHMUS

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain quotations from the United States Board of Engineers which surveyed the Nicaraguan Canal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, the construction of an additional interoceanic ship canal through the Central American isthmus, across the Republic of Nicaragua, is of such importance to the future commercial and maritime welfare and development of our country and to our national security that it should receive our most serious attention and action.

Surveys have been made and reports completed and have been on file with the Congress since December of 1931. The survey was made under the direction of Col. Dan I. Sultan, of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army. He and his staff did their work thoroughly, and his report is detailed and exhaustive. The War Department is continuing the gathering of hydrographic data at Nicaragua.

The total cost of building the canal, including costs of acquiring rights, franchises, and land, is estimated at $722,000,000, with an annual total maintenance cost of $10,800,000.

The investigation and survey was authorized by Public Resolution 99, Seventieth Congress (S. J. Res. 117), approved March 2, 1929.

The purpose of the investigation was to determine—

The practicability and probable cost of increasing the facilities for interoceanic communication through the Central American isthmus either by an interoceanic ship canal across the Republic of Nicaragua or by additional locks and other facilities at the Panama Canal.

The report on increasing the capacity of the Panama Canal was, under the instructions of the Secretary of War, made by Col. Harry Burgess, Corps of Engineers, Governor of the Panama Canal Zone. The report on the Nicaraguan route was made by Lt. Col. Dan I. Sultan, Corps of Engineers. A provisional battalion of engineer troops was employed on the work in Nicaragua for a period of 2 years.

The reports of Colonels Burgess and Sultan were referred to the Interoceanic Canal Board, appointed by the President, for review. Col. Ernest Graves, United States Army, retired, served as chairman of the Board, and the other members of the Board signing the report were Sydney B. Williamson, Anson Marston, Roy G. Finch, and Dan I. Sultan, lieutenant colonel, Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

The conclusions and recommendations of the Board follow:

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

72. The board believes that the plans prepared by the Governor of the Panama Canal for an additional set of locks and for the conversion of the Panama Canal into a sea-level canal are the most practical solutions of these problems. An additional set of locks at the Panama Canal would cost $140,000,000. To transform the Panama Canal into a sea-level canal would cost $1,000,000,000. The board concurs in the plans and estimates submitted in the report of the officer in charge of the investigation of the Nicaragua Canal route. The most practical route for an interoceanic ship canal across the Republic of Nicaragua is from Greytown on the Atlantic Ocean to Brito on the Pacific Ocean by way of the Deseado and San Juan Rivers and the Great Lake of Nicaragua. A lock canal over this route is practicable. Its cost, exclusive of rights, franchises, land, etc., would be $697,000,000, and the maintenance cost would be $10,800,000 per year. The approximate cost of acquiring rights, franchises, land, etc., would be $25,000,000.

73. The present conditions of world trade, the necessity for economy in expenditure of public funds, and the facts that traffic through the Panama Canal now requires only about 50 percent of its capacity and that full capacity when demanded by traffic will be assured by the additional water supply from the Madden Reservoir (at Alhajuela), with the indication that thus the Panama Canal can serve the needs of interoceanic traffic for some time to come, lead to the conclusion that no immediate steps must be taken to provide increased facilities for passing water-borne traffic from ocean to ocean.

74. The study of the precipitation and run-off in the watersheds of the proposed Nicaragua Canal should be continued.

75. When increased interoceanic canal facilities are actually needed, in view of the advantages of two canals for shipping during both war and peace times, as well as the intangible but nevertheless considerable value of another canal in Central America, the Nicaragua Canal should be favorably considered for the following reasons:

(a) A majority of the ships passing from ocean to ocean would save time and money by using the Nicaragua route.

(b) The intercoastal trade of the United States would be benefited.

(c) The improvement of the Mississippi River and connecting waterways, together with the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, would benefit the midsection of the United States. Growth of commerce between Gulf ports and our west coast would be stimulated.

(d) Both in war and in peace two canals would give greater assurance of uninterrupted waterway passage between oceans.

(e) Two interoceanic canals would reduce the danger of a complete stoppage of water-borne traffic by reason of sabotage or accidents, slides, and earthquakes. The probability of the simultaneous blocking of traffic on two canals is very remote. The water necessary to operate a lock canal up to its capacity should be available during the dryest years. It is not sure that the driest year possible has been recorded either in Panama or in Nicaragua. The ample water supply in Nicaragua and the improbability of extreme dry conditions affecting both Nicaragua and Panama at the same time would eliminate any apprehension as to possible water shortage.

(f) The sizes of ships are increasing. In time larger locks than those now at Panama will be needed. When this need develops one set of larger locks at Panama may not accommodate the demand of larger ships during the period that the larger locks are out of commission for overhauling or other reasons. A Nicaragua Canal with all locks larger would not have this disadvantage.

(g) The construction of the Nicaraguan Canal, with the establishment of a canal zone by the United States, would tend to stabilize the Government of Nicaragua, which would have a beneficial effect on the stabilization of all Central American Governments and thus greatly benefit international relations. The economic conditions of these countries would be improved, with a consequent benefit to the foreign trade of the United States.

(h) When the United States acquired the right to build a canal in Nicaragua, it precluded the construction by anyone else of a feasible canal as a rival to the Panama Canal and indicated that it was sound national policy to construct when warranted the Nicaraguan Canal.

(i) With both the Panama Canal and the Nicaraguan Canal in service, if it should then develop that interoceanic traffic demanded still further enlarged facilities either canal could be closed or partially closed during the construction period necessary to increase its facilities. In the event of a conversion of a lock canal into a sea-level canal, the closing of the canal would permit the work to be done a great deal more cheaply than under maintenance of traffic conditions.

(j) The building of the Nicaraguan Canal is entirely feasible from both an engineering and a construction standpoint.

76. It is recommended that the complete reports of the investigations just made, with their drawings and maps, be published so that full information will be available when consideration of additional facilities for interoceanic traffic becomes necessary; and that provision be made by legislation for the continuous collection of hydrographic data for the Nicaragua route.

ERNEST GRAVES,
Colonel, United States Army, Retired,
Chairman of Board.
SYDNEY B. WILLIAMSON,
ANSON MARSTON.
ROY G. FINCH.
DAN I. SULTAN,
Lieutenant Colonel,
Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

The compelling reason for the construction of the Panama Canal was the importance of this canal to our national defense. The commercial utility and importance has far exceeded all of the estimates of the early advocates and engineers. Since the year 1500 men had discussed the commercial desirability of an interoceanic ship canal through the Central American isthmus. Various routes were studied and some surveyed, and some attempts at building a canal were actually started, but prior to the construction of the Panama Canal each failed due to lack of engineering skill or mechanical devices and equipment, through inability to supply adequate medical service and sanitary safeguards for the men engaged, and for lack of financial resources to carry so great a project to successful consummation.

Events of the Spanish-American War and our national development thereafter forced us to the realization that we had to be prepared for war in either the Atlantic or Pacific. To maintain an adequate naval force in each ocean capable of waging successful war in either would be prohibitively costly, and it was for the primary purpose of maintaining a sufficient fleet readily available for action in either ocean that we built the Panama Canal.

Colonel Sultan in his report points out that—

Since the construction of our first canal at Panama the weapons of attack against canal structures, particularly the airplane, have increased in power, in effectiveness, and in the strategic element of surprise. The Panama Canal is not so invulnerable now as it was at the time of completion. The ability to concentrate our battle forces and the power of access to either ocean is, therefore, no longer beyond the possibility of prevention.

The colonel further states:

In time of war the Canal fulfills its national-defense mission in the opening phases of the conflict in securing the concentration of forces in the chosen ocean. A war in the Atlantic would attract the world's shipping to that ocean, as it did in the World War, leaving a reduced commerce to transit the Canal. A war in the Pacific would, because of the greater industrialization of the Atlantic seaboard, make a more continued use of the Isthmian Canal for supply purposes.

The report further states:

A hostile power would find it very difficult to capture or destroy both of two canal systems. After conquering and garrisoning one of the defenses the attacker would have to have a sufficiently large force remaining to attack the other, with the further handicap that the possibility of a major surprise would be lacking. In case the principal attack was by air the Nicaraguan Canal would be nearer for reinforcing planes from the United States.

To be completely successful, sabotage would probably have to be accomplished just prior to the outbreak of war. Secrecy and surprise being essential elements, the timing would have to be perfect for sabotage to be successful at two canals. Sabotage should not be capable of the destruction of two canals, but it might cripple one.

The report also states:

It must, therefore, become increasingly apparent that with the growing power of the offensive against canal structures the construction of a second canal has great justification in the added security it gives to the United States in time of war by assuring to the United States Battle Fleet surer access to both oceans, so that it may apply, at all times, united strength in naval operations and gain the full strategic value of choosing the theater of activity.

Thus it seems perfectly obvious that if there were no immediate commercial justification for the construction of an additional canal, there is certainly an impelling reason for our doing so in the interest of our national security, and that without delay. And it should be borne in mind that this is a commercial justification.

It is estimated that it will take 10 years to construct the Nicaragua Canal and 2 to 5 years in the preliminary work of passing the required legislation and negotiating necessary treaties. Thus, if a start is made during the early days of the next Congress, allowing for some slight and usually inevitable delays in negotiations, without taking into consideration any possible unexpected delays that may be encountered in the course of actual construction, we should have the Nicaragua Canal open for commerce and for the use of our fleet by about 1955.

By the convention between the United States and Nicaragua, signed August 5, 1914, the United States acquired by the payment of $3,000,000 the following rights:

First. Exclusive proprietary rights in perpetuity, necessary and convenient for the construction, operation, and maintenance of an interoceanic canal.

Second. A 99-year renewable lease on the islands known as Great Corn and Little Corn in the Caribbean.

Third. The right to establish a naval base at such place on the territory of Nicaragua bordering upon the Gulf of Fonseca as the Government of the United States may select.

A further treaty with Nicaragua would be necessary before construction could begin covering the acquisition of a canal zone and the rights and privileges necessary for constructing and operating and defending the canal.

The United States would also be called upon to enter into negotiations with Costa Rica, Salvador, and Honduras.

It is estimated by canal authorities in a report submitted by Sydney B. Williamson covering future traffic through the Panama and Nicaragua Canals that the Panama Canal will be operating to the limit of capacity by 1960, and that additional capacity for interocean traffic must be provided.

On the basis of this report, if we immediately start negotiations and arrangements leading to the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, it can be completed and in operation about 5 years prior to the date that the Panama Canal has reached the limit of capacity in service.

Colonel Sultan points out in his report that—

> Developments in world trade and interoceanic commerce in the past have exceeded the forecasts. * * * The commerce through the Panama Canal increased during the first 10 years to over twice the tonnage which had been forecast when the work started.

It is a known fact that any improvement in transportation facilities tends to stimulate and increase commerce. The Nicaragua Canal would provide a shorter route from port to port for two-thirds of the traffic now using the Panama Canal. A ship of 10 knots speed, allowing 23 hours for transiting a Nicaragua canal and 8 hours for transiting the Panama Canal, would save 1¼ days on each trip between San Francisco and New York and 2¼ days on each trip between San Francisco and New Orleans. This reduction in time and distance would be of immense benefit to all intercoastal trade and very particularly to intercoastal trade in perishable products. It is stated that the following trade routes would use a Nicaragua canal with a saving of time over use of the Panama Canal:

First. United States intercoastal trade.

Second. Europe and west coast of North America.

Third. West coast of United States and east coast of South America.

Fourth. East coast of United States and Far East.

Fifth. West Indies and Pacific coast of North America.

Sixth. North American intercoastal (exclusive of item 1).

The size of the locks in the Panama Canal are 110 feet by 1,000 feet, with a minimum depth of 41 feet on the miter sills. The proposal for the Nicaragua Canal is for locks 1,200 feet long by 125 feet wide, with a minimum of 42½ feet of water over the sills.

It is noted that the U. S. S. Saratoga is 888 feet long and 107.9 feet wide, which leaves very little room for it to safely squeeze through the Panama Canal. The locks proposed for Nicaragua are estimated to be sufficiently large to accommodate the ships of the future, both commercial and naval.

The route recommended by the Intercoastal Canal Board as the most practical for a canal across the Republic of Nicaragua is from Greytown on the Atlantic to Brito on the Pacific. The total distance across will be 172⁹/₁₀ miles, of which 70 miles will be through the Great Lake of Nicaragua.

Three twin locks are provided at Miramar, on the Pacific side, about 5 miles from deep water at Brito. At the east divide, 15 miles from deep water in the Caribbean near Greytown, three twin locks are also planned.

The route as laid down is given as follows:

> Starting at Brito on the Pacific, the route follows the valley of the Rio Grande to the low divide (elevation 153 feet) between the basins of the Rio Grande and the Las Lajas, thence down the valley of the Las Lajas to Lake Nicaragua; crosses Lake Nicaragua to Fort San Carlos, keeping to the south of the island of Ometepe and northward of the Solentiname group. From Fort San Carlos to the vicinity of Conchuda Hills the canal route follows the San Juan River; leaving the San Juan, the route passes through the Conchuda Hills, crosses the valleys of the Danta and San Francisco Rivers, and follows the valley of the Limpio to the divide (center line elevation, 383 feet; maximum elevation, 410 feet). From the divide it goes down the valley of the Deseado to the Caribbean Sea just north of Greytown.

Artificial harbors are required at both Brito and Greytown and are provided for in the plans.

There is an abundant water supply in Nicaragua for all of the purposes of the canal, and in this connection it is of interest that it is pointed out the rainfall conditions differ from those at Panama, so that extreme droughts would not occur both at Panama and Nicaragua at the same time, and thus any possible shortage of water for lockage purposes is entirely eliminated.

The construction of the Nicaragua Canal would add greatly to our national security, it would develop and promote our commerce and our merchant marine, further strengthen our friendly relations with South and Central American countries, improve the economic condition of Central American Republics and tend to stabilize their governments, and stimulate our mutual trade and commerce.

It brings closer together by water transportation the ports of both coasts of the United States. I know of no project that our Nation could undertake so likely to inspire the renewed commercial activity essential to the resumption of our normal economic life.

ROADS FOR ALASKA

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an excerpt of about 10 lines from an official report concerning the building of a highway to Alaska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, it is the mere repetition of a truism to say that the development of an orderly and material civilization depends to some extent upon roads; for without means of communication, a humanized culture can scarcely come into being or endure. This repetition is justified only because men so often forget the value of the elementary and essential things. Few people anywhere have ever managed to both establish and maintain a high degree of material civilization not accompanied by the enlarged facility in means of transportation which may be brought about only through the construction and maintenance of roads and highways. Civilization and road building go hand in hand, and the best example of that lies in the history of the Roman Empire. Economic development has followed the building of roads. I know of no exception to that rule, and so it has long been my considered judgment that not only are roads a necessity for the development of the Territory of Alaska but that one way, and the surest way, to bring about that development is by building roads.

In saying this I make but one reservation, and that is with respect to the new art of flying and to the new industry of air transportation. It is true that to some extent—in fact to a substantial extent—the facilities of transportation furnished by the development and use of the airplane will compensate for the lack of good highways, but we all realize that airplanes and air transportation can never take the place of roads, and that in fact the two means of transportation—that made available by roads and that furnished by airplanes—really supplement each other, and that seldom, if ever, is there any true competition between them. Therefore, until roads are built in Alaska, the Territory can be most speedily and immediately benefited by the establishment of a comprehensive system of air transport in the Territory, embracing the construction of airfields and the installation of a modest amount of lighting equipment and radio control for the guidance of those engaged in flying.

Alaska, as we all know, is a vast country, approximately one-fifth the size of the United States, and equal in area, as I have often remarked, to that part of the United States which lies east of the Mississippi and north of the southern boundary of Tennessee and North Carolina, plus the additional States of South Carolina and Georgia. I do not assert that Alaska is of the present economic value of the States included in the area above mentioned, but the value of Alaska is very great, indeed, and is commonly underestimated by most of the people of the United States.

Now, in all of this vast Territory of Alaska there at present exists only approximately 2,400 miles of motor roads, 1,500 miles of sled roads, and 7,000 miles of trails. By trails I mean just that—pack paths through the forests and over the tundra, and not capable of being traversed by vehicles of any description. Two thousand four hundred miles of road in a region embracing about 589,000 square miles surely is not much. The State of Delaware, with a proportionate road mileage, would have just about 10 miles of highway in the entire State. Even Delaware would feel rather cramped with only that much in the way of roads.

The sum immediately required for building roads in Alaska, when compared with the benefits to be derived therefrom, is not really large. Judging by the very substantial amounts of money which have been spent in recent years on various types of public works, I suggest that the Alaska program for road building ought not be longer delayed. The expenditure of approximately $2,000,000 in Alaska a year for road building for a period of 10 years without intermission or break would give Alaska a really efficient and useful system of roads and one that would be bound to stimulate speedily the settlement and the economic development of the Territory. It is to be observed that the amount which I have mentioned, $20,000,000, is not to be spent all at once, and when entirely spent Alaska will not have all the roads needed, but the building of this system of roads would give us such a substantial start, and would, in my opinion, stimulate so materially the economic exploitation of the Territory that we need not at the present time look beyond the 10-year period to determine what may be needed for the future. Eventually, of course, I hope to see a highway over which one can drive from New York City to Bering Sea without a break. But that is for the future. For the present we must be more modest, and the plan which I have in mind for immediate road development in Alaska has nothing in it of the unreasonable or extravagant.

The ultimate expenditure for the period mentioned—namely, $20,000,000—is designed to cover not only the cost of construction but also maintenance from year to year, and does not include the substantial contributions made by the Territory of Alaska for Territorial roads. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, it may not be irrelevant to say that, except as to roads built in the national-forest areas of Alaska and in Mount McKinley National Park, the people of Alaska have paid approximately 32.3 percent of the entire cost of construction and maintenance of all Alaska roads, as shown by the last annual report available of the Alaska Road Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1935.

In presenting, as I do, the outline of a program for the building of roads in the Territory of Alaska I do not attempt to include all the roads the building of which can be justified at the present time. The Territory is so large and many parts of it are so almost totally undeveloped that one is not able to look confidently many years in the future and see that a road will not be needed in one part of the Territory or another. And hence, if it be found that some road-building projects are omitted from this statement, I trust it will be understood that it is not practicable within moderate bounds to mention and describe every conceivable road project in the Territory that is worthy of consideration; and, moreover, an attempt is herein made to bring the program presented within reasonable fiscal limits.

Mr. Speaker, I am appending below a list of roads in Alaska the construction of which ought to be undertaken without delay, giving the location of the road either by mention of termini or other general description and an estimate of the amount needed to complete each project. First will be set out a list of the smaller local roads, 24 in number, the total cost of construction of which is estimated to be $343,000. These roads are all needed, much needed, but practically all of them serve local requirements only. After that I am giving a list of the larger projects which in a sense may be considered as parts, either presently or ultimately, of a complete and comprehensive road system for the Territory, and am stating briefly the justification for each project.

No complete program for the construction of roads in Alaska can omit or overlook the great road project for connecting Alaska by motor road with the United States proper. This road has been referred to by several different names, including the International Highway, the Pacific-Yukon Highway, and the British Columbia-Yukon-Alaska Highway. The last name is probably as closely descriptive as one can be since the road to be built lies entirely in British Columbia, Yukon Territory, and the Territory of Alaska.

Following is a list and brief description of the several roads or portions of the road systems, the building of which is proposed:

Name of project:	Amount
Valdez-Mineral Creek	$20,000
Kanatak-Becharof Lake	10,000

Porcupine Creek Road	12,000
Cleary-Summit-Chatham Creek	6,000
Happy-Goldstream Road	15,000
Farmers-Birch Hill Road	14,000
Bettles-Coldfoot	20,000
Bessie-Snake River Road	20,000
Marvel Creek Trail	5,000
Vault Creek Road (3 miles)	3,000
Mason Creek Road (5 miles)	5,000
Grant Creek Road (4 miles)	4,000
Nenana-Mission Road	4,000
Cripple-Cripple Mountain	20,000

Seldovia-McDonald Spit	75,000
Total	343,000

OLNES-LIVENGOOD

Estimated to complete $215,000

This road is necessary, indeed absolutely necessary, for the development of the extremely promising Livengood mining region. The work was commenced with public-works funds; $295,000 of such funds having been spent thereon. It is estimated that $215,000 is necessary to complete the work. This project is surely entitled to a high degree of priority and should be undertaken without delay. The road can be completed economically in 18 months from the date the work begins.

SHELTON-DAHL

Estimated to complete $35,000

This project was estimated to cost in the beginning $170,000, and an allotment from public-works funds of $135,000 was obtained and spent. The project provides for the construction of 6 miles of tram as an extension of the Nome-

Shelton tram, a ferry over the Kuzitrin River, and the construction of 10 miles of tractor road east of the river. Completion of this road will provide easier access to a known productive placer field, reducing the present freight rate thus enabling operators to work lower-grade gravels and thus, in turn, provide employment for a very considerable number of persons in an industry where competition does not exist.

KANTISHNA-PARK BOUNDARY

Estimated to complete..... $50,000

This project calls for the construction of 6 miles of road, and when completed it will connect with the road which traverses Mount McKinley National Park. The completion of this road will unquestionably stimulate the Kantishna mining district, which is one of great promise. The Kantishna district is the only district in Alaska which holds excellent prospects of being developed for its silver ore. The road would be an important feeder to the Alaska Railroad, a point worthy of consideration. The road can be completed within 5 months after construction begins.

TALKEETNA-CACHE CREEK

Estimated to complete..... $150,000

The district supplied by this road affords employment in the placer fields for 100 men during the summer months. The present poor road has been in existence for 14 years as a passable wagon road. It is planned to improve it to a truck-road standard and to extend it to existing placer operations, enabling operators to materially reduce freight costs, thus again permitting the working of lower-grade gravels and an increase in employment and additional tonnage for the Alaska Railroad. The plans call for construction of the road in a period of 15 months after commencement of work thereon.

CANTWELL-VALDEZ CREEK

Estimated to complete..... $345,000

This road will connect the very important mining district of Valdez Creek with the Alaska Railroad. The building of the road is certain to furnish additional traffic to the Alaska Railroad, and thus make the railroad what it was designed to be, a large factor in the development of the country through which it passes. Some money, approximately $25,000, from public-works funds has been expended on the project for bridge construction. The road is of distinct merit. An estimate has been made that 30 months will be required for construction, embracing three summer working seasons.

HOT SPRINGS ROAD SYSTEM

Estimated to complete..... $75,000

An allotment of $10,000 from P. W. A. funds has been expended on this project for preliminary construction of a tractor road. Recent developments in placer mining in the area indicate the necessity for a truck road, and the estimate has been increased accordingly. The road will serve a producing placer camp which has been handicapped due to lack of adequate transportation. If the work is started on June 1, it may be completed within 16 months.

WILLOW CREEK SYSTEM

Estimate to complete..... $80,000

The Willow Creek system supplies an outstanding mineral region of Alaska with the necessary roads, but the system is far from being complete. The additional amount estimated, $80,000, allows for the improvement and graveling of the Willow Creek-Lucky Shot Road and for the construction of the proposed 2-mile Willow Creek Spur Road, which will serve new lode properties now having no road. This road system also is a feeder to the Alaska Railroad. Work can be completed in one working season.

TAKOTNA-NIXON FORK

Estimated to complete..... $150,000

The town of Takotna is situated 65 miles up the Takotna River from the Kuskokwim River. It supplies the entire mining community in the vicinity of Takotna and Ophir and is the terminus of a road leading to Ophir and the Yukon watershed. The Takotna River on its upper reaches is a very unreliable means of transportation due to swift water and bars. In dry seasons it is impossible to get freight by river to Takotna, and in several instances spring freight has had to lay at McGrath until November and then has been hauled on the snow. The first 20 miles of the Takotna River—from McGrath to the mouth of the Nixon Fork—is always navigable. It is proposed to build a road 15 miles long from Takotna to this point, doing away with 45 miles of very uncertain river travel and making this community accessible at all times in summer. The work can be completed within two working seasons of 5 months each.

POORMAN-RUBY

Estimated to complete..... $200,000

The construction of a passable wagon road 56 miles between these two points was recently completed, reducing the freight rate from 12 to 6 cents a pound. It is proposed to improve and gravel this road, which will further reduce the freight rate to not more than 2 cents a pound. This will allow lower grade ground to be worked and stimulate gold production in this vicinity, leading again to material increase in employment in working the low-grade placer grounds which will be made available for operation by the road. Work can be completed in two working seasons of 5 months each.

M'CARTHY ROAD SYSTEM

Estimated to complete..... $84,000

This road system is connected with the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad near its terminus at the Kennecott mine—the point of departure of the railroad being at the town of McCarthy. These roads serve operating placer mines which have been worked for years, and lead to numerous promising gold-lode prospects. A large part of the expenditure in this region has been made in building and maintaining a bridge across the Nizina River. This bridge is absolutely necessary. In former years it was crossed by fording or swimming, and many lives were lost. No large-scale operations can be carried on under such circumstances. The work may be completed in two working seasons. This system embraces much-needed construction to supply road facilities for the important Bremner mining district.

ILIAMNA BAY-ILIAMNA LAKE

Estimated to complete..... $50,000

This is a part of a transport route to connect Bristol Bay with the Gulf of Alaska through Cook Inlet. The use of this route saves approximately 2,000 miles of travel by sea around the end of the Alaska Peninsula. The construction of this road, coupled as it is with travel by boat on Iliamna Lake and on the Kvichak River into Bristol Bay, gives facilities for a great saving in transportation costs. The route is already extensively used. The work may be completed in one working season.

NEWHALON-LAKE CLARK

Estimated to complete..... $40,000

This project will require the construction of 7 miles of road providing a portage from Lake Iliamna to Lake Clark. There is a large native settlement on Lake Clark; at the present all supplies for the Lake Clark area are packed across this portage on men's backs. Work can be completed within 6 months.

GULKANA-NABESNA

Estimated to complete..... $245,000

Estimated cost, $450,000; allotted from public-works funds, $205,000; balance unallotted, $245,000. The balance required will complete this road to one of the most promising hard-rock sections in Alaska. One mine is now milling $1,000 per day. According to the Geological Survey, there are many possibilities of additional deposits being found. With the completion of the road, the district will see an influx of prospectors who will undoubtedly prove the prediction of the geologists. Work can be completed within 18 months from commencement, provided it is started at the beginning of a working season.

GOODNEWS BAY-PLATINUM CREEK

Estimated to complete..... $35,000

This project provides for the construction of 9 miles of road connecting placer platinum mines with ocean boats at Goodnews Bay. One of the larger mining companies has tentatively agreed to provide the balance of the funds required above this estimate for completion. Work can be completed within 6 months.

CHISTOCHENA-SLATE CREEK

Estimated to complete..... $40,000

This provides for the improvement of an existing trail, 40 miles in length, to provide for freighting by tractors to serve a producing placer-mining area. Work can be completed within 6 months.

COLORADO STATION-WELLS MINE

Estimated to complete..... $75,000

This project provides for the construction of 10 miles of road from the Alaska Railroad to a lode mine now being developed on a very considerable scale. The road is an absolute necessity for the mineral development. The working of the lode property in question, now apparently amply financed, will give employment ultimately to several hundred men and will not throw anybody out of employment. The road is eminently justified from an economic standpoint. It has been estimated that by commencing work on the project at the beginning of the season the work can be completed within 18 months.

KENAI LAKE-KENAI-HOMER

Estimated to complete..... $1,100,000

This is one of the most important road projects in all of Alaska. A road has heretofore been built from Seward to the east end of Kenai Lake and from Moose Pass, which is approximately 12 miles from the east end of Kenai Lake to Sunrise and Hope on Turnagain Arm. A branch of this road has been constructed—the construction is not completed—to the west end of Kenai Lake. From the west end of Kenai Lake the plan is to build the road to the town of Kenai on Cook Inlet and thence south to a small settlement called Homer, on Kachemak Bay. This would open up and make available for settlement some of the best agricultural land in Alaska. It should be noted here that the so-called "missing link" between the east end of Kenai Lake and Moose Pass is now under construction. With the completion of the "missing link" and the building of the Kenai Lake-Kenai-Homer road, all of that very large region will be rendered accessible to settlers, and, more important, the settlers will have access to the market which will be afforded through Seward and through other towns along the Alaska Railroad. It is to be noted here that Seward is situated on the shores of Resurrection Bay and is the southerly terminus of the Alaska Railroad and is the northerly terminus of the main steamship line which serves Alaska. Out of Seward runs another steamship along the shores of the Alaska Peninsula and into Bristol Bay, as well as smaller motor vessels to other parts of that general region. The Kenai Peninsula district has probably attracted more attention as a farming region in recent years than almost any other part of Alaska, except the Matanuska Valley in which the Government has recently aided in establishing a number of farm families. The climate of Kenai Peninsula is comparatively mild, the soil is deep and fertile, and the rainfall sufficient without being excessive. It is reported that 58 families moved into this region last year immediately north of Homer. At the present time, however, the country is not accessible because, except for a very short distance out of Homer, no roads exist. A farmer away from a road on the Kenai Peninsula is so effectively isolated that the settlement of the country cannot proceed until the road is built.

Moreover, the adjoining waters of Cook Inlet and Kachemak Bay contain plentiful supplies of salmon and herring. The packing season for both species of fish is so short that the settlement of farmers in the region would aid greatly to a balanced economic life. The construction of this road is absolutely necessary for the development of the district to be served, and the district in question is one which, according to all present indications, would be rapidly settled and would maintain in comfort a considerable population if the road were built. The chamber of commerce of the village of Seldovia, situated on the south shore of Kachemak Bay, has received hundreds of letters from prospective settlers inquiring about conditions in the region, and more than 1,300 people already residing in the district who would be directly or indirectly benefited by the road have joined in a petition for its construction.

The period of construction of this road would probably cover three working seasons in order to do the work economically and without the establishment of an unduly large working force.

FAIRBANKS-CHENA HOT SPRINGS SYSTEM

Estimated to complete..... $530,000

This route is now supplied by winter train and is entirely inaccessible in summer except for airplanes. Agitation for a summer road has been going on for 16 years. The construction of such a road would provide access to a known health resort and to producing placer fields, thus providing increased employment. If work is commenced at the beginning of any season it may be completed economically in three seasons or within a total period of 30 months.

RAMPART-LIVENGOOD-CHENA HOT SPRINGS

No complete engineering data is available, and therefore no reliable estimate of the ultimate cost can be given.

While the Fairbanks-Chena Hot Springs system is stated separately and the Livengood road is considered, and properly so, as an individual project, in reality the Fairbanks-Chena Hot Springs-Livengood system should all be included in one set-up of roads for that region. It is realized, of course, that not all of it can be put into construction at once, so particular emphasis has been placed, first, upon the completion of the Livengood road, and, second, the Fairbanks-Chena Hot Springs project. But ultimately Rampart should be connected with the others, and when that is done the larger part of the road-building program for that particular region will be well taken care of.

NENANA-BONNIFIELD COUNTRY

The Bonnifield country has definite possibilities for both placer and lode development. The Alaska road system should be extended into that district. Such a road, like many others described, is bound to lead to largely increased mining operations and thus to increased employment.

SNAG POINT-LAKE ALEKNAGIK

Estimated to complete..... $125,000

This proposed road would connect Snag Point on Bristol Bay with Lake Aleknagik, out of which Hood River flows, thus more adequately opening to development a mining and fishing region. Recently a road was built between Snag Point and Kanakanak which would be extended on to Lake Aleknagik by the proposed construction. The population of the region is increasing, and by reason of the wealth of its fisheries and prospects inland for mineral development there is ample justification for construction of the road desired.

NAKNEK-EGEGIK

Estimated to complete..... $200,000

Naknek and Egegik are settlements on the shores of Bristol Bay. Large salmon-packing operations are carried on at each place. Traveling in the summertime is confined to small boats, either those using sails or powerboats. No shelter is available for 40 miles. In this connection it is worthy of note that commercial fishing in Bristol Bay is confined to sailboats, and no powerboats are permitted to be used. A reindeer company owns a herd of approximately 5,000 reindeer stationed at Naknek. The surplus deer of this herd could be quite extensively used by the people employed in the salmon-packing operations, but under present conditions no market can be obtained by reason of lack of transportation. If the road were built, the reindeer owners would be able to sell their meat to the canneries. A road through this part of the country would be easy to build, since it is mostly flat country, containing some graveled hills, with no heavy rockwork to be done and no large streams to be crossed. Many sturdy pioneers already make their homes in that region. Their comfort and material welfare would be greatly enhanced and the population of the district enlarged by the building of the proposed road.

GEORGETOWN-FLAT (50 MILES)

Estimated to complete..... $500,000

The construction of this road would effect a saving of 2 cents per pound on all freight going into the Flat district (annual gold production over $400,000) and make it possible for lower-grade placers to be worked. More than 1,000 tons of freight were required last year. It would also provide much cheaper transportation for placer workings on the immediate route and make accessible promising quicksilver prospects. It would allow the Flat district to receive freight from 2 to 4 weeks earlier in the spring, and 2 to 4 weeks later in the fall. Its construction would solve the problem now being agitated of changing the course of the Iditarod River to permit small boats to reach Iditarod City. At present they are obliged to discharge their cargo on the banks three-fourths of a mile from the warehouses except at high-water stages. If work is commenced about June 1 of any year it can be completed in three working seasons, or within a period of 30 months.

NOME-COUNCIL

Estimated to complete---------- $200,000

The Nome-Council Road is a road commencing at Nome extending back to the foothills and then taking an easterly direction crossing the Flambeau, Eldorado, and Bonanza Rivers to Solomon River, up that river across the Divide to the Casa De Paga River, and thence on to Council on the Niukluk River, a total distance of about 75 miles. Out of Nome a road now exists about 43 miles and the balance of the route is supplied, after a fashion, by a sled road. The motor road should be completed to Council in order to furnish adequate transportation for that entire region. All of the rivers crossed have been and still are producing placer gold and some of them, like Solomon River and Ophir Creek, have produced many millions. With respect to many of them, on account of the existing high cost of operation due in part to high cost of transportation, only the high-grade ground was worked. Here again is a field for operating low-grade ground and thus furnishing employment to many people.

NOME-TELLER

Estimated to complete---------- $360,000

Teller is quite an important settlement on Port Clarence—the harbor is measurably protected. The distance between Teller and Nome is approximately 80 miles. A road would be of very much benefit to all of the people of that region. At the present time a road has been built out of Nome going by way of Little Creek and turning westward across Snake River to the Third Beach line of Sunset Creek, a distance of 12 miles, which is the end of the road at present. The road should be extended westward across Penny, Cripple, and Sinrock Rivers to the Bluestone and Gold Run Creeks, and thence on to Teller. All of the creeks mentioned have been producing gold for more than a quarter of a century but only the richest spots could be mined under the conditions that have existed in regard to roads.

COPPER CENTER-CHICKALOON-PALMER

The Richardson Highway, extending from Valdez on the southerly seaboard of Alaska to Fairbanks in the interior, passes through the settlement of Copper Center, about 103 miles north of Valdez. The Anchorage-Matanuska Valley region is supplied by a local road system recently materially enlarged and expanded. No connection exists, however, between the Matanuska Valley-Anchorage region and the main highway system of Alaska, of which the Richardson-Steese Highway is the principal part. Eventually a road should be built from Copper Center by way of Tazlina River over the summit, which is not high, down the Chickaloon, and thence on to Palmer, there to connect wtih the Anchorage-Matanuska roads. (No estimate is given of the cost because engineering data are not available.)

CORDOVA-THOMPSON PASS

Cordova is a substantial city on the southern seaboard of the main body of Alaska. It is the seaboard terminus of the Copper River & Northwestern Railway. Eighty miles to the north lies the city of Valdez, which is the seaboard terminus of the Richardson Highway. In order to give the Cordova region access by highway to the interior of Alaska, a road, if geographically feasible, should connect Cordova with the Richardson Highway, and that connection can probably be made at or near Thompson Pass, about 26 miles northerly from Valdez. At the present time no sufficient survey of such a connection has been made to determine whether the building of such a road is practicable, but many who are acquainted with the country through which the road will pass say that it is. Therefore it is included in this list of road projects for Alaska.

BEAVER-CABO-LITTLE SQUAW

Estimated to complete---------- $290,000

Total estimated cost $300,000, of which $10,000 has already been allotted from public-works funds. A winter sled road now serves placer operators and quartz prospects in this district. Recent developments indicate that prominent mining concerns have done sufficient work on one of the lode prospects to warrant a continuation of expenditure probably leading to actual mining. This will necessitate summer traffic to this district. It is proposed to construct a summer tractor road for this purpose at a cost of $300,000. The total distance is 120 miles. If work is commenced at the beginning of any season it may be completed economically within three seasons.

M'CARTY-CANADIAN BOUNDARY

Estimated to complete---------- $2,250,000

This proposed road is part of the so-called International Highway through British Columbia and Yukon Territory, Canada, into Alaska to connect with the present Richardson Highway in Alaska at McCarty. The road is described in the Report of the Commission to Study the Proposed Highway to Alaska. This project is of the greatest importance to Alaska as a whole, and if constructed under a general agreement with Canada to construct the portion of the route through that country necessary to reach the United States, it should be given very early priority. It seems likely that not less than four summer seasons will be required to complete the Alaskan sections requiring 182 miles of new construction accessible now at only two points. It seems also probable that the same length of time will be necessary for the construction of the proposed highway which lies in British Columbia and in Yukon Territory.

The construction of the McCarty-Canadian boundary road in, of, and by itself is amply justified and construction should be undertaken immediately even though the remainder of the International Highway is not built at the present time, for the reason that the building of this road, which lies entirely in Alaska, will make accessible for development enormous areas of placer-mining ground, some of which has been worked for years, and will make available for exploitation and development large areas of what is generally referred to as low-grade ground, thus very largely extending placer operations and leading to greatly increased employment. One feature of road building in Alaska is that the construction of most of the roads under consideration will not only give employment during the construction period but the building will make available for development large areas of mining country as well as agricultural lands, and in the mining country alone it is estimated that the building of the roads will give employment to at least 2,000 additional men for many years to come. Hence, the benefits of the building of the roads here recommended are of very large scope and extend indefinitely in the future. In this connection it should be noted that, according to a report of the Department of Agriculture, the building of this road will make available and accessible for settlement approximately 750,000 acres of the best agricultural land in Alaska located in the Forty-mile country. The building of this road would give direct road connection with the very important city of Dawson in Yukon Territory, Canada, since an existent low-grade road extends westerly from Dawson to a point very close to the boundary between Yukon Territory and Alaska.

In addition to its local benefits, as above indicated, the McCarty-Canadian boundary road is an integral part of the proposed British Columbia-Yukon-Alaska Highway.

INTERNATIONAL HIGHWAY

A road already exists from the southerly boundary of British Columbia to Hazelton in that Province which is approximately 830 miles north of the city of Vancouver, British Columbia, and 882 miles north of the city of Seattle, Wash. Of the International Highway there remains to be built approximately 520 miles in British Columbia, 480 miles in Yukon Territory, and 182 miles in Alaska. The total mileage thus remaining for construction is 1,182. It is estimated that the total cost of this construction for a coach road with gravel surface and transversable in all weathers is approximately $12,000,000, though higher estimates have been made.

The highway to Alaska has been referred to as "visionary." The term is an inapt one, though it is true that only men of vision have ever accomplished anything constructive in the world from the dawn of recorded history until the present time. In the sense that one must have vision in order to understand the possibilities of any great highway, the appellation may be justified but not otherwise.

The father of the International Highway idea is Donald MacDonald, of Fairbanks, Alaska, an exceptionally capable engineer who has been for some years employed in that capacity with the Alaska Road Commission. To the vision, energy, and industry of Mr. MacDonald must be ascribed in ample measure the present state of development of the idea of the highway, and to the impetus which he gave to the plan and the actual reconnaissance which he made over the several alternate routes of that part of the road to be built in Alaska must be attributed in equally full measure the definite steps which have been taken toward its consummation.

Following Mr. MacDonald's lead, the Legislature of Alaska made a small appropriation for promotion of the highway, and in 1930 Congress passed an act (Public, No. 228, 71st Cong.) authorizing the President to designate three special commissioners to cooperate with representatives of the Dominion of Canada in a study regarding the construction of the highway, with a view of ascertaining whether such a highway is feasible and economically practicable, and providing that upon completion of such study the result should be reported to Congress. Accordingly the President appointed as the American members of the Commission Mr. Herbert H. Rice, of Detroit, Mich., chairman; Mr. Ernest Walker Sawyer, then Assistant to the Secretary of the Interior; and Maj. (now colonel) Malcolm Elliott, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, then President of the Alaska Road Commission. These commissioners, in cooperation with the Canadian authorities, carried on the necessary investigations, and under date of May 1, 1933, the American commissioners made their report to the President, who in turn transmitted it to Congress. To the engineering skill of Colonel Elliott and to the exhaustive work which he did, and which was done under his direction, in investigation of the project must, I believe, be largely ascribed the very lucid and comprehensive report made on the project, in which the road was found to be feasible and that it could be built at reasonable cost, estimated in the report at $12,000,000, and setting forth facts indicating that the construction of the road was economically practicable and, indeed, justifiable. This is said of Colonel Elliott's work without detracting in the least from the very valuable services given by Mr. Rice and Mr. Sawyer, the other American members of the Commission. In the report, on page 41, we find the Commission saying, with respect to the building immediately of that part of the road which lies in Alaska, the following:

> While the objective should be the ultimate completion of the entire route, the local benefits to be derived from early completion of individual sections should not be ignored. Thus the early completion of the Fairbanks-Dawson road on its own merits for the purpose of developing the intermediate territory and providing a much-needed connection between the two communities as well as a vital link in the proposed through highway is considered highly desirable.

Before this report had been made, most Alaskans believed that the part of the road to be built in Alaska should be constructed without delay. This was warmly advocated by Mr. MacDonald and by many others, including myself. Accordingly, shortly after I became Delegate from Alaska in March 1933, I introduced in Congress a bill calling for the construction immediately of the part of the road in Alaska and for the building of the entire highway as soon as proper arrangements with the authorities of the Dominion of Canada could be made. No action was taken on this measure during the Seventy-third Congress, and so it was reintroduced in both House and Senate in the Seventy-fourth Congress. The measure, after some amendments, particularly one which eliminated an appropriation for the immediate construction of the Alaska portion of the road, passed both Houses and was approved by the President on August 26, 1935.

The act so passed by Congress and approved by the President requests the President, through such channels as he may deem proper, to negotiate and enter into an agreement or agreements between the Governments of the United States and the Dominion of Canada for the survey, location, and construction of a highway to connect the Pacific northwestern part of the continental United States with British Columbia and Yukon Territory, in the Dominion of Canada, and the Territory of Alaska; and that upon the completion of the negotiations and the execution of the agreement or agreements in the act authorized to designate such existing agency of the Government of the United States as he may select for the purpose, or such officials or agency as he may specially appoint or create for the purposes of the act, to carry on the work of survey and location of the route for the highway and of the construction thereof after such route shall have been determined and approved by the President. The act, as above noted, carried no appropriation, but it is clear evidence of the intent and desire of Congress and of the administration to have the road built, provided, of course, suitable and proper arrangements can be made for the construction of that part of the road which lies in the Dominion of Canada. It will be noted from the figures given above that nearly 1,000 miles of the road yet remain to be built is in British Columbia and in Yukon Territory and less than 200 miles of it in Alaska.

The construction of the proposed highway to Alaska is in entire harmony with the road construction now going on through Mexico and Central America and projected ultimately to reach at least to the Panama Canal—a truly Pan American highway. No Territory of the United States except the Panama Canal Zone, which can be adequately served by sea, lies to the southward, but to the northwest of the United States lies a region of great actual, and still greater potential, value and in area more than twice the size of Texas; in fact, so large that many of the residents of the United States fail to comprehend it. As one very eminent Member of Congress observed to me, there are 10 times as many strong reasons for aiding in the construction of the highway to Alaska as there are for aiding in the construction of a highway through Mexico and Central America to the Panama Canal. For in the one case we connect up with and we serve our own citizens, while in the other no citizens of ours in the lands to be joined by the road will receive any material benefit. No system of road construction in Alaska will be complete or fully effective without the building of this great highway. The internal road plan for Alaska and the highway to Alaska ought to be considered as component parts of an indivisible thing. If we have our system of internal roads, and then if these roads can be reached from the United States by a road northerly through British Columbia and Yukon Territory into Alaska, it is not difficult to realize the profoundly stimulating effect which the traffic northerly to the Territory will have upon Alaska and incidentally, equally great effect and perhaps greater immediately beneficial effect upon British Columbia and Yukon Territory.

It is not necessary, Mr. Speaker, to draw upon the imagination in order to foresee what the system of roadbuilding which I have attempted to present here would do for Alaska. And may I here remind the Members of the House that with the very large benefits certain to follow the building of the International Highway and the extension and enlargement of roads in the interior of Alaska, the American citizens who will benefit most largely by such construction are not those who live in Alaska but those who reside in the United States, for they, through the building of these roads, will be able to find for themselves new frontiers of opportunity, of satisfaction, and of wealth. One has only to read the data as to the number of American motor cars which pour yearly southward into Mexico over the highways recently constructed in order to understand the absolute inevitability of a like flood of people to Alaska over the British Columbia-Yukon-Alaska Highway when built—people going not into a strange land but into a part of their own country, of which most of them know little, and there finding, as I am certain they will find, economic and other attractions which will detain a considerable percentage of them in Alaska and make them permanent residents of the Territory.

Mr. Speaker, statehood for Alaska may not be so far off after all. When one who knows Alaska considers what may reasonably be expected to follow the construction of an adequate system of roads to Alaska and in Alaska, the construction of a like system in the immediate future of air fields and air facilities, a reasonable amount spent in improvement of our harbors for the protection of commerce and navigation, it requires no effort of the vision to see Alaska being admitted as a State in this present generation.

BEHIND THE POLITICAL SMOKE SCREEN

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by Senator GEORGE W. NORRIS, of Nebraska, over the Columbia Broadcasting System, Sunday, June 14, 1936. Senator NORRIS' topic was Behind the Political Smoke Screen. He spoke from the studios of WJSV, Columbia's station for the Nation's Capital:

Some eminent gentlemen behind a smoke screen at Cleveland have been engaged in adopting a national platform and nominating a candidate for President of the United States. The unbounded enthusiasm of that convention upon the appearance before it of ex-President Hoover demonstrates beyond a shadow of doubt that the convention was in favor of Hoover and Hoover principles of government. If they had carried out their wishes and expressed their true sentiment, if they had had the courage of their convictions, they would have nominated Mr. Hoover for President. They knew, however, that the Hoover lesson of despair, of failure in governmental affairs, is still too fresh in the minds of the American people for them to succeed in any such reactionary program. They cheered to the limit Hoover's description of European methods. They gave unstinted approval to his idea of Europe. They were undoubtedly right in that. Hoover ought to know about Europe. He lived there long enough. From his own experience he is far better qualified to speak of European conditions than he is to discuss American questions. The American people have not forgotten that it was Hoover who, while he was President of the United States, tipped off to our European debtors the idea that they should repudiate the debts they owed America. It was Hoover's idea, in the interest of foreign debtors, that culminated in the repudiation of more than $11,000,000,000 of foreign debts.

The American people have not forgotten the dreary picture of the Hoover administration. They remember how it failed. The chicken in every pot, the two cars in every garage, pictured by Hoover, will not satisfy the hunger of the unemployed or bring relief to suffering mothers and ragged children, who can so clearly trace their suffering and their misery to Hoover's unfulfilled prophecies. No amount of fantastic dancing around that mysterious corner, looking for prosperity, can change the situation. As the smoke screen at Cleveland gradually rises, the American people will realize that though the voice of that convent.on is Jacob's voice, the hands are the hands of Esau.

How those eminent gentlemen cheered the ex-President, when in glittering generalities he discoursed on the precious value of human liberty! How they applauded when he praised the Supreme Court for its action in nullifying New Deal measures designed to bring relief to a suffering people! His comment on these Supreme Court decisions brought unlimited joy to those eminent gentlemen at Cleveland, particularly when they recalled its most recent decision which nullified any attempt to limit the hours of labor by any of the States of the Union. The same Court had practically held, only a few days before, that the Federal Government did not have this power and, therefore, the sacred doctrine of liberty had been preserved, and the freedom of the man or the woman to enter into a contract with big business to engraft human slavery upon the toilers of the Nation had been upheld.

How precious is such a liberty to the humble toiler, faced with ruin and starvation, thinking of the sufferings of his wife and children, which protects him in his right to sign himself and his posterity into human bondage?

These eminent gentlemen did not give consideration to the fact that other unemployed millions will be deprived of a living wage by the precious liberty exercised by the few who sign on the dotted line at the demand of organized monopoly and human greed!

When any monopoly or combination is able to control economic conditions so as to compel our people to sign away their right and their liberty of action, then the rights of society must be preserved by legal means, in order to restrain the oppression of the powerful over the weak. To preserve our Constitution and to preserve our democratic form of Government, such reactionaries as these must be kept from control of the situation.

The keynoter at that convention had no constructive note in his address. He devoted all of his great abilities to faultfinding and to criticism which was neither just nor constructive. He said, it is true, he himself had voted in the Senate for some of the New Deal measures, but the people of this country should not charge that up against the New Deal because, in the same speech, the Senator afterward apologized for such votes. In opening his address before these eminent gentlemen at Cleveland, he enumerated very beautifully in a general way some of the economic reforms he desired to bring about, and then he asked the question, "How can we achieve this objective?"

He never answered that question, but the answer is very simple, and for the benefit of these eminent gentlemen behind the smoke screen at Cleveland, let me say that the way to achieve the moral, intellectual, and spiritual objectives of our people is simply to reelect Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The very able gentleman who was permanent chairman of that convention delivered a beautiful speech of glittering generalities, filled with criticism, but without a single constructive idea. All of these gentlemen failed to suggest a single remedy for existing conditions. They all admit that at the time Hoover went out and Roosevelt went in, the country was in a deplorable condition. Any fair-minded man must admit that it was on the verge of destruction. Something had to be done, but these men, leaders of a great party, have failed, even by innuendo, to suggest any remedy for the depression.

If the New Deal is wrong on the unemployment question, for instance, what suggestions have they to make to solve this perplexing problem? If the New Deal has not functioned properly, what have they to offer that will function properly? What specific remedies have they to offer to bring relief to a suffering people?

Constructive criticism should always be welcomed. However, men who do nothing but throw monkey wrenches into the machinery, without offering any remedy, are not making constructive criticisms. The keynoter in that convention, for instance, promised the people that if his crowd were successful, it would reduce taxation. Everybody concedes that a reduction in taxes would be a good thing, but just how and where shall the reduction take place?

This keynoter admitted they should feed the hungry and take care of the unemployed. Does he expect to do these things without money? Can they be done without taxing the people? If so, give us the formula. Come out from behind the smoke screen, and tell the barefaced truth to the American people.

When President Roosevelt took control of this Government on the 4th of March 1933 he was confronted with a condition never before faced by mortal man. Every remedy of Hoover had failed; every promise he had made to the American people remained unfulfilled. Banks were closing all over the country. Unemployment was increasing at a rapid rate. Business was at an absolute standstill. But it must be admitted that Mr. Hoover, as he said in that memorable campaign, had preserved the gold standard. To him this was more precious than the welfare of his people. Banks might fail, business might go into the hands of a receiver, the army of unemployed might increase, mobs driven to desperation by cold and hunger might be organized, yet he had preserved the gold standard.

When President Roosevelt took over the helm of government he had no precedents to guide his footsteps. He had to sail the ship of state into an uncharted sea. Naturally, he made mistakes. In setting up, almost overnight, machinery to cover the entire country from ocean to ocean, necessarily there were in it many cogs of inefficiency and some of graft.

However, as one of the results of the Roosevelt administration, the banks, for instance, were put on a firm foundation, and today a bank failure has become almost a thing unknown except in bitter memory. But we see now a great combination of bankers, having had their own business preserved by governmental action, uniting to prevent the Government from doing anything to help anyone else. Yet it was these same bankers of the United States in the first days of the depression who came, hat in hand, to the Government, begging for help.

They were not opposed then to having the Government go into business, but when they had been placed upon an honest footing, when their own business had been saved from ruin by Roosevelt's action, then many of them, with greedy hearts and itching palms, combined to destroy every action of the New Deal.

When Roosevelt took the helm in March 1933 the farmer was in a deplorable condition. The men who produce the food we eat and the raw products out of which our clothing is made were in practical financial ruin. All promises of Hoover had been tried. They had all failed. Every remedy suggested by Mr. Hoover proved disastrous when put to the test. When for the first time in "3 long years" the farmers were beginning to get the benefit of New Deal policies, the Supreme Court nullified the Agricultural Adjustment Act and brought joy and jubilation to the hearts of these eminent gentlemen behind the smoke screen at Cleveland. I do not mean by that they had any malice toward the farmer. I do not mean to say they were not interested in the well-being of the farmer. But I do mean that if they could get any partisan advantage from the nullification of any of the New Deal measures designed to help the farmer, they would be jubilant beyond expression.

And this brings me to the proposition which I have often stated, both publicly and privately. I get it from my experience of more than 30 years in Congress. The one greatest evil of government is partisanship. It was condemned originally by Washington, the Father of his Country. The spirit of party, as George Washington said, if unrestrained, will eventually burst into flame and destroy the very foundation of the Government itself.

So, after all, these eminent gentlemen behind the smoke screen in Cleveland to a great extent were imbued with a partisan spirit which is more or less common to all of us. But they have carried this party feeling so far, they are so completely controlled by it, they would see the farmer fail rather than give any credit to any other party or organization which has been instrumental in bringing him relief.

This was clearly exemplified when the keynoter of that convention offered an apology in his speech for having voted for some of the New Deal measures. When he voted for them he undoubtedly believed in them. But, as he himself said, it was early in the session and at that time the approaching national convention was so far off that it was unthought of and his party spirit had not asserted itself. If these partisan gentlemen want to be fair, if they have supported some of the New Deal measures, why are they not frank enough to approve them instead of offering an apology? When the Supreme Court nullified the Farm Relief Act these same partisan gentlemen went into hysterics of joy because a New Deal measure which had brought relief had failed to receive the approval of the Supreme Court.

Let me enumerate some of the acts passed by Congress on the recommendation of President Roosevelt: The Holding Company Act, acts for farm relief, the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, the Railroad Retirement Act, Securities and Exchange Act, Farm Credit Administration Act, Home Owners' Loan Act, Federal Housing Act, Federal Deposit Insurance Act, Social Securities Act, Rural Electrification Act, and many others.

Will these eminent gentlemen behind the smoke screen at Cleveland, if given the power of government, repeal any of these beneficial laws? Will they, for instance, nullify the Holding Company Act, by which people are given relief from an autocracy and a monopoly of the greatest and most unholy combination ever put together by human hands? Will Mr. Hoover and his vociferous admirers, behind the smoke screen, repeal the Federal Housing Act? Will they repeal the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, an act which, when completely carried out and applied to our inland waterways, will give to America the greatest and cheapest method of inland water transportation ever devised by man; a system of navigation that will make it possible to carry the products of Minnesota, for example, by water to the Gulf of Mexico, to Omaha, Nebr., or to Knoxville, Tenn.; a law that, in addition to its immense navigation possibilities, will hold in subjugation and control the enormous floods which heretofore have done such great damage in the Tennessee Valley; a law which already, through the instrumentality of one great dam, holding back flood waters amounting to 3,500,000 acre-feet, has saved many millions of damages which would otherwise have been suffered by the residents of the States in that great fertile plain; a law that, as an incident to navigation and flood control, has brought relief to millions of people who have been suffering under the hardships and injustices of an unconscionable Power Trust? Will the men behind the smoke screen repeal that law?

Will these eminent gentlemen, if given the power, repeal the Rural Electrification Act, by which the farmer and the farmer's wife are given relief from the drudgery and hardships of farm life hitherto imposed upon them by an unjust and unconscionable monopoly?

Will these eminent gentlemen repeal the laws providing for the public-works program, by which the people of the entire country have been given assistance in making internal improvements? Will they repeal the Roosevelt law passed for the benefit of the farmer after the Supreme Court had so ruthlessly set aside the Agricultural Adjustment Act? Will these eminent gentlemen behind the smoke screen at Cleveland, if given the power, repeal the Social Security Act, which gives pensions to millions of our aged citizens? Will these eminent gentlemen continue to shout with joy every time the Supreme Court nullifies any one of these beneficent laws? Will they continue to shed crocodile tears every time any of the New Deal measures receives judicial sanction and approval? Why not be explicit? Why not be concrete? In condemning the New Deal, why not make a bill of particulars?

In a nutshell, the efforts of President Roosevelt have been to put some humanity on the statute books. These measures which I have enumerated are only examples of this attempt to make government human. The people of the country must not forget that in this program of humanity in which President Roosevelt is engaged, he has incurred the animosity and bitter hatred of all monopoly, of all combinations, of all special interests, which are trying to get a financial advantage out of legislation and which are financially interested in shifting the burden of government from their own shoulders to those of the poor, whose rights they have so long trampled under foot.

One of the great reforms now pending which comes from the earnest recommendation of President Roosevelt is the one which has to do with the taxing of undistributed profits by corporations which have so far to a very great extent escaped through a legal loophole from paying their just share of income taxes. The eminent gentlemen behind the screen at Cleveland are all opposed to this reform measure. The interests behind them have so long escaped their just share of the tax burden that they are alarmed when Roosevelt undertakes to stop up the loopholes that have made it possible in the past for selfish interests to shift the burden of taxes from the rich to the poor. This is not a partisan question. There are unnumbered thousands of Republicans who are behind the President in his noble attempt to bring happiness and comfort to the firesides of millions of our citizens. There are many Democrats who are opposed to this program. They will give secret help and assistance to these eminent gentlemen behind the smoke screen at every opportunity.

I am not asking support of Roosevelt on a party basis. I am pleading with my countrymen to forget partisanship and come to the support of the man who more than any other man in recent years has stood for the welfare of the common people. I want you to remember that these eminent gentlemen behind the smoke screen at Cleveland will attempt to buy the electorate at the coming presidential election. They will be supplied with funds from special interests which have come into conflict with the reform measures of President Roosevelt. The amount of their subscriptions will, to them, not be material. The only question they will ask is how can their subscriptions be used for the purpose of bringing about the defeat of Mr. Roosevelt.

They will be careful in this coming campaign not to appear in the open, wherever they can conceal their attempts. They will wrap themselves in the American flag, stand on the housetops, cry out for liberty of contract, denounce the Government for going into business, and do everything they can, directly or indirectly, which will enable them to maintain the stronghold they held under Hoover, and upon which Roosevelt has gradually but surely loosened their grasp.

These eminent gentlemen behind the smoke screen in Cleveland adopted a platform. Within the limits of my time I cannot discuss that platform in any detail. A few things in it, mostly glittering generalities, will be approved by fair-minded men. Some things in it are absolutely unworkable, and many things in it are deceptive and so indefinite as to permt of almost any construction. For instance, the platform says, "We advocate a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards." The wildest inflationist who believes in unlimited expansion of the currency and the most narrow-minded stand-pat reactionary who believes in deflation both claim, and I presume believe, that they are advocating a sound currency "to be preserved at all hazards." No man, reasonable or unreasonable, will have any difficulty in standing on that plank. It covers everything, and does not touch anything. Similar misleading planks on almost every subject are found in this platform. We should consider, not only the platform, but the men who made it.

In this connection we should not forget that the leaders of those eminent gentlemen, most of the members of the platform committee, belong to the reactionary element of the party. Some of them have had experience for many years in Congress, and the record shows they have bent all their great abilities in the direction of the protection of monopolistic principles as against the welfare of the common man.

These eminent gentlemen behind the smoke screen at Cleveland nominated a man for President whose greatest asset is that nobody knows him, and nobody knows what he stands for. It does not necessarily follow from this that the nominee is not a good man. But it does mean that if he will not take orders from the undisclosed bosses who made him, then these eminent gentlemen have been deceived. The very fact that reactionary alleged leaders from Maine to California, from Minnesota to Florida, and from all other sections of our great country tumbled over one another to endorse a man they did not know and had never heard of before is conclusive proof that somewhere behind the scene the representatives of special interests issued the commands that percolated down through the reactionary organization to the lieutenants in local control, and they obeyed the recognized voice of their masters.

I think Mr. Landon is entitled to credit for his stand upon the merit system. In his message to the convention he takes a definite stand upon this subject. For this I commend him. But I call attention to the fact that his stand upon the merit system is not binding upon the convention which nominated him. Some of the leaders on the platform committee have shown by their past official activities that they are bitterly opposed to the merit system in all its details.

This is not peculiar to any one party. Both parties have fought the enactment into law of any legislation which would put an effective merit system upon the statute books. This is particularly true of the Post Office Department. That ought to be taken out of politics entirely from top to bottom; and the President, whoever he is, will have to battle the leaders of his own party to bring about this reform.

I am firmly of the belief that President Roosevelt is an ardent believer in the merit system and that he would be glad to have the proper legislation enacted so that the civil-service system may be firmly embedded upon the statute books, and particularly that the Post Office Department, from Postmaster General down to janitor, should be taken completely out of the domain of partisanship. There has been a gradual sentiment developing, I think, even in Congress, that this should be done, and I welcome Mr. Landon's assistance in that direction. I firmly hope and sincerely believe that the next Congress of the United States, under the guidance of President Roosevelt, will enact such a law.

In spite of all the partisan criticism, in spite of the ardent attempts of monopolies, of special interests, and of partisan politicians, I do not believe the American people are going to change horses while crossing the stream of depression. President Roosevelt's sincerity of purpose, the humanity of his heart, his desire to relieve the distressed, his fidelity to the common man will bring to his standard, regardless of politics, all sincere, liberty-loving, patriotic people of America, many of whom love him for the enemies he has made, all of whom have faith in his declared purposes. Out of the New Deal, under his leadership, will come a new civilization for America.

CATEGORIES OF VESSELS LIMITED BY TREATIES, ETC.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 5730) to amend section 3 (b) of an act entitled "An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes", and ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5730) to amend section 3 (b) of an act entitled "An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes", approved March 27, 1934, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, and 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same.

CARL VINSON,
P. H. DREWRY,
GEORGE P. DARROW,
Managers on the part of the House.

DAVID I. WALSH,
M. E. TYDINGS,
FREDERICK HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5730) to amend section 3 (b) of an act entitled "An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes", approved March 27, 1934, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended as to each of such amendments in the accompanying conference report, namely:

On amendments nos. 1, 2, and 3: Restores the proposal of the House that net losses on contracts or subcontracts completed within any income-taxable year shall be allowed as a credit in determining the excess profit, if any, for the next succeeding income-taxable year.

On amendment no. 4: Specifies effective dates of the law as amended, as proposed by the Senate.

This amendment will not affect contracts completed prior to January 1, 1936. The profits on such contracts will be determined as provided in the original Vinson-Trammell Act; that is, on the basis of each separate contract. The amendment will apply to all contracts entered into between March 27, 1934, and the date of the enactment of this amendment, which had not yet been completed on January or before December 31, 1935.

CARL VINSON,
P. H. DREWRY,
GEORGE P. DARROW,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, unless there are some questions, I shall move the previous question on the conference report.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman ought to explain to the House a little about what happened in the conference.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I may state to the gentleman from New York and to the membership of the House that the Senate inserted amendments nos. 1, 2, and 3 to the House bill. At the conference the Senate abandoned its position, and the bill in its present form is exactly as it passed the House except for the Senate amendment clarifying and stating what is meant by the income taxable year.

Mr. SNELL. Which amendment is that?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is amendment no. 4 of the Senate, to which the House conferees agreed.

Mr. SNELL. Just how does that affect the situation?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That requires the Treasury Department to make its calculations as to excess profits from the date of the passage of the original Ship Construction Act of March 27, 1934. The income taxable year on all contracts of the Navy, including whether or not they will have to pay the 10-percent excess profit, are to be calculated from the original act which was approved March 7, 1934.

Mr. SNELL. And will be calculated on the completion of the contracts?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SNELL. Taking in that year's income.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right.

Mr. Speaker, I may state to the gentleman from New York that the amendment was suggested by the Treasury Department to clarify their accounting and to enable them correctly to carry out the intent of Congress in reference to the 10-percent-profit feature.

Mr. SNELL. That is all there is to it.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONDITIONS FOR THE PURCHASE OF SUPPLIES BY THE UNITED STATES, ETC.

Mr. GREENWOOD, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution (Rept. No. 2995), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 549

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3055, a bill to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts, loans, or grants by the United States, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, when the House completes its business this afternoon it is planned to stand in recess until 7:30 this evening to consider the Private Calendar. First on the calendar are five omnibus bills. If they are completed the individual bills will be taken up thereafter. It is important, of course, to maintain a quorum tonight in case any quorum calls are made necessary by objections to bills.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. There is going to be a point of no quorum made tonight, so it would be advisable to have the Members here.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Could we have an understanding that at the night session nothing but bills on the Private Calendar will be considered, that no other business will be taken up?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is the understanding.

Mr. BLANTON. That will be the understanding—we can go away with that assurance?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE IN BITUMINOUS COAL

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 535 for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 12800, a bill to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] such time as he may need.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the rule provides for 2 hours of general debate. Having conferred with certain Members interested, I hope the time can be reduced to 1 hour so we may expedite final action. The bill is quite lengthy and its reading under the 5-minute rule will afford plenty of opportunity for debate.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that time for general debate be reduced from 2 hours to 1 hour.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BACHARACH] advises me he thought there was to be 2 hours of general debate.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We discussed yesterday the proposition of reducing it to 1 hour and I thought that was satisfactory to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, we have had some requests since then which alters the situation. I think it would probably be better to make the time an hour and a half.

Mr. SNELL. I think 1 hour is a little too short a time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that time for general debate be reduced to 1 hour and a half.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY] and a like time to myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thought the time on the rule had been fixed at 10 minutes to the side?

Mr. GREENWOOD. It was fixed 3 or 4 days ago at 10 minutes, but we have liberalized the time and added 5 minutes to each side.

Mr. Speaker, this rule is for the consideration of what is sometimes called the revised Guffey coal bill for the regulation of interstate trade and distribution of bituminous coal. It has for its purpose the continuation of the stabilization policy that has been established under the bill previously passed by the Congress known as the Guffey coal bill. It has been found very beneficial for the stabilization of the business and the working out of a harmonious arrangement between the management and the employees. Very much to the regret of the proponents of that bill, the Supreme Court held the former bill unconstitutional because of its regulation of labor as to hours and working conditions. The Court held these labor regulations were local and incidental to production under State control.

The committee has reported a bill now which eliminates all of those provisions to which the Court raised objection. It is not undertaken in the present bill to regulate labor as to hours, as to wages, or as to working conditions. It has for its purpose the regulation of the distribution and the sale under code provisions very similar to the former code regulation of bituminous coal. Those who have drawn the bill have looked into the Court decision very carefully and feel this meets all the objections which the Supreme Court raised to the former bill.

The N. R. A. undertook similar provisions with reference to industry. The Supreme Court in the Schechter case based its decision upon the question of State control. I have always felt in my own mind had that case been based on a code governing the regulation of bituminous coal the Supreme Court might have sustained it.

In the first place, bituminous coal is a natural resource very much like water power and electrical energy and belongs to the Nation as a whole. It necessarily follows it must be produced in certain localities, although its consumption is Nation-wide. Being a natural resource, there is a national significance attaching to the production and consumption of coal that is not found with reference to the regulation of local business such as involved in the Schechter case. We have eliminated the provisions to which the Supreme Court raised objection in the former bill and have the assurance of those who have studied the matter that this bill will meet the necessary constitutional requirement.

This bill sets up a board of seven to regulate the matters of price and distribution, two to be selected by the employees, two to be selected by the producers, and three to be appointed from the public who have no interest whatever either in coal, in oil, or in the distribution of electrical energy. This board will formulate a code for the stabilization of the coal industry and has the power to set up minimum prices, taking into consideration the cost of production, the peculiar features of any particular quality of coal, or any of the necessary costs that enter into the production.

It sets up 13 unfair trade practices of which the board will take cognizance. In some respects it is very similar to the recent Robinson-Patman bill in that its object is to promote fair trade practices as between different producers in the various coal fields. It is true there is no labor regulation in this bill, but if the business is stabilized and the industry knows what the the prices are to be, it will have a very good effect and labor will take care of itself. Coal is sold under long-time contracts ordinarily, and if the industry knows what the price will be, it can fix the prices and reach an agreement with the employees on a long-time basis so that harmony prevails in this particular industry. Stabilization and understanding is the object of this particular law. The whole business will be organized on a fair, comparative basis as between the producers in the various fields, taking into consideration the cost of production, quality of the coal, and the various items that necessarily may create differentials between one class of coal in one section of the country and another class of coal in another section.

There is to be a conservator appointed under the law who will have the interest of the consuming public under his jurisdiction. He may appear before the Commission and present all of the facts which will take care of those who purchase the coal. The Board may set a minimum price, having in mind a fair return in profit to the various producers.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I would prefer to wait until after I have finished my statement.

The conservator set up under this law will take care of the consuming public. The minimum price will be based upon a fair return and a fair profit to the various producers. The Board can in emergencies fix a maximum price. The law clearly provides maximum prices are made to prevent exploitation of the consumers, prevent price skyrocketing in emergency or under weather conditions which may arise. Fair competition will protect consumers.

Mr. Speaker, the committee should be complimented for endeavoring to take care of all the different factors or groups which will operate under this law. The employees are protected. The employers are taken care of so that they may make a fair return and pay fair, living wages. The consuming public is taken care of so that they shall not be exploited because of price fluctuations.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman comes from a State which is a large producer of coal, and he knows, as a matter of fact, that coal is one industry that is affected by weather conditions as much as any other. Is it not a fact that the mere existence of the Bituminous Coal Commission during the last cold-weather period had a decisive effect on the regulation and control of prices and kept them from going to an unreasonable point?

Mr. GREENWOOD. It is very true, and the gentlemen on the Ways and Means Committee have statistical tables which show the comparative prices since the operation of this law. There has not been a fluctuation in any of the large centers of consumption of more than 25 cents a ton, and in many instances there has been a reduction in price under the present law that was declared unconstitutional. Stabilization of price and publicity of methods of distribution are helpful of fair trade practices.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Is it not a fact that one of the principal points of the Supreme Court decision was the taxing power of the Federal Government could not be used for penalty purposes? Does not this bill tax coal and then make a refund of that tax if certain codes are agreed to?

Mr. GREENWOOD. The same provision was in the old law, but it is conceded by all who read the recent decision and former decisions that if the Congress has the delegated power to pass a regulation, then it has the power to use the taxing power of the Constitution to enforce that regulation.

This measure rests upon the commerce clause of the Constitution.

They have eliminated those features to which the Supreme Court raised objection with reference to labor, and the revised law is based upon the commerce clause of the Constitution and on the theory that we are not exceeding our authority in the regulation of commerce; and if the bill is upheld on that basis, then there can be no question about our using the taxing power to enforce the authority which is contained in the measure.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Of course, the gentleman knows that as the Supreme Court is constituted now we can keep on voting for these measures for labor and to regulate industry and the Supreme Court will knock them out. The only way we can get laws of this kind enacted is by a constitutional amendment.

Mr. GREENWOOD. That may be true, but there are others who believe that we have formulated this law upon the delegated authority which Congress has, and having such authority under the interstate commerce clause to regulate commerce and create a free flow of products in the channels of interstate commerce we can use the taxing power to enforce such delegated powers.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me the important question before the people now is how much these new regulations and conditions that you are setting up are going to raise the price of coal to the ultimate consumer. Can the gentleman tell us that?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Just a few moments ago I commented on that, I may say to the gentleman from New York, and stated that a gentleman on the Ways and Means Committee has a statistical table showing the cost of coal for many years, by month; and during the operation of the law which was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, the former Guffey Act, there has not been a fluctuation in price in any large city where there is volume consumption of more than 25 cents a ton; and the statistics also show that the former price was reduced in as many instances as it was increased, showing that stabilized prices with an understanding on the part of the producer as to what the price shall be has benefited even the consumers by affording them a stabilized price. I do not think there need be any fear along that line.

Mr. SNELL. Then the gentleman is firmly convinced that the price to the consumer will not be any higher under this bill than it was before?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Well, the law provides that it can be raised 2 cents a ton by the Board, but no more than that, upon a hearing.

Mr. SNELL. I am referring to the price to the ultimate consumer.

Mr. GREENWOOD. We all know that there have been times of emergency and times of extreme weather conditions when it has not been unusual for the price of coal to be boosted as much as $1 or $2 a ton. Nothing like that has happened under the present law.

Mr. SNELL. I know that, but that was not the matter I was trying to find out about. I was inquiring about the average price to the ultimate consumer on account of these added regulations and the cost of production. I was interested in knowing how you are going to get by and sell the coal to the consumer cheaper.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The added cost of production is not nearly as great as the losses that have arisen on account of strikes and misunderstandings, and under the bill you will have a better understanding and stability by putting it on a uniform basis, even though it costs the management something because operations under the old system have been considerably more expensive.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman knows, as a matter of fact, that the coal producers will be interested in making the price of their products such as to enable them to compete with the cleaner fuels, such as fuel oils, gas, and electricity, and it would only destroy their industry if they increased their prices unreasonably.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The only way to have a reasonable price to the consumer is to have stabilized prices under fair trade practices so that nobody can take advantage of their consumers, either to skyrocket prices or to undersell their competitors so as to drive someone out of business. The consumer will be protected by this law as much as any other group.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If the price to the consumer does not go up, and I understand it does not, where does the money come from to add the amount that the producer or the laborer or the miner is to receive?

Mr. GREENWOOD. That is not the question at all. They are not particularly going to pay labor more.

Mr. HOFFMAN. They are not?

Mr. GREENWOOD. But with a stabilized price they can enter into long-time contracts for the sale of coal and with their labor for 1 or 2 or 3 years.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the miner get any more under this bill?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Not any more than the union prices that have been paid.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will he get steadier work?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think so.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman explain what effect the enactment of this bill will have on the antitrust laws, if any?

Mr. GREENWOOD. The antitrust laws are administered by the Government. This law will be administered by a commission of the Federal Government, and, while it proposes to maintain a complete competitive system under the the regulation of the commission whereby the price of coal will be fixed and stabilized, it is not a question of monopoly or of the driving out of one producer by another, but every producer will stand before the board or the commission on an equal basis to present his case, and this measure is to promote fair trade practices of competition rather than monopoly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. You speak of stabilizing the price. It fixes the minimum price, but has it the power to fix the maximum price in an emergency?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, this is price-fixing legislation pure and simple. The Government never has succeeded in its attempt to fix prices heretofore, and there is no reason to believe that it will be any more successful in fixing the price of coal.

In effect, this bill proposes to allow those engaged in the industry to fix the price of their own product. The majority of the commission that is created by the bill and given authority to fix minimum prices and in some cases the maximum prices of bituminous coal is made up of interested parties or those directly engaged in the industry.

The commission is to consist of seven members, two of whom are to be producers of coal, two of whom must be miners, and the other three, or a minority of the commission, are to be selected outside the industry.

The Supreme Court declared the labor provisions of the original Guffey law unconstitutional. One of the objects sought to be accomplished by this bill is to get around the decision of the Supreme Court in the original Guffey Act. It is proposed to accomplish that purpose by leaving out of this bill the provisions of the original act relating to labor and to retain only those relating to price fixing. Of course, the majority of the Commission composed as it will be of producers and miners will cooperate to raise the price of coal in order to give the producers more profits and enable them in turn to pay the miners better wages. In that scheme of things it is easy to see what will happen to the consuming public. Of course, the public will have to pay more for its coal and the average man is having more than he can do to get enough coal to keep him warm as it is.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD] referred to the decision of the Supreme Court in the original Guffey Act, and made the statement as I understood him, in effect that this bill was drafted for the purpose of complying with the decision of the Court in that case.

In that connection it should be kept in mind that the majority opinion did not pass on the power of the Government to fix the price of coal at all. It specifically reserved that question for future consideration.

Let me read what the Court said on that point. I quote:

> The price-fixing provisions of the code are thus disposed of without coming to the question of their constitutionality; but neither this disposition of the matter, nor anything we have said, is to be taken as indicating that the Court is of opinion that these provisions, if separately enacted, could be sustained.

Mr. Speaker, it is a violent assumption to assume from that language that the Court will hold that the Government has the right to fix the price of coal that enters into interstate commerce. I do not know whether the Government, under the Constitution, has the right to fix the price of coal and other commodities that enter into interstate commerce or not, but I am satisfied that it ought not to exercise it if it has the right to do so. See where the policy of this legislation will lead us, if we once adopt it. If we fix the price of coal, we will be asked sooner or later to fix the price of other commodities that enter into interstate commerce. We will be asked to fix the price of manufactured products, of furniture, of automobiles, of shoes, of wearing apparel, and of farm products. In fact, if we once get started there will be no place to stop.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes; for a short question.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Is the gentleman willing to concede that there may be a difference between coal, which is a natural resource, and a manufactured product?

Mr. MAPES. There is little difference in theory. This morning, Mr. Speaker, there came to our desks a copy of a speech delivered over the radio on June 5 by Senator BURTON K. WHEELER. Let me read just two paragraphs of what he had to say about the policy of price fixing by the Government. I quote from his speech:

> Consider the implications of ultimate price fixing for trade and industry by either the Government or private groups. It radically changes our form of government.
>
> The Government would be forced into a system of regimentation of industry that would not only be onerous to the people but that might very well be inefficient. Certainly the greatest totalitarian, bureaucratic state the world has ever seen would be the result. Price fixing by private groups will inevitably lead to price fixing by the Government. It will be a fascist state in every sense of the word.

That is the language of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I am sorry, but I have not the time. This legislation is a striking illustration of the way some of the New Deal policies head in opposite directions. We are developing hydroelectric power which must necessarily take the place to a large extent of bituminous coal. Of course, that raises serious problems for the bituminous coal industry. It has been estimated, I believe, that some 40 million tons of bituminous coal will be displaced by the TVA development, and on the assumption that 1,000 tons of coal furnishes employment to one man per year, that will take out of employment in the bituminous coal fields, 40,000 people. Fixing the price of bituminous coal will have a tendency also to cause the consuming public to use substitutes for it, such as anthracite coal, fuel oil, natural gas, as well as hydroelectric power. In fact the passage of this legislation will tend to defeat its own purpose. It will tend to reduce the amount of bituminous coal consumed and thereby reduce the number of men employed to produce it. We cannot fix the price of coal without limiting the production of it.

Mr. MAY, Mr. VINSON of Kentucky, and Mr. GREENWOOD rose.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I cannot yield. My time will not permit. I want to call attention to the similarity of the policy of this bill to that laid down in the Esch-Cummins Act a few years ago relating to the railroads. The Esch-Cummins Act divided the country into regions and contemplated the fixing of uniform rates for the transportation of commodities over all the railroads in a given region. It had in mind that the rates would be high enough to provide a reasonable return on the aggregate value of the railroads in the region. The act specifically stated that in order to accomplish that purpose the rates would have to be high enough to give the roads more favorably situated an unreasonable return, and provided that the surplus over and above a reasonable return to those roads should go to the weaker roads. This bill is based upon the same theory. It divides the country into 23 different districts and provides that this Commission shall fix the price of coal so as to equal the average cost of production in a given district. Of course, that will enable the low-cost mines to make an unreasonable return and may result in putting the high-cost ones out of business. Experience demonstrated that the provisions of the Esch-Cummins Act, to which I have called attention, would not work and they were repealed. I predict that this legislation will meet the same fate in time.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Not now. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD] said that there would be competition between the different districts. That may be true, but there certainly will be no competition as between individual producers in the same district if this bill goes into effect, and it will either allow the low-cost mines in a given district an unreasonable return or force the high-cost ones to go out of business.

The bill does not stop with fixing the minimum price. It provides for the fixing of a maximum price as well. It provides that the commission, if it sees fit or if it deems it in the public interest to do so, may fix a maximum price, and then it contains this provision:

Provided, That no maximum price shall be established for any mine which shall not return cost, plus a reasonable profit.

In other words, the price must be high enough to allow the highest-cost mine to make a reasonable profit, plus the cost of production. Anyone can see what such a price will mean to the low-cost mines. A price that will provide a return which will enable a high-cost mine to get a return of cost, plus a reasonable profit, will certainly provide the low-cost mine an unreasonable profit.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot embark upon the policy of price fixing for the coal industry unless we are willing to do the same thing for other industries that are in distress and fix prices for their commodities as well. I am not willing to embark on such a policy.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12800) to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12800, with Mr. MEAD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration, H. R. 12800, is offered as the administration's substitute for the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935, which was invalidated by the Supreme Court May 18, 1936.

The provisions of the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935, which sought the stabilization of the prices of bituminous coal moving in interstate commerce and the regulations of the unfair methods of competition therein, were not directly passed upon by the majority in the Supreme Court's decision. The entire act was invalidated, as the prevailing opinion states, because of its inability to separate the labor provisions of said act from the regulation of prices and unfair methods of competition. The majority opinion held that, even though Congress segregated the distinct problems under separate headings, parts I, II, III, IV, and further separated these parts with sections numbered therein, and further had the separability clause usual and customary, which heretofore had never been found wanting in setting forth the expressed intention of Congress as to separability, the Court in the prevailing opinion substantially said that Congress did not show to their satisfaction that the stabilization of the industry through regulation of prices and of unfair methods of competition as it affected bituminous coal in interstate commerce was separate and apart from the labor provisions thereof; that, holding invalid the labor provisions as beyond Federal power, the stabilization features secured by regulation of prices and removal of unfair-trade practices would likewise fall. For the first time in our observation of the Supreme Court's history did we wince at the failure of this great tribunal to measure up to its responsibility and pass upon an issue truly vital to our economic life.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] made the statement that the majority opinion of the Supreme Court did not pass upon the price-fixing features of the old act. That is true, but let me ask you as practical men that, with the temper of the Supreme Court as it is, with the divisions which we know obtain in that Court, is anybody, even the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], prepared to say that if they had had five votes on that Court to strike down the price-fixing sections of this act, they would have hidden behind the separability clause to invalidate the act?

Ah, we are in respectable company when we say that Congress has the power to regulate interstate commerce, and in so doing the power to fix prices, unless they are arbitrary, discriminatory, and in violation of the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. We are in respectable company when we say Congress has the power to pass this piece of legislation. Chief Justice Hughes stands there with a lucid opinion saying that Congress has that power. Three other Justices—Mr. Justice Brandeis, Mr. Justice Cardozo, and Mr. Justice Stone—say there is no question about Congress having that power. So I say to you that all of the Justices who spoke upon this subject said Congress had the power. The majority opinion is silent upon that proposition.

Unless the Taft philosophy set forth in the cases of Hill against Wallace, Chicago Board of Trade against Olsen, Stafford against Wallace, and the Coronado cases were followed, it was admitted by proponents of the measure that the labor sections in said act were subject to attack; but even if stricken down, the proponents urged the stabilization features through price regulations and the removal of unfair-competition methods. In fact, the general counsel of the United Mine Workers of America, Hon. Henry Warrum, made such statement very clearly in the hearings before the House committee preceding the enactment of the legislation. Mr. Justice Cardozo very clearly pointed out this frank statement by this learned lawyer and splendid gentleman. We quote from the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Cardozo:

At a hearing before a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, on H. R. 8479, counsel for the United Mine Workers of America, who had cooperated in the drafting of the act, said (p. 35):

"We have, as can be well understood, a provision of this code dealing with labor relations at the mines. We think that is justified; we think it is impossible to conceive of any regulation of this industry that does not provide for regulation of labor relations at the mines. I realize that while it may be contested, yet I feel that it is going to be sustained.

"Also, there is a provision in this act that if this act, or any part of it, is declared to be invalid as affecting any person or persons, the rest of it will be valid, and if the other provisions of this act still stand and the labor provisions are struck down, we still want the act, because it stabilizes the industry and enables us to negotiate with them on a basis which will at least be different from what we have been confronted with since April, and that is a disinclination to even negotiate a labor wage scale, because they claim they are losing money.

"If the labor provisions go down, we still want the industry stabilized so that our union may negotiate with them on the the basis of a living American wage standard."

To back up the attitude of the United Mine Workers of America toward the 1935 act, they stand here today in that same fair attitude toward this proposed legislation, asking for its passage as a means of stabilizing the industry. It is their position that unless the industry is stabilized, the old cutthroat competition methods relegated to the scrap heap will be revived and they will have great difficulty in securing a reasonable wage for the dangerous and arduous service rendered. We read from a letter written by Hon. John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, dated June 13, 1936:

[United Mine Workers of America. Affiliated with A. F. of L. John L. Lewis, president. 712 Tower Building]

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 13, 1936.

Hon. FRED M. VINSON,
Member of Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The United Mine Workers of America advocated before Congress the passage of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1935, not merely because of the labor provisions it contained but because its marketing provisions fixed a floor level of production cost for the interstate marketing of coal. The recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Carter case invalidated the act because the regulations relating to labor were held beyond the power of Congress and were considered to be so interwoven with the marketing provisions as to invalidate them. In the hearings before your committee upon the legislation of 1935 our representative made it plain that if the labor provisions should fail that they were still interested as wage earners in the marketing provisions of the act.

By the decision in the Carter case the bituminous-mine workers are thrown back upon their own resources and ability to organize and collectively bargain for their wages. But, however they may be able to meet this problem unsheltered by the law, they are still helpless to secure a living wage from an industry whose product has for years been marketed in a senseless cutthroat competition which finds its opportunity particularly in a competitive cutting of wages.

It is for this reason that the United Mine Workers of America are again asking Congress to reenact this legislation with the labor regulation deleted. The price provisions provide a minimum base which, after all, is a limitation upon the meanest manifestation of unfair practices in the interstate commerce of bituminous coal—practices which are wasting the coal resources of the Nation and which depend primarily upon a free hand with the wages and working conditions of mine labor.

Very truly yours,

JOHN L. LEWIS.

We also read a letter written by Hon. Charles O'Neill, chairman, special legislative committee of National Conference of Bituminous Coal Producers, under the same date, June 13, 1936:

NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF BITUMINOUS COAL PRODUCERS,
Washington, D. C., June 13, 1936.

Hon. FRED M. VINSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Guffey-Vinson Bituminous Coal Act of 1936 provides a constitutional method of price regulation of the bituminous-coal industry under direct governmental supervision on the basis of reasonable standards, established by Congress, that have been proven by the test of actual experience to be fair to all districts, practical in operation, and which call for the absolute minimum of Federal power necessary to make such regulation effective.

The bill will prevent the monopoly of the industry by a few large financially entrenched corporations occasioned by the monopolistic device of eliminating smaller and weaker companies through price-cutting tactics.

The bill will prevent unjust discrimination in the cost burden to more than 10,000,000 unorganized household consumers as against the several thousand large, powerful, organized industrial consumers whose purchasing power enables them to break down prices of industrial coal and forces that loss to be made up by higher prices on domestic household coal.

The bill will provide adequate consumer representation in the final determination of prices by the Government, with full publicity after public hearings as to the facts and authoritative data of the industry which will best tend to prevent unduly high prices or wage levels.

This bill will provide for the orderly economic liquidation of such excess capacity as is not necessary to the needs of the Nation without allowing the death throes of the liquidation of such mines to destroy all other property and human values within the industry.

The bill will foster fair, healthy, intense, but intelligent competition that should best tend to provide the public with an increasingly superior product at a steadily decreasing annual cost and a product better designed to meet the force of competition of laborless fuels.

This bill will prevent the inexorable wage reductions caused by declining price levels which necessitate such action by sheer absence of cash to meet union pay rolls.

This bill will tend to promote the economic welfare of the Nation by preventing the waseful exploitation of a natural resource at a loss when, in fact, the wealth of any nation must come from the products of the earth and soil.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES O'NEILL,
Chairman, Special Legislative Committee.

THE NEW BILL—H. R. 12800

Immediately after the Supreme Court had knocked down the labor sections of the 1935 act, the preparation of H. R. 12800 was begun. The language of the invalidated act relating to labor was physically picked up and removed from the act. This was done with interlining by pencil and with a pair of scissors so that H. R. 12800 substantially is the bill passed in the last session with the labor provisions stricken therefrom to meet the Supreme Court's opinion. Further, the present bill has sought to conform with the opinions of the Court.

We set forth herein the important changes from the text of the 1935 act:

Section 1: The declaration of policy has been limited to the "regulation of the sale and distribution in interstate commerce" in order "to promote interstate commerce in bituminous coal and to remove burdens and obstructions therefrom."

Section 2 (a) provides for a commission of seven instead of five members—two to represent the producers, two the employees, and three the public.

Section 3 of the bill—the tax provision—changes section 3 of the 1935 act in order to clarify the procedure for revocation of the right to the draw-back and emphasize that code members waive no constitutional rights. The changes remove a compulsory feature of the code acceptance by coal producers by striking out the requirement of acting "in compliance with the code", in order to be entitled to the draw-back, and in lieu thereof authorize the draw-back to be paid to any producer who has filed his acceptance of the code, and whose membership and right to draw-back have not been revoked under section 5 (b), under which the right to review in court such revocation is recognized, and under which, by the addition of the sentence at the end of section 5 (c), the code member has the right to raise constitutional issues and to show that matters or transactions involved are not in or do not directly affect interstate commerce.

Section 4, first paragraph, provides that the code shall be "promulgated" rather than "formulated * * * into a working agreement."

Section 4, second paragraph, is changed to more clearly and specifically limit the application of price regulations "only to matters and transactions in or directly affecting interstate commerce in bituminous coal." Section 4–A, in this connection, has been added, following the language of section 13 (4) of the Interstate Commerce Act, to assure that intrastate rates in competitive markets will not cause "any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination" against the interstate rates in bituminous coal. This is designed to protect interstate traders and interstate commerce (The Shreveport Case, 234 U. S. 342, 351, 352; Wisconsin R. R. Comm. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 257 U. S. 563, 588; United States v. Louisiana, 290 U. S. 70, 75; Florida v. United States, 292 U. S. 1).

Section 4, part I (a), fifth paragraph, is revised to more clearly provide for the rearrangement of "price areas" as well as "districts" by the Commission after hearing.

Sections 5 (a), 6 (b) and (d), and 8 (a) and (b): References to the Labor Board have been eliminated to comply with the decision of the Supreme Court.

Section 5 (c): At the end of the first paragraph a sentence has been added to assure specifically that in any action of the Commission to enforce the price regulations—

Any code member shall be entitled to raise all issues of constitutional power or right, and particularly to show that the matters or transactions with reference to which an order of the Commission was issued are not in or do not directly affect interstate commerce (I. C. C. v. Ill. Cent. R. Co., 215 U. S. 452, 470).

Section 9 has been revised to state the labor policy set forth in the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act and provides against any implied repeal of that act or other acts "regarding labor relations."

Section 14 (b) has been rephrased in its final clause for purposes of clarity with respect to compliance by Government contractors.

Section 15, the separability clause, is retained in a more specific and detailed form.

Section 20, prescribing the effective date of section 3, has been revised to be more definite and certain.

Section 22 has been expanded to provide for the repeal of the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935 and to provide for the transfer of funds to the new commission.

Section 23: The citation of the act has been shortened.

Annex schedule of districts: Arizona has been added to district 18, Idaho to district 19, and Oregon and Alaska to district 23. This constitutes no extension of the act, since sections 3 and 4 apply to all coal transactions in interstate commerce.

Dates have been changed for obvious reasons in sections 4, part I (a) and part II (a), 16 (5), and 23.

It is intended to offer an amendment on line 19, page 39, of the bill to strike the figure 4 and insert the figure 2. This would limit the life of the act to 2 years from the date of its approval.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION

The regulation of prices and the unfair methods of competition as set forth in the 1935 act were not held invalid by the Court. The prevailing opinion did not pass upon such question. Their opinion is silent upon these provisions. The minority opinion of Mr. Chief Justice Hughes and Messrs. Justice Brandeis, Justice Stone, and Justice Cardozo very definitely upheld the constitutional validity of such provisions. We quote Mr. Chief Justice Hughes' opinion relating to this:

But that is not the whole case. The act also provides for the regulation of the prices of bituminous coal sold in interstate commerce and prohibits unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce. Undoubtedly transactions in carrying on interstate commerce are subject to the Federal power to regulate that commerce and the control of charges and the protection of fair competition in that commerce are familiar illustrations of the exercise of the power, as the Interstate Commerce Act, the Packers and Stockyards Act, and the Antitrust Acts abundantly show. The Court has repeatedly stated that the power to regulate interstate commerce among the several States is supreme and plenary (Minnesota Rate Case, 230 U. S. 352, 398). It is "complete in itself, and may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations, other than are prescribed in the Constitution" (Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 196). We are not at liberty to deny to the Congress, with respect to interstate commerce, a power commensurate with that enjoyed by the States in the regulation of their internal commerce. (See Nebbia v. New York, 291 U. S. 502.)

Whether the policy of fixing prices of commodities sold in interstate commerce is a sound policy is not for our consideration. The question of that policy, and of its particular applications, is for Congress. The exercise of the power of regulation is subject to the constitutional restriction of the due-process clause, and if in fixing rates, prices, or conditions of competition that requirement is transgressed, the judicial power may be invoked to the end that the constitutional limitation may be maintained (Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 222 U. S. 541, 547; St. Joseph Stock Yards Co. v. United States, decided Apr. 27, 1936).

In the legislation before us, Congress has set up elaborate machinery for the fixing of prices of bituminous coal sold in interstate commerce. That provision is attacked in limine. Prices have not yet been fixed. If fixed, they may not be contested. If contested, the act provides for review of the administrative ruling. If in fixing prices due process is violated by arbitrary, capricious, or confiscatory action, judicial remedy is available. If an attempt is made to fix prices for sales in intrastate commerce, that attempt will also be subject to attack by appropriate action. In that relation it should be noted that in the Carter cases, the court below found that substantially all the coal mined by the Carter Coal Co. is sold f. o. b. mines and is transported into States other than those in which it is produced for the purpose of filling orders obtained from purchasers in such States. Such transactions are in interstate commerce (Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 520). The court below also found that "the interstate distribution and sale and the intrastate distribution and sale" of the coal are so "intimately and inextricably connected" that "the regulation of interstate transactions of distribution and sale cannot be accomplished effectively without discrimination against interstate commerce unless transactions of intrastate distribution and sale be regulated." Substantially the same situation is disclosed in the Kentucky cases. In that relation the Government invokes the analogy of transportation rates (The Shreveport Case, 234 U. S. 342; Wisconsin Railroad Commission v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R. Co., 257 U. S. 563). The question will be the subject of consideration when it arises in any particular application of the act.

Upon what ground, then, can it be said that this plan for the regulation of transactions in interstate commerce in coal is beyond the constitutional power of Congress? The Court reaches that conclusion in the view that the invalidity of the labor provisions requires us to condemn the act in its entirety. I am unable to concur in that opinion. I think that the express provisions of the act preclude such a finding of inseparability.

This is admittedly a question of statutory construction, and hence we must search for the intent of Congress. And in seeking that intent we should not fail to give full weight to what Congress itself has said upon the very point. The act provides (sec. 15):

"If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby."

That is a flat declaration against treating the provisions of the act as inseparable. It is a declaration which Congress was competent to make. It is a declaration which reverses the presumption of indivisibility and creates an opposite presumption (Utah Power & Light Co. v. Pfost, 286 U. S. 165, 184).

* * * * * * *

In this view the act and the code for which it provides may be sustained in relation to the provisions for marketing in interstate commerce, and the decisions of the courts below, so far as they accomplish that result, should be affirmed.

I quote from the minority opinion of Mr. Justice Cardozo, in which Mr. Justice Brandeis and Mr. Justice Stone concur:

First: I am satisfied that the act is within the power of the central government insofar as it provides for minimum and maximum prices upon sales of bituminous coal in the transactions of interstate commerce and in those of intrastate commerce where interstate commerce is directly or intimately affected. Whether it is valid also in other provisions that have been considered and condemned in the opinion of the Court I do not find it necessary to determine at this time. Silence must not be taken as importing acquiescence. Much would have to be written if the subject, even as thus restricted, were to be explored through all its implications, historical and economic as well as strictly legal. The fact that the prevailing opinion leaves the price provisions open for consideration in the future makes it appropriate to forego a fullness of elaboration that might otherwise be necessary. As a system of price fixing the act is challenged upon three grounds: (1) Because the governance of prices is not within the commerce clause; (2) because it is a denial of due process forbidden by the fifth amendment; and (3) because the standards for administrative action are indefinite, with the result that there has been an unlawful delegation of legislative power.

(1) With reference to the first objection, the obvious and sufficient answer is, so far as the act is directed to interstate transactions, that sales made in such conditions constitute interstate commerce and do not merely "affect" it (Dahnke-Walker Milling Co. v. Bondurant, 257 U. S. 282, 290; Flanagan v. Federal Coal Co., 267 U. S. 222, 225; Lemke v. Farmers Grain Co., 258 U. S. 50, 60; Public Utilities Commission v. Attleboro Steam & Electric Co., 273 U. S. 83, 90; Federal Trade Commission v. Pacific States Paper Trade Association, 273 U. S. 52, 64). To regulate the price for such transactions is to regulate commerce itself, and not alone its antecedent conditions or its ultimate consequences. The very act of sale is limited and governed. Prices in interstate transactions may not be regulated by the States (Baldwin v. Seelig, 294 U. S. 511). They must therefore be subject to the power of the Nation unless they are to be withdrawn altogether from governmental supervision. (Cf. The Head Money Cases, 112 U. S. 580, 593; Story, Commentaries on the Constitution, sec. 1082.) If such a vacuum were permitted, many a public evil incidental to interstate transactions would be left without a remedy. This does not mean, of course, that prices may be fixed for arbitrary reasons or in an arbitrary way. The commerce power of the Nation is subject to the requirement of due process like the police power of the States (Hamilton v. Kentucky Distilleries Co., 251 U. S. 146, 156; cf. Brooks v. United States, 267 U. S. 432, 436, 437; Nebbia v. New York, 291 U. S. 502, 524). Heed must be given to similar considerations of social benefit or detriment in marking the division between reason and oppression. The evidence is overwhelmingly that Congress did not ignore those considerations in the adoption of this act.

(2) The commerce clause being accepted as a sufficient source of power, the next inquiry must be whether the power has been exercised consistently with the fifth amendment. In the pursuit of that inquiry, Nebbia v. New York (291 U. S. 502), lays down the applicable principle. There a statute of New York prescribing a minimum price for milk was upheld against the objection that price fixing was forbidden by the fourteenth amendment. We found it a sufficient reason to uphold the challenged system that "the conditions or practices in an industry make unrestricted competition an inadequate safeguard of the consumer's interests, produce waste harmful to the public, threaten ultimately to cut off the supply of a commodity needed by the public, or portend the destruction of the industry itself" (291 U. S. at p. 538).

All this may be said, and with equal if not greater force, of the conditions and practices in the bituminous-coal industry, not only at the enactment of this statute in August 1935, but for many years before. Overproduction was at a point where free competition had been degraded into anarchy. Prices had been cut so low that profit had become impossible for all except a lucky handful. Wages came down along with prices and with profits. There were strikes, at times Nation-wide in extent, at other times spreading over broad areas and many mines, with the accompaniment of violence and bloodshed and misery and bitter feeling. The sordid tale is unfolded in many a document and treatise. During the 23 years between 1913 and 1935 there were 19 investigations or hearings by Congress or by specially created commissions with reference to conditions in the coal mines. The hope of betterment was faint unless the industry could be subjected to the compulsion of a code. In the weeks immediately preceding the passage of this act the country was threatened once more with a strike of ominous proportions. The plight of the industry was not merely a menace to owners and to mine workers; it was and had long been a menace to the public, deeply concerned in a steady and uniform supply of a fuel so vital to the national economy.

Congress was not condemned to inaction in the face of price wars and wage wars so pregnant with disaster. Commerce had been choked and burdened; its normal flow had been diverted from one State to another; there had been bankruptcy and waste and ruin alike for capital and for labor. The liberty protected by the fifth amendment does not include the right to persist in this anarchic riot. "When industry is grievously hurt, when producing concerns fail, when unemployment mounts and communities dependent upon profitable production are prostrated, the wells of commerce go dry" (Appalachian Coals, Inc., v. United States, 288 U. S. 344, 372). The free competition so often figured as a social-goods imports order and moderation and a decent regard for the welfare of the group. (Cf. The Sugar Institute, Inc., v. United States, — U. S. —, Mar. 30, 1936.) There is testimony in these records, testimony even by the assailants of the statute, that only through a system of regulated prices can the industry be stabilized and set upon the road of orderly and peaceful progress. If further facts are looked for, they are narrated in the findings as well as in congressional reports and a mass of public records. After making every allowance for difference of opinion as to the most efficient cure, the student of the subject is confronted with the indisputable truth that there were ills to be corrected, and ills that had a direct relation to the maintenance of commerce among the States without friction or diversion. An evil existing, and also the power to correct it, the lawmakers were at liberty to use their own discretion in the selection of the means.

(3) Finally, and in answer to the third objection to the statute in its price-fixing provisions, there has been no excessive delegation of legislative power. The prices to be fixed by the district boards and the Commission must conform to the following standards: They must be just and equitable; they must take account of the weighted average cost of production for each minimum price area; they must not be unduly prejudicial or preferential as between districts or as between producers within a district; and they must reflect as nearly as possible the relative market value of the various kinds, qualities, and sizes of coal at points of delivery in each common consuming market area to the end of affording the producers in the several districts substantially the same opportunity to dispose of their coals on a competitive basis as has heretofore existed. The minimum for any district shall yield a return per net ton not less than the weighted average of the total costs per net ton of the tonnage of the minimum price area; the maximum for any mine, if a maximum is fixed, shall yield a return not less than cost plus a reasonable profit. Reasonable prices can as easily be ascertained for coal as for the carriage of passengers or property under the Interstate Commerce Act, or for the services of brokers in the stockyards (Tagg Bros. & Moorhead v. United States, 280 U. S. 420), or for the use of dwellings under the emergency rent laws (Block v. Hirsh, 256 U. S. 135, 157; Marcus Brown Co. v. Feldman, 256 U. S. 170; Levy Leasing Co. v. Siegel, 258 U. S. 242), adopted at a time of excessive scarcity, when the laws of supply and demand no longer gave a measure for the ascertainment of the reasonable. The standards established by this act are quite as definite as others that have had the approval of this Court (New York Central Securities Corporation v. United States, 287 U. S. 12, 24; Federal Radio Commission v. Nelson Bros. Bond & Mortgage Co., 289 U. S. 266, 286; Tagg Bros. & Moorhead v. United States, supra; Mahler v. Eby, 264 U. S. 32). Certainly a bench of judges, not experts in the coal business, cannot say with assurance that members of a commission will be unable, when advised and informed by others experienced in the industry, to make the standards workable, or to overcome through the development of an administrative technique many obstacles and difficulties that might be baffling or confusing to inexperience or ignorance.

The price provisions of the act are contained in a chapter known as part II. The final subdivisions of that part enumerate certain forms of conduct which are denounced as "unfair methods of competition." For the most part the prohibitions are ancillary to the fixing of a minimum price. The power to fix a price carries with it the subsidiary power to forbid and prevent evasion. Cf. United States v. Ferger (250 U. S. 199). The few prohibitions that may be viewed as separate are directed to situations that may never be realized in practice. None of the complainants threatens or expresses the desire to do these forbidden acts. As to those phases of the statute the suits are premature.

You will note in the opinion of Mr. Chief Justice Hughes this language:

> We are not at liberty to deny to the Congress, with respect to interstate commerce, a power commensurate with that enjoyed by the States in the regulation of their internal commerce. (See Nebbia v. New York (291 U. S. 502).)

THE NEBBIA CASE

This Nebbia case was handed down March 5, 1934, by the Court as it is presently constituted. The opinion was rendered by Mr. Justice Roberts—a very comprehensive opinion, covering 24 printed pages, resulting in the Supreme Court upholding a price-fixing statute enacted in New York which involved the price of milk which was a matter of internal commerce. The Court discussed the investigation of this subject, the necessity of milk as an item of diet, the necessity of safeguarding its production and handling for human consumption which greatly increased its price. It dealt with the amount of investment and the economic loss to the people of the State through the curtailment or destruction of the dairy institution. It treated of the prevalence of unfair and destructive trade practices leading to the demoralization of prices in the metropolitan area and other markets. It showed beyond question that, for the benefit of industry, for the benefit of the consumer, stabilization of this industry was needed.

The retail price fixed by the Milk Control Board was 9 cents a quart. Nebbia, a proprietor, sold 2 quarts of milk and a 5-cent loaf of bread for 18 cents. He was convicted for violating the Milk Control Board's orders. The Supreme Court confirmed his conviction. Mr. Justice Roberts stated in that opinion:

> Under our form of Government the use of property and the making of contracts are normally matters of private and not of public concern. The general rule is that both shall be free of governmental interference. But neither property rights nor contract rights are absolute; for Government cannot exist if the citizen may at will use his property to the detriment of his fellows, or exercise his freedom of contract to work them harm. Equally fundamental with the private right is that of the public to regulate it in the common interest.
>
> The Court has repeatedly sustained curtailment of enjoyment of private property in the public interest. The owner's rights may be subordinated to the needs of other private owners whose pursuits are vital to the paramount interests of the community.
>
> Laws passed for the suppression of immorality, in the interest of health, to secure fair trade practices, and to safeguard the interests of depositors in banks, have been found consistent with due process. These measures not only affected the use of private property, but also interfered with the right of private contract. Other instances are numerous where valid regulation has restricted the right of contract, while less directly affecting property rights.
>
> The Constitution does not guarantee the unrestricted privilege to engage in a business or to conduct it as one pleases. Certain kinds of business may be prohibited; and the right to conduct a business, or to pursue a calling, may be conditioned. Regulation of a business to prevent waste of the State's resources may be justified. And statutes prescribing the terms upon which those conducting certain businesses may contract, or imposing terms if they do enter into agreements, are within the State's competency.
> Legislation concerning sales of goods, and incidentally affecting prices, has repeatedly been held valid. In this class fall laws forbidding unfair competition by the charging of lower prices in one locality than those exacted in another by giving trade inducements to purchasers and by other forms of price discrimination. The public policy with respect to free competition has engendered State and Federal Statutes prohibiting monopolies, which have been upheld. On the other hand, where the policy of the State dictated that a monopoly should be granted, statutes having that effect have been held inoffensive to the constitutional guaranties. Moreover, the State or a municipality may itself enter into business in competition with private proprietors, and thus effectively, although indirectly, control the prices charged by them.
> In the light of the facts, the order appears not to be unreasonable or arbitrary, or without relation to the purpose to prevent ruthless competition from destroying the wholesale price structure on which the farmer depends for his livelihood, and the community for an assured supply of milk.
> But we are told that because the law essays to control prices it denies due process. Notwithstanding the admited power to correct existing economic ills by appropriate regulation of business, even though an indirect result may be a restriction of the freedom of contract or a modification of charges for services or the price of commodities, the appellant urges that direct fixation of prices is a type of regulation absolutely forbidden. His position is that the fourteenth amendment requires us to hold the challenged statute void for this reason alone. The argument runs that the public control of rates or prices is per se unreasonable and unconstitutional, save as applied to businesses affected with a public interest; that a business so affected is one in which property is devoted to an enterprise of a sort which the public itself might appropriately undertake, or one whose owner relies on a public grant or franchise for the right to conduct the business, or in which he is bound to serve all who apply; in short, such as is commonly called a public utility; or a business in its nature a monopoly. The milk industry, it is said, possesses none of these characteristics, and, therefore, not being affected with a public interest, its charges may not be controlled by the State. Upon the soundness of this contention the appellant's case against the statute depends.

We may as well say at once that the dairy industry is not in the accepted sense of the phrase a public utility. We think the appellant is also right in asserting that there is in this case no suggestion of any monopoly or monopolistic practice. It goes without saying that those engaged in the business are in no way dependent upon public grants or franchises for the privilege of conducting their activities. But if, as must be conceded, the industry is subject to regulation in the public interest, what constitutional principle bars the State from correcting existing maladjustments by legislation touching prices?

We think there is no such principle. The due process clause makes no mention of sales or of prices any more than it speaks of business or contracts or buildings or other incidents of property. The thought seems nevertheless to have persisted that there is something peculiarly sacrosanct about the price one may charge for what he makes or sells, and that, however able to regulate other elements of manufacture or trade, with incidental effect upon price, the State is incapable of directly controlling the price itself. This view was negatived many years ago (Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113).

* * * * * * *

Many other decisions show that the private character of a business does not necessarily remove it from the realm of regulation of charges or prices. The usury laws fix the price which may be exacted for the use of money, although no business more essentially private in character can be imagined than that of loaning one's personal funds (Griffith v. Connecticut, 218 U. S. 563). Insurance agents' compensation may be regulated, though their contracts are private, because the business of insurance is considered one properly subject to public control (O'Gorman & Young v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 282 U. S. 251). Statutes prescribing in the public interest the amounts to be charged by attorneys for prosecuting certain claims, a matter ordinarily one of personal and private nature, are not a deprivation of due process (Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S. 160; Capital Trust Co. v. Calhoun, 250 U. S. 208; Calhoun v. Massie, 253 U. S. 170; Newman v. Moyers, 253 U. S. 182; Yeiser v. Dysart, 267 U. S. 540; Margolin v. United States, 269 U. S. 93). A stockyards corporation while not a common carrier, nor engaged in any distinctly public employment, is doing a work in which the public has an interest, and its charges may be controlled (Cotting v. Kansas City Stockyards Co., 183 U. S. 79, 85). Private contract carriers, who do not operate under a franchise, and have no monopoly of the carriage of goods or passengers, may, since they use the highways to compete with railroads, be compelled to charge rates not lower than those of public carriers for corresponding services, if the State, in pursuance of public policy to protect the latter, so determines (Stephenson v. Binford, 287 U. S. 251, 274).

It is clear that there is no closed class or category of businesses affected with a public interest, and the function of courts in the application of the fifth and fourteenth amendments is to determine in each case whether circumstances vindicate the challenged regulation as a reasonable exertion of governmental authority or condemn it as arbitrary or discriminatory (Wolff Packing Co. v. Industrial Court, 262 U. S. 522, 535). The phrase "affected with a public interest" can, in the nature of things, mean no more than that an industry, for adequate reason, is subject to control for the public good. In several of the decisions of this Court wherein the expressions "affected with a public interest", and "clothed with a public use", have been brought forward as the criteria of the validity of price control, it has been admitted that they are not susceptible of definition and form an unsatisfactory test of the constitutionality of legislation directed at business practices or prices. These decisions must rest, finally, upon the basis that the requirements of due process were not met because the laws were found arbitrary in their operation and effect. But there can be no doubt that upon proper occasion and by appropriate measures the State may regulate a business in any of its aspects, including the prices to be charged for the products or commodities it sells.

* * * * * * *

Where the public interest was deemed to require the fixing of minimum prices, that expedient has been sustained. If the lawmaking body within its sphere of government concludes that conditions or practices in an industry make unrestricted competition an inadequate safeguard of the consumer's interests, produce waste harmful to the public, threaten ultimately to cut off the supply of a commodity needed by the public, or portend the destruction of the industry itself, appropriate statutes passed in an honest effort to correct the threatened consequences may not be set aside because the regulation adopted fixes prices reasonably deemed by the legislature to be fair to those engaged in the industry and to the consuming public. And this is especially so where, as here, the economic maladjustment is one of price, which threatens harm to the producer at one end of the series and the consumer at the other. The Constitution does not secure to anyone liberty to conduct his business in such fashion as to inflict injury upon the public at large, or upon any substantial group of the people. Price control, like any other form of regulation, is unconstitutional only if arbitrary, discriminatory, or demonstrably irrelevant to the policy the legislature is free to adopt, and hence an unnecessary and unwarranted interference with individual liberty.

Tested by these considerations we find no basis in the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment for condemning the provisions of the agriculture and markets law here drawn into question.

Opponents of this measure will say that that was the Supreme Court construing a State statute. That is true; it was construing an act of the New York Legislature; but it concerned a matter that was within the power of the State legislature.

We maintain that under the Constitution the Congress of the United States has supreme plenary power to regulate interstate commerce; and we maintain that under this constitutional power Congress has the same rights in that field that the State has in its particular field of intrastate commerce. I repeat my authority—Chief Justice Hughes, of the Supreme Court. He said:

> We are not at liberty to deny to Congress with respect to interstate commerce a power commensurate with that enjoyed by the States in the regulation of their internal commerce.

So I again state that if Mr. Justice Roberts, who wrote the opinion in the Nebbia case in March 1934, had been willing to agree that the price-fixing provisions in the Coal Act were invalid there would have been no trouble in the Court knocking down the price-fixing features of the act, and I feel that it is fair to assume that he refused to make the fifth member of the Court to refuse the Congress the same power in relation to interstate commerce as he had expressed for the Court was in the State of New York for intrastate commerce.

THE PRICE OF COAL

It is argued that this bill will increase the price of coal to the consuming public. Fear always creeps in, and particularly when the effort is made to benefit people by legislation. The history is such that this argument can be successfully refuted, unless there will be those who desire to purchase coal below the cost of production to the inevitable destruction of the industry itself and to an inevitable suffering on the part of the men and their families who produce it from the ground.

Before the enactment of the National Industrial Recovery Act the coal industry was prostrate and paralyzed. Cutthroat competition had reduced coal prices in many instances to as much as 75 cents per ton below cost of production. Then you had the stabilizing influence of voluntary action under the N. R. A. coal codes on the part of the coal producers. There was a lot of chiseling, to be sure, and a breaking down of the codes toward the end of their administration; but there was a definite stabilization of the industry, which benefited not only the operators but gave a living wage to the miners.

The facts are that the average realization per ton for the coal produced under N. R. A. was only 3 cents a ton more than the average production costs, and yet for the first time in years did the coal country make any money.

We insert herein the retail bituminous-coal price for prepared sizes in selected cities, per ton of 2,000 pounds, running from November 15, 1933, through January 15, 1936. This report was prepared by the Bituminous Coal Commission. A study of this report will show that in many instances the price of coal on January 15, 1936, was less than the price of coal on January 15, 1933. In many instances it will show that substantially the same price prevailed, and in no instances does it show the price to be appreciably higher.

[1] Washington prices for per ton of 2,240 pounds.

It is common knowledge that the past winter was the most severe which we have had in probably 15 years. In days gone by the coal-consuming public paid a much greater price for their coal in such a winter, or even in anticipation of winter than they paid for it this year. I feel certain that the power to fix maximum prices had something to do with this situation together with the fact that the price was fairly stabilized there was not the incentive to skyrocket the price in time of coal needs.

THE MANNER OF FIXING PRICES

My friend, the gentleman from Michigan, referred inadvertently to the fact that the industry controlled the prices under this bill. I know he caught the error, because later on he referred to the fact that the Commission, an agency of the Federal Government, fixes the price. Under the old bill the district boards established the price. But we have tried to conform to the language of the majority decision of the Supreme Court and, under the bill, a regularly constituted arm of the Government, the Coal Commission, is the authority which fixes the price.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. And that commission is made up of a majority of those interested.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. O Mr. Chairman, a majority! Three having no connection with the industry at all and then two representing labor and two representing the operators.

Mr. MAPES. That is as I understood it.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. KERR. Why does the bill designate two representatives of employees if this bill has no labor provisions?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Because the labor sections were stricken from the old bill. It was thought that somebody who recognized the problems of the coal fields, the problem of the miners, ought to be on this Commission.

Some suggestion has been made in regard to the manner in which we reach this price. I am fearful that my friend from Michigan did not consider one particular phase of this question. First, considering the weighted average cost of the minimum-price area, that is not the minimum price. It is suggested as a minimum price; it may be the minimum price; but in addition to that average weighted cost, which is a mathematical calculation, we must take into consideration competitive conditions. There is the power of coordinating those prices, the power of coordination that was exercised under N. R. A. when the coal operators and the coal miners for the first time in 15 or 20 years made a thin dime. This coordination is made for the purpose of permitting coal to move in commerce as heretofore. In other words, the operators figure out what they can sell the coal for in a common consuming market, coal of certain kinds, sizes, and quality, taking into consideration transportation costs, and they submit these figures to the commission. It is their bounden duty to fix the prices that the coal will move as heretofore.

I viewed this bill with considerable interest. I know the situation in the southern fields as compared to the situation in certain other fields. I recognized the rate differential which exists. You will find at least three places in this bill which permits coal to move in competition as heretofore.

Some of the provisions dealing with the fixing of prices are herewith taken from the bill—

THE WEIGHTED AVERAGE COST

Each district board shall from time to time, on its own motion or when directed by the Commission, propose minimum prices f. o. b. transportation facilities at the mines for kinds, qualities, and size of coal produced in said district, with full authority, in proposing such minimum prices, to make such classification of coals and price variations as to mines and consuming market areas as it may deem necessary and proper. Said prices shall be proposed so as to yield a return per net ton for each district in a minimum-price area, as such districts are identified and such area is defined in the subjoined table designated "Minimum-price-area table", equal as nearly as may be to the weighted average of the total costs per net ton, determined as hereinafter provided, of the tonnage of such minimum-price area. The computation of the total costs shall include the cost of labor, supplies, power, taxes, insurance, workmen's compensation, royalties, depreciation, and depletion (as determined by the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the computation of the Federal income tax) and all other direct expenses of production, coal operators' association dues, district board assessments for board operating expenses only levied under the code, and reasonable costs of selling and the cost of administration.

The minimum prices so proposed shall reflect, as nearly as possible, the relative market value of the various kinds, qualities, and sizes of coal, shall be just and equitable as between producers within the district, and shall have due regard to the interests of the consuming public. The procedure for proposal of minimum prices shall be in accordance with rules and regulations to be approved by the Commission.

A schedule of such minimum prices, together with the data upon which they are computed, including, but without limitation, the factors considered in determining the price relationship, shall be submitted by the district board to the Commission, which may approve, disapprove, or modify the same to conform to the requirements of this subsection, subject to such modification therein as may result from the coordination provided for in the succeeding subsection (b): Provided, That all minimum prices established for any kind, quality, or size of coal for shipment into any consuming market area shall be just and equitable as between producers within the district: And provided further, That no minimum price shall be established that permits dumping.

COORDINATION

(b) District boards shall, under rules and regulations established by the Commission, coordinate in common consuming market areas upon a fair competitive basis the minimum prices and the rules and regulations proposed by them, respectively, under subsection (a) hereof. Such coordination, among other factors, but without limitation, shall take into account the various kinds, qualities, and sizes of coal, and transportation charges upon coal. All minimum prices established for any kind, quality, or size of coal for shipment into any consuming market area shall be just and equitable, and not unduly prejudicial or preferential, as between and among districts, and shall reflect, as nearly as possible, the relative market values at points of delivery in each common consuming market area of the various kinds, qualities, and sizes of coal produced in the various districts, to the end of affording the producers in the several districts substantially the same opportunity to dispose of their coals upon a competitive basis as has heretofore existed. The minimum prices established as a result of such coordination shall not, as to any district, reduce or increase the return per net ton upon all the coal produced therein below or above the minimum return as provided in subsection (a) of this section by an amount greater than necessary to accomplish such coordination, to the end that the return per net ton upon the entire tonnage of the minimum-price area shall approximate and be not less than the weighted average of the total costs per net ton of the tonnage of such minimum-price area. Such coordinated prices and rules and regulations, together with the data upon which they are predicated, shall be submitted to the Commission, which may approve, disapprove, or modify the same to establish and maintain such fair competitive relationship. No minimum price shall be established that permits dumping. On the petition of any district board or other party in interest or on its own motion after notice to the district boards, the Commission may at any time conduct hearings to determine whether the foregoing method of fixing minimum prices under subsection (a) is prejudicial to any district with respect to the fair opportunity of such district to market its coal. Should the Commission so find, and further find that the prejudice cannot be removed through the coordination of minimum prices as provided for in this subsection (b), then the Commission may establish a different basis for determining minimum prices in such district, to the end that fair and competitive prices shall prevail in the marketing of the coal produced in such district: Provided, That the minimum prices so established as to any such district shall yield a return per net ton not less than the weighted average of the total costs per net ton of the tonnage of such district.

MAXIMUM PRICES

(c) When, in the public interest, the Commission deems it necessary to establish maximum prices for coal in order to protect the consumer of coal against unreasonably high prices therefor, the Commission shall have the right to fix maximum prices free on board transportation facilities for coal in any district. Such maximum prices shall be established at a uniform increase above the minimum prices in effect within the district at the time, so that in the aggregate the maximum prices shall yield a reasonable return above the weighted average total cost of the district: Provided, That no maximum price shall be established for any mine which shall not return cost plus a reasonable profit.

INTRASTATE SHIPMENTS

Section 4 (A) of this bill uses the language of the Interstate Commerce Act and follows the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Shreveport case and other cases in bringing within the commerce clause intrastate commerce which causes any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons and localities in such commerce on the one hand and interstate commerce on the other hand, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate commerce. Such intrastate commerce certainly is within the commerce power of the Constitution under repeated decisions of the Supreme Court.

PENALTY PROVISIONS

There seems to be more concern about this penalty section than any other section of the bill. To us it is very plain that if the marketing provisions, the regulation of price, and methods of unfair competition stand that the penalty tax stands.

In the beginning it was agreed by proponents of the measure that reliance of the constitutionality of the bill was not based upon its taxing power. The commerce clause of the Constitution was the foundation rock. It was admitted in the hearings before our committee that, if the commerce power failed, the taxing power could not be relied upon to hold us up. Not only was that the position of the proponents before the committee but that was the position of the Government in the Supreme Court.

I quote from the majority decision:

The position of the Government, as we understand it, is that the validity of the exaction does not rest upon the taxing power but upon the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce; and that if the act in respect of the labor and price-fixing provisions be not upheld, the "tax" must fall with them. With that position we agree * * *.

I quote from Mr. Chief Justice Hughes' opinion:

I agree * * * that the so-called tax is not a real tax but a penalty; that the constitutional power of the Federal Government to impose this penalty must rest upon the commerce clause, as the Government concedes.

I quote from the minority opinion:

Part II of the statute sets up a valid system of price fixing as applied to transactions in interstate commerce and to those in intrastate commerce where interstate commerce is directly or intimately affected. The prevailing opinion holds nothing to the contrary.

I submit that the power involved is the power under the commerce clause sought to be exercised. If that power is a valid one, the right to enforce it through penalty to us admits of no argument.

It is the purpose of this legislation to stabilize a great industry to which is inseparably tied the lives and livelihood of a half million American breadearners. It is the thought of the committee that this bill is within the powers laid down in the Constitution. We submit it to you and pray for it your favorable consideration. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by including certain excerpts from the bill and Court decisions.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES].

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I want to register my opposition to the pending legislation. I have in my home city practically 600 industries that are dependent on bituminous coal for fuel. In my county there are in addition practically 540 other industries, every one of which are very much disturbed over this legislation. There is no question in my mind but what this is a price-fixing bill and is designed primarily to increase the cost of bituminous coal.

The legislation in the first place sets up a National Bituminous Coal Commission and appoints seven members at a salary of $10,000 a year each. It also creates a consumers' counsel at a salary of $10,000 a year. Eight officials to administer this act with a total salary of $80,000.

The bill divides the coal-producing areas into 23 districts, and I assume there will be a dozen or 20 inspectors or experts to work in those 23 areas. This will automatically increase the price of coal and increase the burden of the consuming public in paying the salaries of the hundreds of inspectors which will be used in the field to supervise this act.

There are 53,000 people employed in my city. The great bulk of them are employed in the various industries, and, in my opinion, the industries are not in any shape to assume an increased cost.

Massachusetts as a whole is a manufacturing State. The Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts is very concerned over this bill. I have just received from the secretary of the Commonwealth a resolution memoralizing Congress in opposition to certain pending legislation relative to the fixing of the price of coal.

This resolution reads as follows:

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a bill to provide for Government price fixing of coal; and

Whereas the enactment of said bill would inevitably be followed by a substantial increase in the cost of coal to American homes and industries; and

Whereas it would be contrary to the public interests for the Congress to pass laws to compel our citizens to pay higher prices for coal than competitive conditions really warrant; and

Whereas there is grave doubt that Congress has power to fix the price of coal, particularly in view of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the recent Guffey Coal Act case, so-called; and that if any such power does exist in Congress it should be used for the protection of the people against excessive charges for coal and not for the purpose of establishing a monopoly for the benefit of a privileged group of coal operators; and

Whereas the Senate of Massachusetts believes that the enactment of any such measure to fix prices for coal would be but the first step in the enactment of laws to similarly regulate prices of innumerable articles shipped in interstate commerce, and that the exercise of any such power would tend to weaken or destroy the power of the States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of Massachusetts respectfully urges the Congress of the United States to reject the aforesaid bill; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the Commonwealth be directed to send forthwith copies of these resolutions to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress and to the Members of Congress from this Commonwealth.

In senate, adopted June 2, 1936.

IRVING N. HAYDEN, Clerk.

Section 3 of this bill provides for a 15-percent excise tax on the sale price of coal at the mine, to be paid to the United States Government by the producers of such coal.

Who is going to pay this increase in price? The consumer—the little fellow who has to burn the coal to heat his home—as well as the industries which daily use large tonnage for generating power and heat to run their factories.

However, because of this increased cost of bituminous coal we will find the individual home owners installing millions more of automatic oil burners in the hope of reducing their heating costs and at the same time eliminating the nuisance of ashes and dirt. Already many large institutions have changed over their coal-burning boilers to oil equipment, and it is certain that this change of fuel from coal to oil will not be of any benefit to the miner or producer. Labor will suffer as a result of this legislation, rather than to benefit by it. In fact, as time goes on we will see greater unemployment among the miners.

Let us see what the New Deal power-development program has done to the coal industry. Every dam construction at the taxpayers' expense—and they are scattered all through the South and West—has curtailed the production of millions of tons of bituminous coal. It is no wonder that the coal miners are in such distress.

The Guffey bill will not help labor, but it will, on the other hand, further deprive labor of an opportunity to produce. In my opinion this bill is just another "racket." Just think of it—eight men to be appointed by the President at a salary of $10,000 a year each, making the initial cost $80,000. Then there must be one regional director in each of the 23 districts, and probably at least one assistant director for each district. Following this, each district undoubtedly will have a dozen or more inspectors, so that all told the set-up is headed for a cost to the coal consumer of between $500,000 to $1,000,000 a year, and for what?—to curtail production of coal, to create more unemployment, to close more mines, and to raise the price of coal to the consumer.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it is very unfortunate that a larger part of the membership of this House is not familiar with the coal-mining industry. This arises from the fact that coal is produced in a very small area in the United States, comparatively speaking. Coal is produced in appreciable quantity in only 10 States of the Union. Six States produce 80 percent of the coal. Ohio is fifth in the production of coal, and more than 75 percent of the coal produced in Ohio comes from five counties. This ratio will obtain in the other States as well. West Virginia produces approximately 95,000,000 tons per year; Pennsylvania produces approximately 80,000,000 tons; Illinois approximately 37,500,000 tons; Kentucky produces 37,000,000 tons; Ohio produces 21,000,000; and Indiana produces 14,000,000 tons. On the other hand, coal is consumed in practically every State. The fact that the majority of the coal is consumed far away from the point of production makes the coal situation one which is very much misunderstood. The people who use the most coal know little or nothing about how coal is produced.

There are some people, I am sorry to say, who look upon the coal industry as a sort of piratical industry. That is far from being the truth. Those of us who live in the coal-mining and coal-producing territories know the want, the squalor, and the poverty that has come to the people living in those territories because of this failure of our people in all sections to understand each other. Consider people living in cold New England and in the North and far Northwest. How could they live without coal? Their very life depends on it, and there should be a more humanitarian understanding between those who produce coal at the risk of their lives far below the surface of the earth, and those whose comforts of life depend upon the coal which warms them in their northern homes.

No legislation has been offered in this Congress since I have been here that would tend to do that very thing as much as this legislation. What is the use of fearing what is going to happen in the future, if the price of coal is raised a few cents? What difference does it make to a man in Massachusetts who now pays $10 or $12 a ton for coal if that coal is going to cost him 10 or 15 cents more? It is not going to cost much more, if any. The increase in the price that might go to the producer will be only a few cents on each ton and maybe in many cases there will be no increase at all, and even if there is, this difference will more than be absorbed by the increase in the efficiency of transportation which will come from the stabilization of the industry.

Let me tell you a little something about the production of coal. I made a statement here in the House 10 or 12 years ago when I first came to Congress, and I am going to repeat it. A Member from New England was making a speech deploring the fact he had to pay so much for coal. I told him at that time that for $2 per ton my district could provide 500 cars of coal every day, as good coal as is produced anywhere in the world. I told him: "I will put it on the cars for you for $2 a ton. I will pay all these miners you fear. I will pay all these operators you accuse of all kinds of misdeeds and improper practices. I will pay every expense involved in the loading of that coal. I will send out 500 cars per day, 10 trainloads, from my district for $2 a ton. You may take it up into Minnesota where it sells for $8 or $9 a ton or up into Boston where it sells for $12 or $14 a ton, and then you figure the difference between the cost of production of the coal and the cost to the consumer, and you will find it is made up of transportation cost." By that I meant to show that the total production cost of coal is only about one-fifth the total cost to the consumer in many localities.

In my opinion that is where the coal operators of our section of the country and every other section of the United States have made a great mistake. They have stressed too much the cost of production. They ought to stress more the cost of the transportation of coal. I have thought that the producers of coal should have kept a controlling hand on their coal while it was being transported. They ought to take more interest in the transportation of coal because it is upon that fact this bill is founded. That is where we get into the interstate-commerce feature. As I have already stated, the production of coal is only about one-fifth of the cost of the coal to the consumer in his furnace, in his basement, or wherever he has it delivered for final consumption.

What has been the condition of the coal industry throughout these years? It has been deplorable. It has been appalling. Some may have been inclined to lay the blame on the miners' union, but the miners' union is a great organization and has done more to bring the workingman up to the high position which he occupies today than any other organizations. It has fought its way along under all kinds of adversity, and while it has been fighting its way along, their fight has not been against their employers altogether. They have fought to better the condition of the industry as well. The operators, on the other hand, have had to fight against the encroachment of other fuels, such as oil and gas. Instead of working under some harmonious agreement they have cut each other's throats, they have undermined each other, and have conducted their business in such a way that they now have no business. They are now on the verge of bankruptcy, and what will this bill do? It is intended to stabilize the coal business so that all interested parties will benefit thereby without any marked increase in the price of coal. The miners' union is not clamoring for this bill in order that wages may be increased. This is not much of an item with them now. What they want is some consistency and regularity of employment. Neither will an increase of price of the coal at the mine be much of an item to the operator. He is not seeking to take advantage of the consumer. What he wants is to feel an easiness in his business. He is willing to stand honest competition. He is willing to fight to improve his business, but he cannot carry the uncertainties that come from a cutthroat competition, that comes from a disorganized and unorganized business. The coal business is a great business. It is an honest business. It deserves the best consideration of the statesmen of the Nation.

I repeat that there need be no fear of any considerable increase in price.

For instance, suppose the price of coal is $2 a ton, and suppose this bill will give the mine owners an increase of 25 cents a ton, and suppose that will be passed down to the miners and day men and the employees generally. This is as much as they would expect, because this will stabilize this industry as to price; and if there is an increase of 25 cents a ton this is a 12½-percent increase, which is a large increase. But how will 25 cents a ton affect coal selling for $9 or $12 a ton? It would be only a 2½-percent increase. This increase in price to the consumer would be practically nothing. This bill, if it works well, will be a greater benefit to the consumer than to the producer. It will provide a constant, even flow of coal on the railroads and will supply the dealer with a ready, constant supply of coal, thereby making it unnecessary for him to keep a large stock for emergencies, such as strikes, and so forth.

I want to disabuse the minds of those of you who live in far-away sections about this matter of increase in price. It is the judgment of the producers of coal, it is the judgment of the transporters of coal, and of the coal experts everywhere that the price will not be increased greatly. This is not a price-increasing bill—it is a stabilizing bill.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. GREEVER. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Have the constitutional objections raised by the Supreme Court decision been met in this bill in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman has asked a very appropriate question at an appropriate time, for I was coming to that point now.

There are only two points in this bill, as I see it, that the average citizen will worry about, and they are two very important ones. One is what is going to be the additional cost, which is a practical, economic question, and which I have just discussed. And the next question is the one which the gentleman asked, Is this bill constitutional? There may be some doubt as to the constitutionality of this bill as it is now written, but it must be said that this bill has been drawn in an honest effort to meet the objections to the old bill as found by the majority of the Supreme Court and at the same time to meet the suggestions in the minority opinion of the Supreme Court.

In the first place it must be admitted that the principal objections to the first bill were found on the fact that it assumed to fix the wages of those engaged in the coal industry. This bill under consideration omits all consideration of the question of wages unless it can be held that since about 80 percent of the cost of the production of coal is made up of wages that no fair and complete consideration can be given by the price-fixing boards for the fixing of the price of coal that will not directly deal with the question of wages.

If we can divorce this bill entirely from any connection with the control of wages, then we have only one other question. That is: Can Congress in an effort to stabilize the coal industry for the benefit of the industry, the miners, the consumer, and the public generally, so control the passage of coal in interstate commerce as to establish a code of fair prices and lay a charge on all coal produced with a draw-back to those who produce according to regulations of the code? The answer is that Congress has full power to control the passage of coal through interstate commerce, and if it is necessary to fix the prices in order to prevent an interference with the steady flow of coal in interstate commerce, Congress may fix prices.

Justice Hughes, in his minority opinion in the Guffey case, says:

> The marketing provisions (part II) of the code naturally form a separate category. The interdependence of wages and prices is no clearer in the coal business than in transportation. But the broad regulation of rates in order to stabilize transportation conditions has not carried with it the necessity of fixing wages. Again, the requirement, in paragraph (a) of part II that district boards shall establish prices so as to yield a prescribed "return per net ton" for each district in a minimum price area, in order "to sustain the stabilization of wages, working conditions, and maximum hours of labor", does not link the market provisions to the labor provisions by an unbreakable bond. Congress evidently desired stabilization through both the provisions relating to marketing and those relating to labor, but the setting up of the two sorts of requirements did not make the one dependent upon the validity of the other. It is apparent that they are not so interwoven that they cannot have separate operation and effect. The marketing provisions in relation to interstate commerce can be carried out as provided in part II without regard to the labor provisions contained in part III. That fact, in the light of the congressional declaration of separability, should be considered of controlling importance."

The majority opinion is careful not to say that it renders any final decision with reference to the power of Congress to fix prices. In one of its concluding paragraphs the majority of the Court say in their opinion:

> The price-fixing provisions of the code are thus disposed of without coming to the question of their constitutionality; but neither this disposition of the matter nor anything we have said is to be taken as indicating that the Court is of opinion that these provisions, if separately enacted, could be sustained.

Further in that same opinion the following paragraph appears:

> This seems plain enough; for Congress must have been conscious of the fact that elimination of the labor provisions from the act would seriously impair, if not destroy, the force and usefulness of the price provisions. The interdependence of wages and prices is manifest. Approximately two-thirds of the cost of producing a ton of coal is represented by wages. Fair prices necessarily depend upon the cost of production; and since wages constitute so large a proportion of the cost, prices cannot be fixed with any proper relation to cost without taking into consideration this major element. If one of them becomes uncertain, uncertainty with respect to the other necessarily ensues.

Also:

> One who produces or manufactures a commodity, subsequently sold and shipped by him in interstate commerce, whether such sale and shipment were originally intended or not, has engaged in two distinct and separate activities. So far as he produces or manufactures a commodity, his business is purely local. So far as he sells and ships, or contracts to sell and ship, the commodity to customers in another State, he engages in interstate commerce. In respect of the former, he is subject only to regulation by the State; in respect of the latter, to regulation only by the Federal Government.

Congress has on many occasions assumed to fix freight rates and other transportation rates without assuming in any way to fix the wages of the employees engaged in the transportation of those articles upon which the rates are fixed.

Justice Cardozo says in his dissenting opinion:

> Reasonable prices can as easily be ascertained for coal as for the carriage of passengers or property under the Interstate Commerce Act, or for services of brokers in the stockyards, or for the use of dwellings under the emergency rent laws. The standards established by this act are quite as definite as others that have the approval of this Court.

Is coal in itself subject exclusively to control of Congress as interstate commerce? No; it is not exclusively subject to the control of Congress as interstate commerce, but probably 90 percent of the coal that gets into the competitive market is moved in interstate commerce or has a direct influence on interstate commerce. There are many who think that if an article is sold in the same State where it has been produced, that that article cannot be controlled as in interstate commerce, and that it is strictly intrastate commerce. This is a very common error. The rule is that if the sale of the article directly affects interstate commerce it is subject to the laws controlling interstate commerce. To illustrate: Suppose I have a coal mine 10 miles outside of Columbus, Ohio, and produce 200 tons of coal daily, and put this coal on the Columbus market by trucks. I thereby sell this coal directly in competition with coal that is moved in interstate commerce, and if the quantity I sell is sufficient to have any direct affect on the market of coal in that community, my coal is subject to any regulations that would regulate coal in interstate commerce.

From the old case of Gibbons against Ogden in Ninth Wheaton, page 196, to the present time, there are many cases holding that Congress, under the Constitution, is given the full authority to control interstate commerce. The Court in that case says:

It is the power to regulate—that is, to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed. This power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to the utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution.

It might be well to bear in mind that the Constitution says:

Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with Indian tribes.

Justice Roberts, in the Nebbia case (291 U. S. 502), says:

Times without number we have said that the legislature is primarily the judge of the necessity of such an enactment and every possible presumption is in favor of its validity, and that though the Court may hold views inconsistent with the provisions of the law it may not be annulled unless palpably in excess of the legislative power.

Justice Hughes, in his opinion in the Guffey coal case, says:

But that is not the whole case. The act also provides for the regulation of the prices of bituminous coal sold in interstate commerce and prohibits unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce. Undoubtedly transactions in carrying on interstate commerce are subject to the Federal power to regulate that commerce, and the control of charges and the protection of fair competition in that commerce are familiar illustrations of the exercise of the power, as the Interstate Commerce Act, the Packers and Stockyards Act, and the antitrust acts abundantly show. The Court has repeatedly stated that the power to regulate interstate commerce among the several States is supreme and plenary (Minnesota Rate Case, 230 U. S. 352, 398). It is "complete in itself and may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution" (Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 196). We are not at liberty to deny to the Congress with respect to interstate commerce a power commensurate with that enjoyed by the States in the regulation of their internal commerce. See Nebbia v. New York (291 U. S. 502).

Whether the policy of fixing prices of commodities sold in interstate commerce is sound policy is not for our consideration. The question of that policy and of its particular applications is for Congress. The exercise of the power of regulation is subject to the constitutional restriction of the due-process clause, and if in fixing rates, prices, or conditions of competition that requirement is transgressed, the judicial power may be invoked to the end that the constitutional limitation may be maintained (Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 222 U. S. 541, 547; St. Joseph Stock Yards Co. v. United States, decided Apr. 27, 1936).

One of the leading cases on this subject is the case of Houston & Texas Railway v. United States (234 U. S. 342). The Court in that case says:

The object of the commerce clause was to prevent interstate trade from being destroyed or impeded by the rivalries of local governments, and it is the essence of the complete and paramount power confided to Congress to regulate interstate commerce that wherever it exists it dominates.

Wherever the interstate and intrastate transactions of carriers are so related that the government of the one involves the control of the other it is Congress, and not the State, that is entitled to prescribe the final and dominant rule; otherwise the Nation would not be supreme within the national field.

By section 3 of the Act to Regulate Commerce (24 Stat. 379, 380) Congress has delegated to the Interstate Commerce Commission power to prevent all discriminations against interstate commerce by interstate carriers subject to the act which it is within the power of Congress to condemn.

Also Swift v. United States (196 U. S. 375) says:

When cattle are sent for sale from a place in one State, with the expectation they will end their transit, after purchase, in another State, and when in effect they do so, with only the interruption necessary to find a purchaser at the stockyards, and when this is a constantly recurring course, it constitutes interstate commerce, and the purchase of the cattle is an incident of such commerce.

Also see Stafford v. Wallace (258 U. S. 495):

2. It is for Congress to decide from its general information and from the special evidence brought before it, the nature of evils, present or threatening, and to enact such legislation within its power as it deems necessary to remedy them; and this environment should be considered by the courts in interpreting the scope and effect of the act in order to determine its validity (p. 513).

5. Such a current interstate commerce is found in the uninterrupted movement of livestock from the West and Southwest into the great stockyards at Chicago and elsewhere, where it is sold by the consignee commission merchants to packers and livestock dealers at the stockyards, and in the movement thence into other States of the meat and other products of the animals slaughtered at the packing establishments and the live animals which are resold at the yards by the dealers for further feeding and fattening (p. 514).

9. It is primarily for Congress to consider and decide the danger of such acts or practices, and to meet it, and it is not for this Court to substitute its judgment in such a matter unless the relation of the subject to interstate commerce and its effect upon it are clearly nonexistent (p. 521).

Judge Cardozo, in his dissenting opinion, says:

With reference to the first objection, the obvious and sufficient answer is, so far as the act is directed to interstate transactions, that sales made in such conditions constitute interstate commerce, and do not merely "affect" it.

This bill under discussion has anticipated this question of the right of Congress to fix prices and contains a paragraph the sole purpose of which is to fix the rights of any person who might find himself aggrieved. The law specifically provides that the aggrieved individual may contest his case before the proper authorities set up in the bill, and further on page 7 of the bill the following language appears:

For the purpose of carrying out the declared policy of this act, the code shall contain the following conditions and provisions, which are intended to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal and which shall be applicable only to matters and transactions in or directly affecting interstate commerce in bituminous coal.

And further on page 25, the following language appears:

SEC. 4–A. Without in any way limiting the scope or application of section 4, whenever prices in intrastate commerce in any locality cause any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons and localities in such commerce on the one hand and interstate commerce on the other hand, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate commerce, such prices in such locality shall be subject to the provisions of section 4 hereof.

These two sections are to my notion the heart of the bill from the standpoint of its constitutionality. The first indicates that the bill assumes to deal with interstate commerce. The second sets out fully the rule by which it is determined whether a shipment or a transaction is within interstate commerce and what interference with interstate commerce means.

From all the above, it appears to me that this bill is constitutional as it is written. If in its application, hardships are worked on producers which amount to confiscation or oppression, then the remedy will be to work themselves out from the application of the law. The law as to them will still stand but the application will not affect them. Of course, if it should appear when the law is applied that any great number of coal producers can free themselves from its regulations, then the proper course will be to amend or repeal it. If on the other hand this bill operates as it is anticipated it will be greatly to the advantage of the employer, the employee, the consumer, and the public generally. The consumer will be satisfied because he will have a constant supply of coal moving quietly through interstate commerce. The dealer will not be required to pile up high supplies for fear of strikes and other contingencies. The transportation agencies will be able to move the coal with greater facility and at a cheaper rate. From my knowledge of the coal industry I conscientiously believe that such stabilization as intended to be provided in this bill will be for the best interests of all parties concerned in the coal industry.

The story of the sad plight in which the coal industry now finds itself has been written in many a document and treatise, but none of these have spoken so eloquently as do the sad countenances of the women and children in coal-mining districts, or the disappointed look of the miner who would work if he could get it, or the red figures on the ledgers of the operators. They are at least entitled to justice. Let us deal justly by them. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who have just spoken in favor of this legislation from the majority and the minority sides have told you of the demoralization in the bituminous-coal industry. I do not have time at my disposal to go into the provisions of the legislation, but, bringing this unhealthy condition forcibly to your attention, I shall read the following three or four telegrams which I have received from operators in my district:

FAIRMONT, W. VA., June 10, 1936.

Hon. JENNINGS RANDOLPH,
House of Representatives Office Building:
On account of the present deplorable conditions in the bituminous-coal industry, we feel it an urgent necessity that the coal bill be passed by Congress at this session, and I sincerely hope that you will lend your aid and encouragement for prompt and favorable action on this matter.

T. E. JOHNSON,
Vice President, Hutchinson Coal Co.

FAIRMONT, W. VA., May 25, 1936.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
The White House, Washington, D. C.:
Hon. JENNINGS RANDOLPH,
Member of Congress, House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:
We respectfully urge you to insist on immediate passage of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1936 in order to prevent widespread unemployment, destructive wage cutting, and bankruptcy of coal-producing companies in northern West Virginia.

CONTINENTAL COAL CO.,
By D. J. CARROLL, President.

FAIRMONT, W. VA., May 25, 1936.

Hon. JENNINGS RANDOLPH,
Washington, D. C.:
During the past 40 days three coal companies in Monongalia County have gone into receiver's hands. Unless there is immediate passage of some legislation establishing the price of coal the industry will be completely demoralized. We look for your help.

HICKMAN MILLER COAL CO.

FAIRMONT, W. VA., May 25, 1936.

Hon. JENNINGS RANDOLPH,
House of Representatives Office Building:
On account of the present demoralized condition of the bituminous coal industry we feel it a grave necessity that the Bituminous Coal Act of 1936, which was introduced in the Senate and House on May 20 last, should be passed at this session of Congress, and trust that you will lend your influence and support for the immediate and favorable action of Congress on this bill.

M. L. HUTCHINSON,
President, Hutchinson Coal Co.

These pleas come from active operators who are faced with a situation with which they are unable to cope and they come to us asking for help. Certainly we cannot deny to them the aid which this Federal Government can and should extend to an industry which was on its back at the time the provisions of the N. R. A. lifted it up and breathed new life into its body. No one familiar with bituminous coal mining can say truthfully that the industry did not make advancement under that act. The code of fair practice, the increased pay to the miners, and profit to the operators resulted. When that aid ceased, the industry returned to its old cut-throat competition and inadequate pay to the worker. With the first coal-stabilization bill, hope was again revived and the operator and miner joined in a successful effort. That ill-fated attempt was outlawed, and today the industry flounders. We must face the facts and know that we cannot escape our obligation.

West Virginia is the largest bituminous coal producing State in the Union, as I have stated before on this floor when the previous coal legislation was being considered. Nine of my 15 congressional counties produce bituminous coal. I know the problems of this business, and I appeal to every Member here today to assist us of the coal-producing States in this honest effort to enact in the closing days of this session the Guffey-Vinson coal bill.

To the members of this committee let me say that this chaotic condition in the bituminous coal mining industry today is deplorable. It is heart-tugging. It is a problem which this Congress must meet by some type of legislation.

I believe that this measure we are now considering is effective and will help us in our time of need. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, when the N. R. A. was declared unconstitutional, practically 100 percent of all of the coal operators came here to Washington and asked that it be reenacted to take care of the coal industry as it was taken care of in the N. R. A. When the coal bill of last year, 10 months ago today, the Guffey-Snyder coal bill, was under consideration, about 70 percent of the tonnage-output operators were here in favor of it, and about 30 percent were against it. I might say that 30 percent was made up of some of the bigger interests, the larger interests.

Down at the Coal Commission today you will find that about 81 or 82 percent of the tonnage-output operators, operating under the Guffey-Snyder Act just declared unconstitutional, were signed up and going along happily, and of course practically 100 percent of labor. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] talked to you of the chaotic condition of the coal industry in West Virginia. My district happens to be a coal district which can turn out not 500 cars a day, but can turn out 1,000 cars of coal per day every day in the year. The conditions there were deplorable, but I am happy to report that under the N. R. A. and under the Guffey-Snyder Coal Act, and now under the Guffey-Vinson bill, we can look forward to conditions much better than the bituminous-coal industry has ever seen. The price of coal, as we will be shown by the table which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] will insert in the RECORD, throughout the Nation has been and will be from 1 to 10 cents greater per ton than it was under cutthroat competition.

At this point, I take a moment to say that we should express our appreciation to the Committee on Ways and Means, and to the chairman of the subcommittee last year and this year having charge of the coal bill.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] had most to do in bringing the Guffey-Snyder coal-stabilization bill to the floor of the House last year. The able manner in which he fought off the opponents of the bill last year had much to do with the passage of the act at that time. It passed by a vote of 196 to 168. It was only appropriate after the Supreme Court made it necessary to put through another bituminous coal bill that Mr. VINSON should be the House author of it, because of the unlimited energy and good spirit he displayed in helping me last year.

The application of the Guffey-Snyder Coal Act, in operation in the bituminous-coal industry for 9 months, educated millions of people to the fact that we must have some sort of regulation and stabilization in the bituminous-coal industry to keep the coal companies from going into bankruptcy and afford employment for miners to keep them off relief.

As I said last year when the coal bill was under consideration, I know the small operator as well as I know the United Mine Workers. I know of many small operators that went into bankruptcy because of the cutthroat practices that existed prior to the N. R. A. I know the attitude and spirit of the United Mine Workers of America. They, through their leaders, desire cooperation at all times with the operators and with the general public. I found since the N. R. A. went into effect that there is more happiness and contentment and hope among the miners than at any time in the 25 years that I have closely followed their activity.

Mr. Chairman, those of us who took an active part in putting the Guffey-Snyder Coal Act through last year feel doubly rewarded here today for having done so. The very fact that there is practically no opposition to the bill before us today is evidence that most Members of Congress realize that social legislation must have consideration.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I have no bituminous-coal mines in my district. I was away when the last Guffey coal bill was voted upon in the House. I presume I would have voted against it on constitutional grounds, but it seems to me that we are faced with a condition with which the pending bill offers a partial solution. The soft-coal industry is stricken, stricken almost to death. Operators and miners have issued a Macedonian cry to us to come over and help. There are Members of Congress who now say that we cannot do anything, that we are powerless, that we are unable to help the third greatest industry in the United States, employing 400,000 people. But I say to you that I am prepared to vote for this bill because I believe it is sound, meritorious, and helpful to a great industry that needs to be stabilized in the interest of the operators, the miners, and the public. [Applause.] A lot of Republicans voted for the N. R. A. We voted for it as a temporary proposition. I wish the N. R. A. originally had been applied only to natural resources, to coal, oil, lumber, and if it had been, I believe it would have been held constitutional, but when you applied it to 800 different industries in America and then set up bureaucracies in Washington to regiment and control those 800 different industries, it broke down of its own weight. It had actually collapsed before the Supreme Court acted and held it unconstitutional. I would remind those on the Republican side that this is not the first time that the call has come for help from the soft-coal industry, either in our own country or in other nations of the world. In England a few years ago there was a general strike because of the deplorable and demoralized condition of the coal industry which produced poverty, squalor, and disease among the poverty-stricken miners due to overproduction and low standards of wages and living. Every country has been confronted with requests for protective legislation, and it comes naturally before us. We cannot evade it whether we are Republicans or Democrats. It is not a Republican or a Democratic measure. It is our duty as Members of Congress to face the facts and conditions, and if those conditions exist and this industry is demoralized and stricken to death, then we ought to help, regardless of politics or partisanship. I, for one, propose to vote for this measure, and state that I agree with the great Chief Justice Hughes, of the Supreme Court, who comes from the State of New York, that the Congress has the power to act in this instance, and that we have the power, if necessary, to fix prices in interstate commerce. I do not like to fix minimum prices on coal, but if it will stabilize the industry and stop the cutthroat competition and prevent strikes and bloodshed, it is in the public interest. I hope the bill will pass for the good of the coal industry and for the general welfare of the American people, as I believe it is a step toward social and industrial justice within the confines of the Constitution. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH].

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to propound a question for the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON]. I would like to ask if it is not a fact that the passage of this bill, the Vinson-Guffey bill, would be instrumental in preventing the exploitation of 400,000 miners, the bankruptcy of the operators, the demoralization of the entire coal industry, would have prevented thousands of strikes during the last generation, and would perfect the stabilization of the industry and be instrumental in supplementing the purchasing and consuming power of the coal miners for the benefit of the great industrial centers of the East.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The statement has been made as it only could be made by my good friend and great humanitarian, the gentleman from New York, Dr. SIROVICH. [Applause.]

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the greatest economic trinity that ever occurred on this earth was back in 1781, when steam, coal, and iron came together. Industry exhausted the wood supply in England and had to resort to coal for its iron smelters. In order to get the coal out of the pits they had to pump the water out of them. Pumping was done by hand. It remained for Stephenson and Watt, who translated steam into terms of power by inventing the steam engine, to lift the water out of the coal mines so that coal could be used in the iron smelters of England. Coal, iron, and steam were the great trinity of the industrial revolution. From that day on for more than a hundred years coal was the principal and virtually only source of power and energy; and then something happened. The coal industry became sick. You can go through my district, for instance, and see the ghosts of what were once live and virile towns. They are only slatterns today. Once they were thriving mining towns. Today they are but feeble communities. The coal industry is sick in the United States and it is sick in the State of Illinois. We have 54 counties out of 103 that produce coal. At one time we hoisted 80,000,000 tons a year. Today we hoist less than 40,000,000 tons. We had 100,000 miners on duty in Illinois some 10 or 15 years ago, and today we have less than 40,000, which is an indication that the coal industry in our State is sick. Why? For two reasons: First, conditions within the industry; and, second, conditions without. So far as conditions within the industry are concerned, I might say it is largely due to overexpansion, to the desire to maintain markets at any price, to the desire to invade new markets, and to a disregard for our coal resources. If you know anything about the coal business, you might know that in many localities they go down into the bowels of the earth and take out the choicest coal, the thick seams, the coal that is most accessible, and leave the pillar coal for somebody in the future, or to be added to part of the waste of the Nation. The idea is to speed production, hold down production costs, hold down overhead, in order to meet an insane competition.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] knows about that. That is one of the conditions within the industry that has made it sick. This intensely competitive condition is one reason why 125,000 miners were on strike in 1933 and lost nearly 4,000,000 man-days of labor.

Then there are conditions without. What are they? First of all, competition. Electrical energy today supplies about 11 percent of the total energy consumed in this country. This Congress, this administration, and this Government are annually subsidizing the production of electrical industry of the country, which is a persistent competitor with coal.

In my brief career in this body we have authorized the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars for the production of electrical energy at Muscle Shoals, at the Grand Coulee Dam on the Columbia River, at the Bonneville Dam, at Boulder Dam, and others. The end is not yet. Seldom a day that some Member does not suggest the construction of an electrical authority back in his district, with funds to be derived from the Federal Government. As an indication of the enormity of this competition it will be possible to generate 8,000,000,000 kilowatts of firm energy on the Grand Coulee upon completion and over 4,000,000,000 kilowatts of secondary power annually. At Boulder Dam the annual capacity of firm power will be about four and one-third billion kilowatts and about one and one-half billion kilowatts of secondary power.

At no time have I ever heard a voice raised in behalf of the miners of this Nation, some of whom will be displaced in their jobs by this vast increment of electrical energy, made possible out of the Federal Treasury at the expense of the taxpayers. And the miner is one of the taxpayers who must contribute to destroy his own job.

Secondly, there is the competition from natural gas. Today natural gas is produced in 24 States and consumed in 35 States. There are 8,000,000 gas users today. Fifty thousand miles of gas lines honeycomb this Nation, and the annual revenues from natural gas, including transportation charges, mounted to $394,000,000 in 1934.

Third, the competition of petroleum. In 1900 we produced less than 200,000,000 barrels, while last year we produced almost a billion barrels. These great superlocomotives that will haul people to the centennial at Dallas, Tex., and San Francisco, the diesel engines which drive the pumps of the country, the diesel engines that send the steamships across the water, are oil-burning engines today instead of coal-burning. That is the reason the coal industry is sick. It has been there as a kind of static development, and here are the inroads from without and instability and disorganization from within. So they come to Congress in the hour of chaos and say, "Do something for us." What are we going to do? We have some choices. We can abandon them. We can say to the four or five hundred thousand miners, "You work out your own salvation." That is, simply abandon them to their own devices. I say to you that you cannot abandon an entire industry. You cannot abandon an industry which employs more men than any single given industry in this country. Such a course is unthinkable. The output of this industry slipped from $2,000,000,000 in 1920 to less than $500,000,000 in 1932. With relentless competition from without and instability from within, something must be done as a matter of national welfare.

We might insist to this industry that it seek to work out its salvation under the old Appalachian plan. That would be all right if you did not have such a diversity of conditions, wages, hours, and varieties of coal with which to contend. That would be all right if some of the absentee operators were more concerned about the conservation of our coal resources and the conditions in the industry than about the production of volume and the invasion of new markets without a single restriction.

We can take over the coal industry and make it a nationalized industry. We do not want to do that. We can hand it over to the State, but I say to you that the $5 miner in the State of Illinois is no match for the $2 miner in Kentucky, and the State of Illinois with all its instrumentalities has nothing to say about what kind of wage they shall pay in the mines of Kentucky, nor have we anything to say about what wages they shall pay across the line in the State of Indiana. So what shall we do? Shall we continue to fight miner against miner, operator against operator, to destroy this great natural industry, to waste this natural resource? Certainly not. Something must be done and there is only one thing to do. If the States cannot handle it, if we do not want to nationalize, if we do not want to socialize the coal industry and take it over, then there is but one thing we can do and that is to have the lawmaking power of the Federal Government take charge, and insofar as commerce is affected, insofar as it goes into interstate commerce, we shall step in with the hope of stabilizing prices so that fair and equitable conditions might prevail and a stable and steady supply of coal maintained at all times. Out of fair and equitable conditions which look to the preservation of the industry, stability can be restored and fair wages and living conditions effected through collective bargaining. The industry does not ask the intervention of the Government in respect to the matter of wages.

Let me point out the fact that the livelihood and the welfare of over 400,000 miners are involved. I think everybody in this Congress has a sincere desire to do something for an industry of this kind. I have often reflected on the sincerity and the earnestness with which the Members of Congress have sought to find some solution and remedy. We are like the plant set in the cellar in the winter time. Those tender green tendrils somehow reach up to the light that comes in through the little window, and that is what we are all doing—we are reaching up for a little light and trying to find a solution to this problem. Considering the historical background and the factors involved and motivated by human, Christian impulses, the Federal Government is going to have to step in and stabilize this industry and give assurance once more to 400,000 miners and their families that we have a decent and real regard for their welfare and are going to make some kind of contribution instead of abandoning them to the vagaries of the industry and seeing them go back to what Kipling once called the law of the jungle. I, for one, am going to vote for this bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, as one who has actually been engaged in the coal industry for more than 15 years, and who, by reason of drastic and unfair competitive practices, was bankrupted and driven out of it, I come today to undertake to reveal to my colleagues in this House some of the reasons why I think this character of legislation should be enacted. I can remember the time when the State of my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] was one of the best markets for southern coal. When I was in the coal business I sold coal delivered f. o. b. mines at prices ranging from 80 cents per ton to $12.50 per ton to people consuming it in the State of Michigan.

I know that unless we can maintain some system of regulation that will control not only the production but the marketing of coal, this industry as a whole is doomed to disaster and destruction. I think not only of the 450,000 men who are engaged in the industry in the production of coal, but also of the numerous thousands of defenseless women and children wholly dependent upon the toil of the men who mine the coal. In my congressional district of eight counties hugged up between the borders of three States are produced annually 20,000,000 tons of coal. This 20,000,000 tons of coal returns to the people of the district—to the merchants, the doctors, and the other businessmen—about $45,000,000. When this industry is destroyed in this field we shall have nothing left but Oliver Goldsmith's deserted villages, one after the other, on every creek and in every valley.

I say, therefore, to you of the North and the East, that you need not fear the question of price regulation as being destructive, because it is the only thing in the world that will protect you against exorbitant prices.

When I was in the coal business, the man across the ravine from me, in order to get an order for coal, would sell his slack coal at 20 cents a ton, and sometimes they would ship it on shipper's order or consignment, to be paid for at destination, without a destination; and when it reached the docks at the Lakes, which was the market place for the consumers of the Northwest, it was immediately dumped out by the railroads and used as fills for railroad tracks. That is what competition did to the coal industry following the exorbitant prices we experienced for 2 years after the World War. The enactment of the pending bill will enable the industry to regulate itself and protect the public from unreasonable prices.

I can remember a little coal mine that loaded 10 gondola cars of coal a day, which sold 1 day's production for more than $9,000 in cash, or $18.50 per ton f. o. b. the mines. That meant that when it went yonder to the northern markets for consumption the people could not consume it, and the coal operators and the coal producers were standing still day in and day out, month in and month out, year in and year out, face to face with three great competitive fuels—crude oil, natural gas, and electricity. Crude oil is a clean fuel. Natural gas is easily handled and consumed. Electricity, whether produced by a private utility or subsidized by the Federal Government, is annually taking millions of dollars from the coal producers and thereby driving out of employment thousands and hundreds of thousands of men.

As one who has suffered the penalty of drastic competition, I would like to see stabilized an industry that will feed men, women, and children, prevent starvation, and keep the camp-house doors from being nailed up as a result of unfair competition. These three fuels, commonly known as laborless fuel, meaning, of course, that when installation is once made the hundreds of thousands of men usually employed in the development work are eliminated by the law of necessity, and, therefore, the gas pumped by hundreds of millions of cubic feet by one pumping plant operated by a very few men is a natural comparison between the number of men required to produce coal necessary to afford the same number of heat units. Electricity, of course, is even more striking as a laborless fuel. Two men at a power-house, and four or five at the outside, will operate a plant that will produce electricity enough to heat and light a great city, while the number of men required to produce coal enough to perform the same service will run into the thousands and wages paid for the production of the coal will feed, clothe, and school thousands of children. Likewise, with hydroelectricity, where one huge dam that costs millions of dollars will produce and distribute by falling water enough electricity to heat and light many great cities, and by an integrated system of transmission lines can be transmitted to and consumed by millions of people; while, on the other hand, the daily output of bituminous coal in the United States is sufficient to load a train of cars reaching from Pittsburgh, Pa., to New York City, a distance of 352 miles, loading 37,267 average railway cars holding 50 tons per car; and if the coal industry is not permitted to protect itself against the competition of these three competing fuels—natural gas, electricity, and fuel oil—thousands and thousands of railroad men employed in the transportation and marketing of this coal and other thousands engaged in its distribution will be deprived of employment.

The coal industry comes to the Congress with this legislation asking not for a dole or appropriation but the mere privilege of using the machinery of the Federal Government to impose upon itself a tax for the administration of the law which it seeks. The truth of the matter is that the Congress has always discriminated against the mineral industry and in favor of agriculture in the matter of appropriations. For instance, for the fiscal years 1936–37 there has been appropriated to the entire mineral industry and to the Bureau of Mines for its activities less than $4,000,000, while there has been appropriated for the same 2 years, as of July 2, 1936, for the Department of Agriculture, covering the fiscal years 1936–37, a total of $1,702,850,759. This is shown in a table furnished to me by the Appropriations Committee of the House and the Department of Agriculture, which I include in my remarks at this point:

Department of Agriculture appropriations, fiscal years 1936 and 1937, as of June 2, 1936

Without coal, iron, steel, and other minerals, agriculture could not function, and yet the very basic industries upon which the life of the Nation depends are not only discriminated against but the taxes paid by the two industries is a striking illustration of how unfair the Congress has been to the mining industries, and I speak of this not in condemnation of agriculture, for I have voted for everything agriculture has asked ever since I have been in Congress. The mining industry is valued by Government statistics at twelve to fifteen billions of dollars, and for the years 1924 to 1928 the mineral industry paid in taxes to the Federal Government the sum of $800,064,024, while agriculture paid only the sum of $151,261,405. Coal mining is one of the largest employing industries, and more than 27,000 men in the 8 counties of my congressional district are engaged in the mining and production of coal, and the industry is actively engaged in 28 of the American States and in 2,024 of the 3,071 counties of the United States. I favor the enactment of this bill and shall vote for it when it comes up for passage. [Applause.]

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] such time as he may desire.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, representing a district consisting of 11 counties, 5 of which produce bituminous coal in considerable quantity, I am naturally very greatly interested in this legislation. I do not think there is any industry that has suffered more in recent years than the coal industry. As a matter of fact, it has suffered to the point of prostration. I remember a few years ago the coal industry was prosperous. The coal workers were commanding good wages and living bountifully. The mines were running full tilt, coal was commanding a fair price, and the miner and his family were happy and contented.

Mr. Chairman, I have lived in a coal-mining town for 35 years, and I personally know something of the situation that formerly obtained, as well as the situation which now prevails in the average Tennessee and Kentucky coal-mining community. A few years ago, as I stated before, coal mining was a profitable occupation. No one in the community in those days was better clothed than the coal miner, and no family enjoyed more of the comforts and luxuries than did his family. But during the past few years the coal industry has been hard hit. Today it presents a most dismal and pathetic picture. Both the operator and the miner have been the victims of these adverse and evil days. With work only 2 or 3 days per week and with wages reduced to an almost irreducible minimum, the miner has been also reduced to a condition approaching poverty.

Suppose, Mr. Chairman, this bill may add a few pennies to the price of coal. The purchaser will have his compensation in seeing the miner, his wife, and children enjoy some of the necessaries and comforts that come from a decent and living wage.

As I understand it, this legislation is not directed so much to the increase in the price of coal as it is to the principle of stabilizing the coal industry and eliminating from it some of the degrading cutthroat practices that have proved so disastrous.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, it is admitted on all sides that the bituminous-coal industry is not only a sick industry, but is recognized by economic doctors to be a dying industry. The solution which is now offered is the solution of price fixing. It seems to me that price fixing is artificial respiration to keep a dying industry alive for a short while. In the long run we must seek an ultimate solution, and whether or not we like the term, whether or not you like to do it, the inevitable solution of the problems of the bituminous-coal industry will have to be nationalization. The sooner we realize it the more realistically will we deal with this problem. However, I fully appreciate that neither this Congress nor perhaps the next Congress will deal with this problem from the standpoint of nationalization; therefore, appreciating the chaos and the emergency which might arise if this legislation is not passed, I am going to vote for this bill, for the only reason that we are dealing with an emergency and with the hope that during the temporary respite gained by this bill we will work out a plan of nationalization for this industry which will be of benefit to consumers and miners.

I regret exceedingly that the bill does not contain any labor legislation. It is tragic indeed that the legislative body again bows to the will of the Supreme Court on the question of labor legislation, but there is one saving phase in connection with this situation. While there is no labor legislation in this bill, very fortunately there exists in this industry a powerful and a progressive workers' organization—the United Mine Workers of America—which will enforce the economic demands of the miners in the bituminous industry despite the lack of labor legislation in this particular bill. In other words, they are so well organized and their leadership is progressive and militant enough to write in labor provisions with the pen of economic strength.

As to the constitutionality feature, no one can prophesy what will be held constitutional or unconstitutional. Experience has taught us that all social-welfare and labor legislation is ever under the threat of the Damascus sword of the Supreme Court of the United States. No social-welfare legislation, no labor legislation, no legislation for the benefit of the American people, can be deemed safe until the Congress of the United States will have the courage to curb the power of the United States Supreme Court. These problems, however, will not be solved by this Congress. They will not be legislated upon at this time by this Congress. Therefore, having in mind the emergency and the chaos that may arise if this legislation is not enacted into law, and having in mind that there exists a powerful union—the United Mine Workers of America—to protect the mine workers of this Nation by fighting it out on the economic battle front if it becomes necessary, I shall vote in favor of this bill.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. EDMISTON].

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, there has been something said by a few opponents of this measure about the increased cost of coal. May I call the attention of Members of the House to the fact that the cost in practically every industrial district of the United States per ton for coal is not increased by the few cents that this bill will increase the cost per ton at the mine. About 10 percent of the cost in most of the industrial areas is the actual cost of a ton of coal at the mine in West Virginia, Kentucky, or Pennsylvania. The coalyards of this country have never passed that extra cost on to the consumer. When coal in West Virginia was selling for 65 cents a ton f. o. b. the mines, and when the miners were working for starvation wages and the coal operators were going broke, you were still paying the same price for coal then as you are now in the consuming centers of the East and West.

Another thing, this bill will stabilize the price of coal and put the industry on a fair basis under all conditions, regardless of weather or anything else. They cannot take advantage of you who live in Michigan during a cold, severe winter. There never has been a coal shortage in this country. It is the shortage of transportation facilities to take the coal to the consumer. We can mine in West Virginia all the coal that this country can use in the next 100 years. It is simply a question of getting it to the consumer, and that is the thing which makes the cost of coal high to the consumer.

The coal industry has been regulated since the N. R. A. Act was passed. Since 1933 the price of coal has been regulated by a governmental agency, either the N. R. A. or the Bituminous Coal Commission, and you have not had an increase in the cost of coal during 1933, 1934, 1935, or 1936, during which time the coal industry has been regulated by a governmental agency. Nor will you have after this bill is passed.

I checked the vote on the passage of this bill in the last session, and I noted there were numerous Southern States that voted unanimously against this measure. I call attention of the Members of the South that we voted for the tobacco bill, the cotton bill, the potato, hog, and corn bills. If you are going to play that sort of ball when it comes to the coal industry, we will remember it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I also yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, the enormity of this question has become a very impressive fact, especially when it is realized that there are vast deposits of bituminous coal in practically every township west of the Susquehanna River out to Montana and through Canada to Alaska. Therefore this is a grave question.

My first contact with the coal question came in the anthracite region when I was a member of the State senate and when we had strikes, lock-outs, and all kinds of labor difficulties, until President Roosevelt sent a commission to that section to solve the problem, which they did. I have always felt there was some genius of direction in the United Mine Workers of America to accomplish this result. They have now undertaken to do the same thing with respect to the soft-coal situation, and I come not from a soft-coal section entirely, but in one county that I represent, according to the geological reports, there are now there 1,000,000,000 tons of coal which they have tried to mine for many years, with more or less success. There are stretching parallel over this great region two railroads, one of standard gage and one of narrow gage. One is now in the hands of a receiver and the other is not any too strong financially.

This is the reason I am for this bill. It has nothing to do with politics. It certainly is an economic question, and one that appeals to me, because I know all about it. I am a good deal like the gentleman who said he knew the world is round because he had been around it. I know about this coal situation because I have traversed this section, and I may say to you that the misery and the woe and the destitution I saw throughout that region certainly appealed to my heart and encouraged me to do anything that I possibly could to bring happiness and prosperity back to this region, so they may get out this vast deposit of coal.

Now, I voted for the bill the other time, but the trouble with most legislation is that we are in too much of a hurry, and that measure was put through with too much speed. There was not an opportunity to consider the constitutional aspect of the bill, and therefore they made a little mistake, and they do this with almost every piece of legislation of wide application, and the measure invariably comes back to Congress for correction, and the fathers have made provision for such corrections to be made.

You have now made the correction in this bill, and I may say to you that since this law was passed and put into operation and before it was thrown out by the Supreme Court I was through this same territory up in Huntingdon and Bedford Counties, in the heart of Pennsylvania, and the mine workers and the mine leaders told me that there had been a great revival in the mining industry and that the men who worked at the mines and the men who operate them and the bankers and the people generally are much happier, not that they get any great amount of increase in wages, but instead of 2 days a week they get 5 days a week to work, and I call this progress, and I want to further this condition all I can. [Applause.]

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to be customary during the last year or two to have in the preamble of a legislative act a stump speech, and the stump speech in the Guffey bill no. 1 was a masterpiece. The one in the bill before us is much shorter and less convincing. There is an evident determination here that this act shall be constitutional by declaration.

I listened with interest to my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and really, Mr. Chairman, I am not unconscious of the deplorable conditions in the mining industry and the miners engaged therein, as well as their families, in these various sections of the country. Sixteen years ago I heard that story on the floor here in a wonderful word picture painted by former Representative Casey, of Pennsylvania, and the memory of it is still with me. I know something about it, at least by hearsay. I have had no personal contacts. The people in my section of the country are consumers. They are not miners, and there is no coal there of any description. However, there is something more involved here than the Guffey coal bill. The first bill was declared unconstitutional.

Mr. KELLER. By what vote?

Mr. CROWTHER. Five to four, I understand, and there have been many other important 4-to-5 decisions, and let me say that from the State where the gentleman, who interrupted me without addressing the Speaker, resides—and I forgive him because he is a very intellectual and kindly gentleman and I realize he would not so offend knowingly—there are several thousand miners who have never approved of this legislation from the beginning. Some of the strongest protests I have received have been from their organizations. Now, it may be this is due entirely to a feud or bad feeling between the independent miners and the United Miners' organization.

I am not well enough informed to know whether that is the reason, but as a matter of fact the miners of this country are not by any means unanimously in favor of this legislation. Do not forget that. We have a price-fixing section in this bill and I think what the Supreme Court said is rather significant, with respect to these provisions. I quote from what the Court said:

> The price-fixing provisions of the code are thus disposed of without coming to the question of their constitutionality; but neither this disposition of the matter, nor anything we have said, is to be taken as indicating that the Court is of the opinion that these provsions, if separaely enacted, could be sustained.

To me that is particularly significant, in view of the fact that the labor provisions are out, and the price-fixing provisions are still in this bill. And while some Members say that it will be a great help to the mining industry, I say to you I think it will be very keenly disappointing in respect to the measure of improvement that it will bring to the living conditions and wages of the miners in the bituminous fields. I am satisfied of that.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. The gentleman will pardon me. The enactment of this legislation means that we are going back to regimentation of industry, to a reenactment of the codes which have been thrown into the discard by the Supreme Court. Here you have a provision that even those most interested and in favor of the bill are willing to acknowledge is a penalty of 15 percent, disguised as an excise tax, 90 percent of it to be refunded if the operator signs the code on the dotted line. It seems to me, as in the child-labor case, that the tax loses its identity as a tax, and has become purely and definitely a penalty, and I feel sure that will be given some consideration if this proposed law again comes before the Court for a decision.

If we enact this particular legislation, we can reasonably expect, regardless of who controls the next Congress, more legislation of the same character. Already we have—and I am not sure whether it has been reported, though I think it has—a so-called Ellenbogen bill providing a hook-up of this character for the textile industry, with a commission, with a code, with a whole host of regulatory provisions. You must expect one in the near future for the electrical industry, one for the automobile industry, one for the wool-textile industry, one for the silk industry, one for the jewelry industry. If for one, why not for all of the others? In the other bill we had a special labor board. Of course, it was stricken out of this bill. During the course of the hearings I asked one of the witnesses why the necessity for a special board in the bituminous-coal industry. I suggested to him that we have the National Labor Relations Board, that we have Mr. McGrady, and the Secretary of Labor, Miss Perkins, and several mediation boards, so why a special board in this industry? This witness said it was because these others did not speak the coal miners' language. He wanted a special board, and that is what we are coming to. Of course, it will probably develop the inclusion of labor boards and other codes, when these bills are brought in for other industries, for we will be faced with that proposition sooner or later.

I quote from the minority report:

> We think it is unwholesome and not in accord with democratic government to give special interests the monopolistic power to fix their own minimum prices—

Oh, I know there is a quarrel as to whether the coal industry itself or the commission determines the price, but the coal industry will have a powerful influence nevertheless—> which the public will be required to pay.

You have a Commission of seven, three not to be connected with the business in a financial or in any other way, two from the United Mine Workers—through it does not expressly so state, yet that is what it means—and two from the operators, and we have one member to sit with the seven others who is to represent the dear people of the country, the consumers. His title is legislative counsel, and what a fine chance he will have with those other seven! What chance has Mr. John Q. Public under those circumstances?

Mr. Chairman, this bill was originally a "must" bill, "must" legislation, and I presume it is "must" legislation now. This is the bill regarding which the President wrote a letter to our subcommittee, telling us that we "were not to allow any doubts as to its constitutionality, however reasonable, to block the enactment of the proposed legislation." I think it is peculiarly significant that up to this good hour no letter has been received from the Chief Executive, but even so I presume that the bill will pass without the least trouble. If I thought the bill would help to restore to something like normal the deplorable conditions that exist among the wives and children of these desolate miners, I should be tempted to vote for it, but I do not believe there is anything here that will bring about any better conditions. They could have done it in the intervening years. They did not have to wait for this bill to better the deplorable existing conditions in the mining centers of the country.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman understand that about 80 percent of the traffic of the A–1 railroads in the eastern section of the United States is bituminous coal, and that that gives employment to thousands and thousands of railroad men that otherwise would not be employed?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes; and I also realize that this administration during the last 2 or 3 years has completely lost its sense of proportion in the development of "white coal," or the development of hydroelectric power, which means a reduction in the necessity for bituminous coal in this country. [Applause.] The bituminous-coal industry is being gradually destroyed. Every new hydroelectric project but adds to the destitution of the miner's family by reducing the demand for the product of his labor.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN. The passage of this legislation will establish a precedent. Would there be any reason why we should not then pass legislation to fix farm prices and industrial prices?

Mr. CROWTHER. Certainly not. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECREST].

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Chairman, during the past 2 years, by voluntary agreement and by governmental regulations, coal production in the State of Ohio has greatly increased, wages have been almost doubled, and working conditions have been improved. Hours have been shortened and the operators for the first time in many years now see an opportunity for fair profits. Unless something can be done to continue the regulations that have been in effect, these gains that were made for the benefit of operators, consumers, and miners alike will most certainly be lost.

I want to read a telegram from the officials of the United Mine Workers in Ohio, to which every coal miner in Ohio now belongs. It is dated June 2, 1936:

> Thirty thousand Ohio miners respectfully petition you to support and pass at this session of Congress the Guffey-Vinson coal-stabilization bill. It is very important that this be done to protect the coal industry of our State. We trust that we will have favorable action on your part in the support of this bill, as many distressed miners and mine communities now are looking to Congress for relief of this character.

This is signed by John Owens, president, and G. W. Savage, secretary-treasurer, of the Ohio miners.

I likewise have a communication signed by 36 of the largest producing operators in the State of Ohio, 3 of which—the Cambridge Collieries Co., the Akron Coal Co., and the Muskingum Coal Co.—are operating in my district. This telegram reads:

> The undersigned coal operators in Ohio, who in 1935 produced more than twelve and one-half millions tons, which is 80 percent of all the coal produced by rail shippers in Ohio in 1935, desire to voice their entire approval of the bill designed to regulate and stabilize the bituminous-coal industry. We respectfully ask that you do all in your power to secure the enactment of this much-needed legislation at this present session of the Congress. Prompt enactment will permit the industry to function in an orderly and successful manner and will prevent labor troubles and a general break-down of the industry, which, without such control, is inevitable.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am for this bill because I believe if it is enacted into law the people who are employed in the coal mines will be benefited. It seems to me when any legislation is presented in this House that is going to benefit the coal miners, farmers, and all others who labor for a livelihood, someone takes exception to it because they maintain that it is unconstitutional. We Members of Congress have to depend upon the coal miners, farmers, ditch diggers, mill workers, the women who scrub for a living, and all other classes of laboring people for our jobs, therefore we should not hesitate to enact into law legislation from which the laboring people will derive benefit. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. IMHOFF].

Mr. IMHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I, too, wish to add my endorsement to this Vinson bill in behalf of the coal-mining industry. I might state that I represent the Eighteenth Congressional District of Ohio, one of the greatest coal-mining districts not only in Ohio but throughout the United States.

During the time the Guffey bill has been in effect the coal-mining industry throughout my section of the State has had a brisk upturn, and a vast majority of the operators, as well as the miners, are in favor of this particular bill.

In my section of the State those loading coal received 25 cents per ton before the N. R. A. came into effect. After that came into effect the coal-mining industry rapidly advanced and wages for loading were raised to 60 cents per ton. Then the Supreme Court decision came along setting aside the N. R. A. After the N. R. A. was set aside, in my district cutthroat competition began once again.

Wages started to drop and the coal-mining industry seemed to be rapidly decreasing. Then the Guffey bill was passed and it has rapidly increased the amount of production. Wages have been maintained, and it has been noticeable that the farmers throughout my section, as well as other lines of industry, have benefited greatly, due to the fact that this bill has been in effect, increasing the purchasing power of the miners, constituting, in normal times, 14,000 in my home county and 20,000 throughout the entire district.

Therefore I would like to see this Vinson bill passed. I feel that not only would the coal-mining industry benefit, but the agricultural and other lines of industry would also benefit through the increased purchasing power that would be sure to follow and be maintained through the enactment of this legislation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. IMHOFF] has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That regulation of the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of bituminous coal is imperative for the protection of such commerce; that there exist practices and methods of distribution and marketing of such coal that waste the coal resources of the Nation and disorganize, burden, and obstruct interstate commerce in bituminous coal, with the result that regulation of the prices thereof and of unfair methods of competition therein is necessary to promote interstate commerce in bituminous coal and to remove burdens and obstructions therefrom.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I would say a word or two about the theory and substance of price-fixing as outlined by my good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER]. Particularly to those who live in what he calls the white coal areas let me say this: If you will go back and examine the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, which was passed in the celebrated 100 days of the Seventy-third Congress, you will find that we conferred upon the Tennessee Valley Authority the right to determine prices and the conditions under which the power generated at Muscle Shoals shall be carried across State lines. That is the first incident of regulation.

Secondly, when that power goes from Muscle Shoals and into Kentucky or into the State of Illinois, the utilities commission of the respective States assume jurisdiction. The distribution plant in my town, or in any other city of Illinois, or Kentucky, or any other State, can go before their utilities commission and exhibit the figures to show what their investment in the distributing system is. Their investment may be figured on the prudent investment theory or on the reproduction value theory, but it does not make any difference. They come in and show they have a certain amount of money invested in the distribution plant. They are entitled to 7 percent on the investment, we will say, plus 1¼ percent for depreciation. Through the instrumentalities of the State and Federal Governments, we absolutely guarantee a return and guarantee a price upon electrical energy as it is distributed in the different States. This is too elementary to require further amplification.

In respect to natural gas, 50,000 miles of natural-gas lines spread under this country. Huge pipe lines run from Amarillo to Detroit, St. Louis, Chicago, and elsewhere, bringing this gas to some 8,000,000 consumers. When it traverses a State line, not only the Federal Power Commission takes jurisdiction but the Federal Trade Commission can determine what the thermal efficiency of the gas shall be; and then when it goes into the distribution lines in my town in Illinois, or any other town, the public-utilities commission determines what the price per cubic foot shall be to the consumer. So, once more we guarantee the price and thereby, by implication at least, establish the theory of price fixing to ultimate consumers of electricity and gas and at the same time guarantee an adequate return to the producers on their investment. The coal producers and miners ask similar preferment today, and it seems to me not only in the spirit of fairness, but, Mr. Chairman, I may say, in the interest of the welfare of 400,000 miners and of a $2,000,000,000 industry, we should give them the same kind of consideration we have accorded the electrical industry, subsidized by millions of Federal funds, and the gas industry. Only recently the gas industry applied to the P. W. A. for a $60,000,000 loan to build a pipe line from Amarillo, Tex., to Detroit, Mich., and St. Louis, Mo., to be 8 inches in diameter and to have a capacity to discharge, perhaps, 250,000,000 cubic feet of gas per day. In the face of this kind of competition the least we can do is to say to coal that since we are guaranteeing prices to their competitors we will at least give them a show for their money.

With respect to the consumer, I am not alarmed. I am just as much interested as anybody in protecting the rights of the consumers. The consumers will be protected by the persistent and relentless competition of electrical energy, petroleum energy, and natural-gas energy with coal. Coal producers would not dare raise the price so high as to alienate their market. This is the best guaranty the consumers of this country have. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. One feature of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act is the authorization for three directors, agents of the Federal Government, to fix the price.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman is right. All the coal industry is asking in this hour of chaos is as fair and decent treatment as is now accorded its competitors. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The provisions of this section shall be promulgated by the Commission as the Bituminous Coal Code, and are herein referred to as the code. Producers accepting and operating under its provisions are herein referred to as code members.

For the purpose of carrying out the declared policy of this act, the code shall contain the following conditions and provisions, which are intended to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal and which shall be applicable only to matters and transactions in or directly affecting interstate commerce in bituminous coal.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to note that some of those people who are very much exercised over the question of entering into price fixing are unaware of the fact that many years ago the States of the Union entered into the realm of price fixing. I can cite you an example in the case of interest rates on lending money. At the time the interest rates were fixed at a certain amount for the use of money all the money lenders and usury sharks in the country raised a great hullabaloo against the States entering into price fixing in the matter of the amount to be paid for the use of money.

The history of the world indicates conclusively that many times in the past, prices have been fixed on commodities by governments. So it is not an entirely new proposition; and those people who desire to see the workers of the country prosper, who desire to see a great industry, a basic industry in these United States reform itself to the point where it can pay a reasonable wage to the man who works and return a reasonable profit on the capital invested, will not hesitate to aline themselves with this kind of legislation.

Now, we legislate through the public-service commissions of the States and fix the price which the consumer shall pay for electric current, and, as the gentleman from Illinois mentioned a few minutes ago, that certainly is a precedent. There are those who are very much wrought up about the Government entering into price fixing, but they are not really showing their true spirit. Their idea is to oppose, under cover of a smoke screen, legislation which the common people and the workers of this country realize is being enacted for their particular benefit.

I call attention to the fact that this bill will not increase the price of coal to the consumer. The fluctuation in the price of coal to the consumer without some such regulation is so great that the consumer pays a great deal more in the course of a year for coal than he would pay if there was a stabilized condition existing in the coal field. Furthermore, under the provisions of this bill, organized labor in the coal fields have a chance to work with the mine operators and those who produce the coal and have their money invested in its production.

Mr. Chairman, it is important for the country that we enact legislation rehabilitating those portions of the country which have been affected most by the depression or the so-called Hoover prosperity. This applies not only to the farmers but to nearly all industry and particularly does it apply to the coal industry.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4-A. Without in any way limiting the scope or application of section 4, whenever prices in intrastate commerce in any locality cause any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons and localities in such commerce on the one hand and interstate commerce on the other hand, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate commerce, such prices in such locality shall be subject to the provisions of section 4 hereof.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think every lawyer in this Congress should give strict attention to section 4, page 25, of this bill, for the reason he will be asked the question, no doubt, whether or not this bill applies to all coal produced. This bill might not apply to all coal produced. In other words, over on page 7 is a very important section which specifically declares the policy that this bill shall not apply to any coal except interstate coal. What is interstate coal? What is intrastate coal?

Many people have the idea that any coal produced in a State and consumed in the same State is intrastate coal. That may not be true. Much coal might be produced and consumed in a State and still be interstate, because it has a direct connection with the regular flow of coal, so that it comes within the definition as given by the court decisions fixing what is interstate commerce.

Section 4, page 25, specifically states what is interstate and what is intrastate. I am not going to attempt to tell you what it is, but you will find that this bill applies to practically all coal mined. Here is about the only exception I can think of. If a man has a coal mine in a community, and if he furnishes the full output of his coal mine to his immediate community, and if the output of his mine does not come in competition with any interstate coal, then his coal is strictly intrastate and will not come within the purview of this law. If you are a lawyer you will be asked by some of your constituents whether or not their coal will come within the purview of this law. You should direct your attention to section 4, page 25, in order to answer his question.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the language on page 7 which precedes the organization and production section of the bill is substantially the same language as appeared in the former act. It reads as follows:

For the purpose of carrying out the declared policy of this act, the code shall contain the following conditions and provisions, which are intended to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal and which shall be applicable only to matters and transactions in or directly affecting interstate commerce in bituminous coal.

You will note that the coal sought to be regulated hereunder is interstate coal. We seek to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and this bill shall be applicable only to matters and transactions in or directly affecting interstate commerce in bituminous coal.

To further spell out the purpose of this act and its embracing effect, section 4 A was inserted. That is new language. This language is taken from the Interstate Commerce Commission Act. It is also found in the Shreveport case, which is a celebrated rate case in which the Supreme Court of the United States held that intrastate shipments, where they directly affected the interstate commerce and thereby came within the purview of the act, it was within the power of the Commission to fix rates upon such shipments.

I think that section 4 A goes no further than the other act. It simply clarifies the situation and shows it is only such intrastate shipments as directly affects interstate commerce in coal that will be affected by this bill.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does the gentleman from Kentucky agree with the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio as to the line of differentiation between interstate and intrastate coal?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Rather than to make a statement of my own, I would prefer to say that my idea of the intrastate coal that will fall under this act is substantially as follows: "Whenever prices in intrastate commerce in any locality causes any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice between persons and localities in such commerce on the one hand, and interstate commerce on the other hand, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate commerce, such prices in such locality shall be subject to the provisions of section 4 hereof."

That is the language the Supreme Court has already considered. It is language that is contained in the Interstate Commerce Commission Act, and it is language found in the Shreveport decision.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I was trying to reconcile the gentleman's statement of principle with the holding of the Supreme Court in the Schechter dead-chicken case.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The Schechter case dealt with labor conditions and working conditions; and with transactions indirect in their effect. The labor section in the former bill has been stricken from this bill.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The gentleman will concede that a low price for chickens in the city of New York may indirectly and to some extent affect the price outside the city of New York?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I would say to my friend it has to be more than an indirect effect; it has to be a direct effect to come under the Federal power.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Then I would proceed by asking the difference between a direct and an indirect effect. Is there any judicial interpretation of those words that would enable the gentleman to draw a line of distinction between direct and indirect effect?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I think the Supreme Court either stated or intimated in the Schechter case that every tub stood upon its own bottom.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. (a) All rules, regulations, determinations, and promulgations of any district board shall be subject to review by the Commission upon appeal by any producer, and upon just cause shown shall be amenable to the order of the Commission; and appeal to the Commission shall be a matter of right in all cases to every producer and to all parties in interest. The Commission may also provide rules for the determination of controversies arising under this act by voluntary submission thereof to arbitration, which determination shall be final and conclusive.

(b) Any person aggrieved by an order issued by the Commission in a proceeding to which such person is a party may obtain a review of such order in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, within any circuit wherein such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, by filing in such court, within 60 days after the entry of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon any member of the Commission and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. Upon the filing of such transcript such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, and enforce or set aside such order, in whole or in part. No objection to the order of the Commission shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged below. The finding of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The judgment and decree of the court, affirming, modifying, and enforcing or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the Commission shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

The commencement of proceedings under this subsection shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

(c) If any code member fails or neglects to obey any order of the Commission while the same is in effect, the Commission in its discretion may apply to the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States within any circuit where such code member resides or carries on business, for the enforcement of its order, and shall certify and file with its application a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding, including all the testimony taken and the report and order of the Commission. Upon such filing of the application and transcript the court shall cause notice thereof to be served upon such code member and thereupon shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein, and shall have power to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such transcript a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside the order of the Commission. The findings of the Commission as to facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. In any proceeding brought under this subsection, and under subsection (b) immediately preceding, any code member shall be entitled to raise all issues of constitutional power or right and particularly to show that the matters or transactions with reference to which an order of the Commission was issued are not in or do not directly affect interstate commerce.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 27, line 20, after the word "interest" insert "including any State or any political subdivision thereof."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: Page 27 between lines 13 and 14 insert:

"SEC. 2½. Upon approval of the National Bituminous Coal Commission, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to purchase, in the several States, coal mines, coal properties, coal lands, mining rights, leaseholds, royalties, and any interest in coal and lands containing bituminous-coal deposits withdrawn from production solely because of the operation and effect of this act, such acquisitions to be held and administered under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, as other public lands are held and administered, subject, however, to the provisions of this act. The owners of such property so acquired shall be entitled to just compensation according to law.

"Any owner desiring to sell properties to the United States Government shall submit to the Commission his offer to sell, in writing, together with abstract of title, surveys, maps, and such other information respecting such properties and in such form as the Commission may, under its rules and regulations, require.

"For the purposes of this title there is hereby appropriated the sum of $300,000,000. To provide said sum there is hereby authorized to be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States $300,000,000, par value 2½-percent 50-year tax-exempt United States Government bonds, redeemable at par at any interest date. Said bonds shall be disposed of as follows:

"The purchase price of all properties acquired by voluntary sale shall be paid in said bonds which shall be accepted at their face value. A sufficient amount of said bonds shall from time to time be sold at the best market price obtainable therefor to provide funds for the payment in lawful money of the United States for all properties and rights acquired by condemnation in accordance with the provisions of this title.

"To provide funds for the administration of this section, the relocation and rehabilitation and the support and maintenance ad interim of miners who have lost employment by reason of the withdrawal of coal lands from mining operations solely because of the operation and effect of this act, and for the creation of a sinking fund to provide for the payment of interest on the retirement of the bonds issued hereunder, there is hereby levied a tax on each ton of bituminous coal produced in the United States and sold or otherwise utilized of the following cents per ton for the calendar years specified, namely:

"For the year 1937, 4 cents per ton; for the year 1938, 7.3 cents per ton; for the year 1939, 8.7 cents per ton; for the year 1940, 6.9 cents per ton; and for the year 1941 and each year thereafter until the bonds issued hereunder, together with interest thereon, shall have been paid, or until sufficient moneys have accumulated in the sinking fund hereinafter provided to pay the same, a tax of 3.21 cents per ton. These taxes shall be collected as other Federal taxes are collected and in accordance with such regulations as shall be prescribed by law and by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The taxes collected for the years 1937 to 1940, inclusive, shall be segregated and used for the following purposes:

"(a) For the administration cost of acquisition of properties during said years.

"(b) For payment of interest due and payable in said years on bonds issued hereunder.

"(c) For payment into a fund to be created and administered under the direction of the President of the United States and to be known as the 'miners' rehabilitation fund', providing for the rehabilitation and relocation of bituminous mine workers who have lost employment by reason of the withdrawal of coal properties from mining operations as provided under the provisions of this act.

"The amount of money to be paid into said rehabilitation fund from time to time shall be equal to 25 percent of the face amount of the bonds issued hereunder.

"The balance of any moneys remaining from the taxes collected in said years and after the provisions of (a), (b), and (c) above have been satisfied, shall be paid into a sinking fund for the retirement of bonds issued hereunder.

"All the proceeds of the tax collected for the year 1941, and each year thereafter, shall be used—

"(a) For the payments of administrative costs of acquisition of properties during the years 1941 and each year thereafter.

"(b) For payment into a sinking fund to pay the interest on and for the retirement of bonds issued hereunder."

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, without this amendment or a similar one, the constitutionality of this act is, to say the least, more doubtful. I do not contend nor do I think that even if so amended the act will be constitutional. But I am of the opinion that this amendment is a beneficial one from a constitutional standpoint, as well as of practical benefit both to the coal producers and miners.

To my mind it is perfectly apparent that the gentlemen who drew this bill are confusing the right of Congress to regulate interstate commerce in coal with the asserted but nonexistent right to regulate the price of the subject matter of the commerce. These two matters are entirely separate and distinct. The Supreme Court has never held that because pistols are sometimes used to interfere with interstate commerce Congress has the right to fix the price of fire arms. The confusion, I respectfully submit, may grow out of a misconception of the decisions in the grain pit, stockyards, and brokers' cases. These cases involve acts of Congress regulating the grain pit—not the raising of grain; the packer, not the whole business of production and distribution. If all bituminous coal was shipped to some central point and there washed, as a mere incident in its movement or consumption, in interstate commerce, then beyond question, the washery could be regulated by Congress if its practices or charges interfered with this stream of interstate commerce in coal. But no such practice could give Congress the right to regulate the whole coal business.

The indisputable right of Congress to regulate interstate commerce does not and cannot give the right to fix the price to be paid for the product which moves in interstate commerce. We may regulate the transitus and everything directly and materially affecting it. But not the practices at the place of production where transitus begins nor of the place to which the product moves and comes to rest after the transitus has ended.

Neither in the majority nor minority opinion of the Supreme Court in the recent Guffey Coal Act decision is it held that the so-called tax in the first Guffey bill was a tax. It is virtually conceded that it is not a tax but a penalty. Therefore that part of this bill which purports to levy the tax is not within the power of Congress to levy taxes.

The two powers to regulate commerce and to levy taxes are the only two pertinent in the consideration of the constitutionality of this bill. So if neither of such powers is broad enough to authorize such legislation as is here attempted, there is no escape from the conclusion that the pending bill is unconstitutional and void.

Under our oaths we are required to uphold and maintain the Constitution of the United States. The Nation is safe only if we do.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Gladly.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman seriously think his amendment, which seeks to rehabilitate miners forced from work, strengthens the constitutionality of the bill?

Mr. HOBBS. It certainly does eliminate the question which would otherwise inevitably arise under the due-process clauses of the fifth and fourteenth amendments. The properties of coal producers should no more be taken without due process of law and without just compensation than any other kind of property. Neither should we by legislation deprive the miners of their work by closing the mines in which they are employed. This amendment would provide the funds necessary to rehabilitate the miners thrown out of employment by the operation of this act and compensate the operators for their property thus taken. It is fair. It places no undue burden upon the consumer. It simply would do justice to those who are to be inevitably adversely affected by the operation of this bill when it becomes a law.

The provision which I offer as an amendment here today, and which I offered to the original Guffey coal bill last year, was written, as I am informed, by Mr. John L. Lewis. It recognizes the fact that inevitably such fields as those in Alabama will be forced out of business by the operation of this kind of legislation. It provides for such eventuality honestly.

Alabama produces about 2 percent of the national soft-coal tonnage. More than 80 percent of the coal mined in Alabama is sold and consumed in Alabama. Less than 20 percent of it finds its way into interstate commerce. So it is inconceivable that Alabama can seriously affect the national picture.

Yet the devastating effect of such a piece of legislation as this is equally manifest. Alabama is one of the fields in which the cost of mining coal is excessively high. The thinness of our seams renders the use of the modern machinery impossible. For this reason the average production per man a day in Alabama is less than 3 tons, as compared with a production per man per day in some other fields as high as 8 tons. We have to wash 74 percent of all the coal mined in Alabama in order to make it marketable. Although our total production is only 2 percent of that of the Nation, yet we wash in Alabama one-third of the coal that is washed in the whole United States. These things mean higher cost than obtains in the more favored fields.

Not only is Alabama production cost higher, but our coal is faced with the keenest competition known to the business. Our coal has to compete with natural gas, coke-oven gas, crude oil, and low-cost industrial electricity. We cannot, therefore, increase the price of coal in Alabama without decreasing almost to the vanishing point the volume of sales. Our competing laborless fuel will get the customers who are now buying coal if the price of coal goes up at all. Not even the proponents of this bill deny that its effect will be to raise the price of coal. Hence this bill means shutting down of the coal-mining industry in Alabama.

Hence I beg of you that you consider the plight of the 15,000 men who dig coal in Alabama. They will inevitably be forced into the ranks of the unemployed if this bill is put into operation for even 1 year. I beg of you also to consider the plight of the mine owners and the equity asserted by this amendment that they be paid the fair price for their property of which they will be deprived by the operation of this act.

This bill may benefit some sections. It will crucify Alabama! I earnestly plead that you consult your consciences and not help drive the nail. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the section to which the amendment is offered has been passed, that it carries an appropriation on a legislative bill, and that it is not germane to the section offered or to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to say anything on the point of order?

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, having gone into that at length with the Chair upon a former occasion, I do not feel that the ruling will be swayed by anything that I might say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has had occasion to study a similar point of order. When the original Guffey bill came before the House on August 17, 1935, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] offered an identical amendment. The point of order was raised against the amendment at that time that it was not germane. That point of order was sustained by the Chairman who presided on that occasion. Therefore, this amendment being identical with the amendment submitted by the gentleman on a previous occasion, and not being germane, and carrying an appropriation, it is held out of order by the Chair. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. No coal may be delivered on or after April 1, 1937, upon a contract made prior to the effective date of this act at a price below the minimum price at the time of delivery upon such contract, as established pursuant to part II of section 4 of this act, and such contract shall be invalid and unenforceable.

With the following committee amendment:

Beginning on line 13, page 35, strike out all after "Sec. 12" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"No coal may be delivered upon a contract made prior to the effective date of this act at a price below the minimum price at the time of delivery upon such contract, as established pursuant to part II of section 4 of this act, and such contract shall be invalid and unenforceable: Provided, That this prohibition shall not apply (a) to a lawful and bona-fide written contract entered into prior to October 2, 1933; nor (b) to a lawful and bona-fide written contract entered into subsequent to that date and prior to May 27, 1935, at not less than the minimum price current as published under the Code of Fair Competition for the Bituminous Coal Industry, pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act, at the time of making of such contract; nor (c) to a lawful and bona-fide written contract entered into on or after May 27, 1935, and prior to the date of the approval of this act, at not less than the minimum price for current sale as published under said code of fair competition, as at May 27, 1935."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. The term "bituminous coal", as used in this act, shall include all bituminous, semibituminous and subbituminous coal, and lignite. The term "producer" shall include all persons, firms, associations, corporations, trustees, and receivers engaged in mining bituminous coal. The term "captive coal" shall include all coal produced at a mine for consumption by the producer or by a subsidiary or affiliate thereof, or for use in the production of coke or other forms of manufactured fuel by such producer or subsidiary or affiliate.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHRISTIANSON: Page 39, line 20, strike out the word "lignite" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Shall exclude lignite which is defined as a lignite coal having a calorific value in British thermal units of less than 7,600 per pound and having a natural moisture content in place in the mine of 30 percent or more."

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, as will be noted from a reading of the amendment, the clear effect of it is to change the definition of bituminous coal so as not to include lignite, which is a product of the Northwest. I understand the Senate has adopted a similar amendment and that the amendment is acceptable to those in charge of the bill here.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I am happy to confirm the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. This act shall cease to be in effect and any agencies established thereunder shall cease to exist on and after 4 years from the date of the approval of this act.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUDDLESTON: Add to section 21, on page 40 at the end of line 11, the following: "This act shall not apply to any of the bituminous coal produced in any States in which more than 80 percent of the coal mined in such State during the year 1935 was consumed within said State."

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to take the States of Alabama, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, New Mexico, Texas, Washington, Oklahoma, and Colorado out of this bill. Each of those States consumes within its borders 80 percent or more of the coal which is produced within them.

The mines in these States are all high-cost mines. The coal fields are lean fields. Speaking for my own State, we are suffering not so much from prices as from lack of demand. What we most need is to sell more coal. If we could run anything like normal, at present prices and wages we would enjoy a very considerable degree of prosperity.

Our coal industry is suffering not only from the depression, but in these lean fields with high-cost mines we are suffering greatly from competition from oil, gas, and hydroelectric energy. The industry in my State is indeed a dying industry. With all these elements of competition, production has been reduced from a high of about 22,000,000 tons per annum to a bottom of about 8,000,000 tons per annum.

In offering this amendment I speak in behalf of the industry in my district and of the thousands of suffering miners who are working from 1 to 2 and 3 days a week; though the rate of wages is fairly satisfactory, the demand for the product is so low, due to these elements of competition, that no decent living can be made and no mines can be operated at a decent profit.

The tendency of this bill will be to oppress the high-cost mines and to shut them down, and to oppress the lean fields. The tendency will be to shut all of the lean coal fields out of competition with the rich central territory. I do not wonder that gentlemen representing coal fields which are more fortunately situated than those in my State should be enthusiastically in favor of this bill. Its real purpose is to put such coal fields as those in my county, where there are 15,000 mine operatives, out of business and out of competition with themselves.

We want to continue in business. Perhaps, as a matter of economic philosophy, it would be better to have fewer mines and fewer miners, but I would be unfaithful to the humble workers whom I represent if I cooperated in an effort which means their extinction as far as may be brought about by this legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Without the adoption of this amendment, the passage of this bill means that coal production in my district is to be reduced to meeting purely local demands by captive mines and other local demands. It means a still further reduction of the output of our mines. We consume in our State more than 80 percent of the coal that we produce there. Why should we be burdened with a bill such as this? Why should our suffering people have saddled upon their backs a piece of legislation which is deliberately drawn and which is being passed to strangle them.

I appeal to the sense of fairness of the House. I waive the questions of constitutionality, sound government, and economics in its broader aspects, and appeal to the Members of the House, if you have abandoned your regard for the constitutionality, if you have indeed abandoned your desire for sound economics, at least do not abandon your ideal of fairness and square dealing for my people who are now suffering. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I want to say to the House, while I am very much interested in this legislation, I do not represent a coal-producing district. However, I live close enough to coal-producing districts to know their problems and to have seen the misery existent, and to know that legislation of this character is needed.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] speaks of a district where the cost of production is very high. That fact is recognized in this bill. Alabama, with a few counties in Georgia, as I recall it, is put in area no. 2, minimum price area no. 2.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That also includes quite a number of counties in Tennessee.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. There are three counties in Tennessee that have been excepted.

On page 12 we find the minimum price area no. 2 to include southeastern district no. 13, except Van Buren, Warren, and McMinn Counties in Tennessee.

The southeastern district is composed of all producing counties in Alabama and the following counties in Georgia: Dade, Walker; and the following counties in Tennessee: Marion, Grundy, Hamilton, Bledsoe, Sequatchie, White, Van Buren, Warren, McMinn, and Rhea. Van Buren, Warren, and McMinn Counties were excepted. That is found on page 12 of the bill.

In other words, the high cost of production of coal in area no. 2 is taken into consideration.

What is a minimum-price area? A minimum-price area is a locality or area where you take the average weighted cost of the coal produced in that area. In other words, under this bill you do not take into consideration the low cost of production in other fields to which the gentleman referred. It is his own coal that fixes the average weighted cost.

But we do not stop with average weighted cost. The district boards of the gentleman's own coal-producing section meet and they fix the minimum price on their own coal. We do not stop there. We provide that the commission may coordinate prices in this area no. 2, separate and apart from the other minimum areas, in order that the coal may move as heretofore.

I grant that low-cost coals which compete with the coal of the gentleman from Alabama have an advantage. They have it under this bill, and they have it if no legislation is enacted at all, but I submit that we have been very careful to see to it that the coal produced in area no. 2 and all the areas of this country will move as it has moved heretofore.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. How are we going to compete with oil and gas and hydroelectric energy with the price of coal boosted as proposed by this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. How can it be done if there is no legislation? Mr. Chairman, that is an economic condition which exists, legislation or no legislation. I am saying that the coal in this area, as well as the other area, is segregated, and it is competing coal that goes into the make-up of the average weighted cost in an area. Now I read from page 13 of the bill:

> The minimum prices so proposed shall reflect, as nearly as possible, the relative market value of the various kinds, qualities, and sizes of coal, shall be just and equitable as between producers within the district, and shall have due regard to the interests of the consuming public.

Further on the same page occurs this language:

> Provided, That all minimum prices established for kind, quality, or size of coal for shipment into any consuming market area shall be just and equitable as between producers within the district: And provided further, That no minimum price shall be established that permits dumping.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is the minimum price; but, as I said a moment ago, we do not stop with this minimum price, we coordinate the prices of the coal in area no. 2. We say that—

> Such coordination among other factors, but without limitation, shall take into account the various kinds, qualities, and sizes of coal and transportation charges upon coal. All minimum prices established for any kind, quality, or size of coal for shipment into any consuming market area shall be just and equitable, and not unduly prejudicial or preferential, as between and among districts.

Listen to this language, my friends. I had something to do with writing this because I am interested in protecting the coal areas of this country and because I want to see coal move as it moved heretofore. I wrote this language into the old bill. This coordinated price now—

> Shall reflect, as nearly as possible, the relative market values, at points of delivery in each common consuming market area, of the various kinds, qualities, and sizes of coal produced in the various districts; to the end of affording the producers in the several districts substantially the same opportunity to dispose of their coals upon a competitive basis as has heretofore existed.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the House in connection with the reference of the gentleman from Alabama to Oklahoma, and possibly Arkansas, that not only are the workers, the miners in these States interested in this bill, H. R. 12800, but the operators, though opposing the old bill, seeing the advantages that come through coordinated prices, have solemnly endorsed this legislation.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINGS. What effect will this have on the production of lignite coal in northern Colorado?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Lignite has been excluded under an amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, and adopted by the committee.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. REECE. In reference to the effect of this proposed legislation upon the price of coal, does it not in effect impose a 1½ percent sales tax? It is referred to here, of course, as an excise tax.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is not in this bill.

Mr. REECE. It is in section 3. It imposes an excise tax of 15 percent upon all the coal that is sold, and then provides for a refund of 90 percent in the case of the code signers. Does not this in effect levy a sales tax of 1½ percent on all the coal that is mined, and likewise on captive coal?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It would be 1½ percent upon coal that is subject to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. REECE. It is a sales tax in effect, is it not, and to that extent would it not increase the price of coal and have the same effect any other sales tax would have?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman can call it a sales tax if he wants to.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama were adopted, would it not practically nullify the whole effect of the pending bill?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is my theory, that it would practically destroy the effectiveness of the bill. I ask that the amendment be rejected.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HUDDLESTON) there were—ayes 53, noes 86.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 22. The Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935 is hereby repealed to be effective from and after the approval of this act. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time such sums as may be necessary for the administration of this act. All sums appropriated or made available to the National Bituminous Coal Commission and to the consumers' counsel of the National Bituminous Coal Commission created under the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935 are hereby transferred to and made available for the administration of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read the committee amendments, as follows:

Page 40, lines 13 and 14, strike out "to be effective from and after the approval of this act."

Page 40, line 16, after the word "sums", insert "heretofore or hereafter."

Page 40, line 21, strike out "transferred to and made available for" and insert "authorized to be reappropriated for use in."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to a few facts in reference to a matter which seems to be badly mixed in the minds of many Members. This information was furnished me by the Bureau of Standards.

The amount of current generated by water power at the present time is about 7 percent of the current now in use. The amount of additional water power that may be developed economically will not exceed 3 percent additional, or a total of 10 percent of the amount of current now being produced. At the present time, 6 percent of the current in use is produced from natural gas or petroleum products. That will be entirely out within a period of 15 years. We have therefore the statement that there is not exceeding 7 percent of the present current produced by water power and not exceeding 6 percent by oil and gas; therefore, 87 percent of the production is by soft coal.

The next thing is this. If we go ahead with our expansion of production and distribution of electric current, the estimates of the Department are that no less than four times the present amount of electric current will be produced during the next few years. So that with water power producing 10 percent of our present current or one-fourth that proportion when we are producing four times as much as at present, with gas and oil out, 2½ percent of the amount of current then in use will be produced from water power, and 97½ percent will be from soft coal. This will require an additional production of 84,000,000 tons of soft coal per year, in addition to what we are now producing. This will put to work about 100,000 miners all over the country. There is an abundance of coal now in sight in the United States for all purposes to last at least 5,000 years, and that is too far off to justify worrying about just now.

With this bill, we are leading toward jobs that will come naturally as a part of the industrial development of the country. That is what we ought to be driving toward all the time—a job for every man and woman who wants to work.

Those who believe it is all wrong to fix prices for coal ought to consider these facts: The price for freight and passenger service is fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission; the price for gas and electric current is fixed by the various State commissions; every tariff law is a price-fixing law. Most of the articles used by us have the price fixed to a greater or less extent by tariff rates or regulations. The prices of all our manufactured drinks and smokes are largely fixed by our internal-revenue laws. The whole system of collective bargaining is for the purpose of fixing wages.

Our agricultural products require fixing, and where one method fails the Congress promptly steps in and provides some other method for achieving the same object.

Most of our laws and customs tend to or do in fact result in price fixing of some kind or other. Just why coal should be denied a price that will relieve poverty is beyond my understanding.

My colleagues, who lean so heavily on the possible nullification of this bill when it becomes a law, ought not to fail in discussing the matter to point out that this is just another case in which five members of the Supreme Court voted to nullify the act of Congress and four voted to sustain the act of Congress. Just one man of that court assumes that he has the power to overrule the whole Congress and President of the United States. Though the Constitution, which he assumes to interpret, makes no such provision, grants no such power to the Supreme Court, much less to the one man who actually decides the case in all these five-four nullifications. These presumptuous justices ought to awaken to the fact that an insistence on such a power can lead but to one thing—that is, to a curtailment of such a course. A change of one man in the personnel of the present Supreme Court could completely reverse the several nullifications which have recently been insisted upon by five members against four. Their sense of proportion ought to teach them better than that.

Now, finally, I want to put a question to those of my colleagues whose heart goes out to the poverty-stricken coal miners who want to help these unfortunates but who refuse to vote for this bill: What remedy have you for all this suffering and misfortune? Have you a right to resist any remedy proposed in behalf of humanity without yourself proposing a remedy? Are you justified in preventing any honest attempt at relieving such palpable misery?

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. This act may be cited as the Bituminous Coal Act of 1936.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps my invasion of your time is uncalled for, that opinions have been sufficiently formed, and that withal I have no testimony which would be of value in forming an opinion. I must confess to being a very partial witness on this subject. As far as I can trace the Lewis name on this continent and on the continent of Europe, it has been associated with the mining of coal and with incidents in the history of the romance and tragedy of coal mining which the collier does not read in this day with any feeling of satisfaction.

Mr. Chairman, in all my experience with legislation I have never known legislation that worked so much good to a given industry and its workers and owners as did the application of our N. R. A. legislation to the bituminous coal mining industry of the United States. [Applause.]

Had I, the son of a miner and a miner myself, been told in earlier years: "Lewis, the day will come when your heart will go out to the coal operator", I should have thanked him and said, "Well, sir, you are simply overestimating my powers of magnanimity as a coal digger." But, Mr. Chairman, that time came in the history of bituminous coal mining. It came in 1926 and succeeding years. I have known mining conditions in my own State and in States where I had worked in my boyhood when the plight of the operator was, if possible, more deplorable than that of the miner who dug the coal. Chronic bankruptcy for the operator and his life's savings gone. You can understand what that means. And the miner's wages, well, they compared with 33-cent wheat. You can also understand what that means. Why such failure, such misery in a leading industry, you ask? Charge it up to the superior efficiency and the breakdown of the rule of laissez faire in the coal-mining industry.

Mr. Chairman, you are not being asked today to carry a cripple or to revive an invalid economic institution. The coal-mining organization of the United States is one of the most efficient and effective in all the world's role of industries. The coal miner of the United States produces four times as much coal per man employed per year as does the rival industry in Germany, Great Britain, and elsewhere. Indeed, if it were not for this superefficiency we should have no such problem as we are facing today. If by some mandate of nature or higher power the efficiency of the American coal miner were reduced to one-half, the price of coal would lead skyward within 24 hours. The American miner produces about 1,000 tons to the European's 250 per year. It is this superior efficiency, coupled with the break-down of competition as a conservative regulator in bituminous-coal mining, Mr. Chairman, that has produced this problem, which has brought nearly all the operators, and all the miners to the House of Representatives of the United States, asking that their day in the land may be one of reasonable protection and justice.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished gentleman from Maryland may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. You may be prone to ascribe my judgment in this matter to personal bias and to local interest. I have no complaint to make if, indeed, that be your tendency of thought but allow me to urge this consideration upon you. All the other great coal-mining nations of the world have found it necessary to take the step that is being proposed to you this afternoon, and when I say other great coal-mining nations I refer particularly to German mining and mining in Great Britain.

For 40 years past the Germans have found it necessary to take control of the bituminous-coal industry and regulate the marketing and the price making of coal. In 1930 the British people, surely no less devoted to the principle of laissez faire and Adam Smith than any Member of this body, have found it necessary to take the same step, and so have organized a coal cartel in Great Britain patterned somewhat after that of the German Empire. It has been my duty to study closely the operation of these cartels in both Germany and Great Britain. No one has ever suggested a resulting evil under these cartels to be the presence of excessive prices. No complaint has been raised in Germany, none has been raised in Great Britain that the coal cartel has meant the infliction of unjust prices upon the consuming public. We have, then, the examples of these two countries to guide us in the constructive work we are considering here today.

Mr. Chairman, I thank you for the patience you have shown me thus late in the debate. I wish also, indeed, to thank the greatly esteemed author of this bill, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], for the energy, for the acumen, and for the wisdom he has supplied in the construction of this measure. Perhaps his children or his children's children will live to a day, as my grandfather's children have lived, to find the name of FRED M. VINSON coupled with another great name in the history of beneficent coal-mining legislation on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean, the name of a noble lord. Oh, yes; there have been noble lords. I remember my father telling me in the mines of a Lord Ashley, who, stooping down from his lordly position, lifted the women from the coal mines of Wales. I congratulate the miners of America that they have such a Representative in this body and I thank my brother from Kentucky for the noble work he has done. [Applause.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, like the distinguished gentleman from Maryland, I have also been raised in a mine. My father has been a miner for over 50 years. Incidentally, not a coal miner, but a hard-rock miner in the lead and zinc mines of the Joplin district and in the gold and silver fields of the mountains of Colorado, and as a youngster, starting at about 9 years of age, I began my apprenticeship on the end of a double jack and I have swung a pick for many an 8-hour shift and have pushed a wheelbarrow farther than my mother ever pushed me in a baby buggy. So I know something about the problems of the miners. I have worked for day wages many a weary day, month in and month out, underground, and Mr. Chairman, it is not an easy way to make a living.

I have just returned from my district in Oklahoma, wherein is located a great coal-mining industry. I left there yesterday by airplane and flew back here for the sole purpose of being able to be present to support the passage of this legislation. I left there in the middle of a campaign for reelection because I know of how much importance this bill is to the coal digger.

When the Guffey coal bill was up for consideration last year in this body I found that the coal operators of my district were bitterly opposed to its passage. I stood on the floor of this House then and worked for its passage, because I knew of the miners' needs, despite the opposition of the operators. Practically every Member of this House knows that the death of Will Rogers and an earlier consideration of the bill than was anticipated prevented me from being in the House to record my vote at that time. But you all remember my work and vote for adoption of the conference report on the bill when it came back here from the Senate.

The need for this legislation now is just as urgent as it was then.

The miners of my district and the operators also, in fact the entire coal industry there, are suffering near unto death; surely no one of you will object to furnishing them this little medicine, which this bill offers, that before it is too late we might administer to them and save their very lives. Give them this bit of protection and we will hope that the Supreme Court will not again blast their hopes of a fighting chance for their white alley.

Therefore, I sincerely hope that no amendment will be adopted to the bill which will cripple it, and I sincerely trust that this House in a few minutes now will, by an overwhelming vote, adopt the measure in exactly the form in which it came from the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. Most sections of the United States in which the production of bituminous coal is an important industry have been heard from in connection with H. R. 12800, introduced by Hon. FRED VINSON, of Kentucky, and commonly known as the Guffey-Vinson coal bill, except the Rocky Mountain section. After listening to the debate on this bill in the House today, there is no question of its ultimate passage. I am deeply interested in this legislation due to the fact that numbered among my constituents are many hundreds of coal miners whose social and economic welfare depends largely on the prosperity of the coal-mining industry. There are no people in my district in whom I am more interested or prouder to represent than these coal miners. So, notwithstanding the lateness of the hour or the fact that there is little need for further debate on this bill, I cannot refrain from taking sufficient time to advise the House that I am wholeheartedly behind this bill and trust that it will be passed without any amendments which would tend to impair it or its administration. It is a substitute for the Guffey-Snyder coal bill, which was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

In his inaugural address Franklin D. Roosevelt pledged himself to action in behalf of the American people, the great majority of whom he found in dire distress, economically and socially, by reason of inaction on the part of a Republican administration. In this inaugural address he promised and pledged himself to do something to alleviate the suffering of the American people. He also promised that if what he did failed for any reason he would not stop but would try something else and continue trying, profiting by past experience, until prosperity had been restored to America. There is no greater evidence of the President's good faith, nor the good faith of this Democratic Congress, than the very admirable action taken in connection with this coal-industry legislation. There was no industry in the United States more sorely afflicted by economic chaos than was the bituminous-coal industry of the United States. Appreciating this fact, and being anxious to aid the people engaged in this very important industry, it, in connection with all other industries of the United States, was first given relief through the N. I. R. A., which act, as you all know, was declared unconstitutional.

The easy thing to do at that time would have been for the administration to quit and for us to say, "It is impossible for us to aid industry by reason of the Supreme Court decision." But such inaction and excuses were in direct conflict with the principles of President Roosevelt and the Democratic Congress. Under the N. I. R. A. the bituminous-coal industry, along with all other industries, began to flourish and prosper. Happiness was substituted for misery and want, coal miners went back to work, coal operators made a profit. But by its decision the Supreme Court struck down this beneficial legislation with one fell stroke, regardless of what it had demonstrated and regardless of what it held in the future for industry.

Having in mind the pledges of the Democratic administration, and sensing the chaos which would result to the bituminous-coal industry by reason of the Supreme Court decision, we enacted the Guffey-Snyder Coal Act, not for the purpose of getting around the Supreme Court's decision but in good faith determined insofar as possible to restore the benefits of the N. I. R. A. within the Constitution. Under the Guffey-Snyder Act the bituminous-coal industry continued to flourish. Confidence was restored, and this great industry was again moving ahead; but once again the Supreme Court announced that this bill was also unconstitutional, and regardless of its great benefit to the industry it was also stricken down. In referring to the Supreme Court decisions, I do not want my statements construed as at all critical. I realize the importance to our constitutional form of Government of the Supreme Court, but I refer to them for the purpose of showing the courage and initiative of the Democratic administration in its efforts in behalf of the coal industry.

We could have again quit after the decision on the Guffey coal bill, and we could have very gracefully referred to the Supreme Court decision as a barrier to further legislation in behalf of the coal miners and coal operators. But once again, under the authorship in the House of the Honorable FRED VINSON, of Kentucky, legislation was again introduced in behalf of the bituminous-coal industry and the millions of miners and thousands of operators engaged therein and wholly dependent thereon, not in an effort, as has been indicated by Republican Members who have spoken on this bill, to get around the Supreme Court decision, but in the best of faith endeavoring to conform to that decision and at the same time to alleviate suffering and to prevent chaos which must ensue if legislative remedy were not provided.

I was interested and amused at the argument against this bill made by the gentleman from New York on the Republican side, Hon. FRANK CROWTHER. The substance of his argument against the bill was simply this: That he realized the deplorable condition of the bituminous-coal industry; that the people engaged therein, especially the miners, had his heartfelt sympathy; and that, if he knew the pending bill would remedy the situation, he would vote for it; but that he was not sure that it would do the job and for that reason he was unwilling to support it. He is willing to follow the course of the Republican administration under ex-President Herbert Hoover, fully appreciating the dire distress of the people, intensely deploring their poverty, want, misery, and suffering, but still willing to sit idly by and do nothing, except to tell the sufferers that prosperity was just around the corner. Happily this is not the philosophy of the Democratic Party, which, under the leadership of President Roosevelt and men such as FRED VINSON, of Kentucky, will continue our offensive against economic depression and social injustice, knowing that by action and not inaction these maladies can be cured.

The magnanimity, fair-mindedness, and generosity of the coal miners of the United States have been emphatically demonstrated by their attitude on this legislation, in this, that notwithstanding the fact that the labor provisions of the Guffey Act were held unconstitutional, they are still willing to join hands with the operators on other features of the legislation in the hope that permanent prosperity will be restored to the industry for all engaged therein.

In conclusion I urge my Democratic colleagues to support this legislation and I am satisfied it will pass by an overwhelming vote.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment. During the course of debate we heard fear expressed as to an increase in the price of coal. I was very much interested in listening to the reading of the memorial from the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts in opposition to this bill, and for the edification of the House I will read a few excerpts from a very splendid statement.

A steady supply of coal is a public necessity since it is a necessity of life to the people of all the States of the United States for use in homes, offices, schools, hospitals, and public buildings, for the operation of their public utilities, and of the mills and factories on which they depend for occupation; the stoppage or serious interference with the supply of this necessity has caused in the past and will cause in the future widespread suffering by the lack of coal to heat the homes, schools, hospitals, and work places of the people with resultant serious consequences to their health, by the break-down of public service of transportation, light, heat, and power. Experience has shown that a labor disturbance in the coal industry is accustomed to spread to all mines or to such a large proportion of them as to seriously hamper, if not to completely cut off, the supply of coal to widely spread communities in many or all the States of the Union, thus causing a Nation-wide emergency and the possibility of great disaster.

SEC. 3. Whenever in the opinion of the President, there is immediate danger of cessation of production of coal to such extent as to create a national emergency, or when such cessation of production has taken place, the President shall issue a proclamation declaring such national emergency, and may thereafter requisition and take over the plant, business, and all appurtenances used in the production and preparation for and marketing of coal and used by the operator in connection with any mine in which operation has ceased or cessation is threatened, and may operate or cause to be operated during the continuance of such national emergency any property so requisitioned and taken over, in such manner and through such agency as he may direct.

SEC. 4. (a) Any operator whose plant, business, and appurtenances shall have been requisitioned and taken over by the President shall be paid a just compensation for the use thereof during the period that the same may be requisitioned and taken over as aforesaid, which compensation the President shall fix or cause to be fixed.

(b) Such compensation shall be paid annually or more frequently, as the President may provide, and shall be paid pro rata for any part of a year of his operation.

(c) Any operator not satisfied with the compensation fixed by the President or under his authority may file a petition with the Court of Claims for the purpose of determining the amount of such just annual compensation. Proceedings in the Court of Claims under this section shall be given precedence and expedition in every possible way.

SEC. 5. (a) The President may fix prices for which and conditions under which coal shall be sold at wholesale or retail, and may require all dealers to whom coal is sold to agree to sell at prices and under conditions so fixed or to be so fixed, and may refuse to sell coal to dealers not so agreeing or who fail to keep such agreement.

Mr. Chairman, I have been reading the answer to the memorial of the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts, one of the three Commonwealths of the Union, which a distinguished leader of the minority, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], wrote into a bill—H. R. 5263—which he introduced in the House January 11, 1924. One criticism is made that this is a price-fixing bill. The Treadway bill was a price-fixing bill. And remember, my friends, that in the bill under discussion here there is no such nationalization scheme as is set forth in the bill of my distinguished friend from Massachusetts. Now it is improper to regulate the coal industry; then it was not only an urgent need but a duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. All time has expired. Under the rule the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MEAD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12800, and pursuant to House Resolution 535 he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-one Members are present, a quorum.

The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. As many as favor taking the vote by yeas and nays will stand and remain standing until counted. [After counting.] Thirty-nine Members have arisen; not a sufficient number. The yeas and nays are denied.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 161, and noes 90.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN B. H. WARING—VETO MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 507)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without approval, H. R. 10785, entitled "An act for the relief of John B. H. Waring."

This bill provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon officers retired from active service in the United States Army for physical disabilities incurred in the line of duty, John B. H. Waring, formerly captain in the Medical Corps, shall be held and considered to have been retired from active service with the rank of captain on May 5, 1917, for physical disability incurred in line of duty, and that he shall be entitled to receive retired pay from such date.

I have been informed by the War Department that Dr. Waring was on active duty as a first lieutenant, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 1, 1908, to July 5, 1909, when he entered the Regular Army as a first lieutenant in the Medical Corps, and was promoted to captain on June 25, 1912. He was wholly retired (discharged) from the military service with 1 year's pay, May 5, 1917, under the provisions of sections 1252 and 1275, Revised Statutes.

It appears that Dr. Waring's separation from the military service was the culmination of a series of incidents extending over a period of several years. While serving in the Philippine Islands in 1911, he contracted an eye injury from exposure to sun glare, following which he was under medical treatment and care for a considerable portion of his remaining service. During this period his medical records include notations of hypochondriasis, and neurasthenia, and long after the medical officers concluded that his eye condition was cured, he refused to accept their findings. His opposition to the views of the medical officers led to complications which resulted in his trial and conviction by general court-martial in 1916 for insubordination and failure to comply with orders, he being reduced 25 files on the lineal list of captains in the Medical Corps.

He was subsequently brought before a retiring board in January 1917, which found in substance that he was incapacitated for active service by reason of a neurosis affecting the function of the eyes; that the exciting cause of the incapacity was an illness in the Philippines in 1911; that the underlying or fundamental cause was a defective nervous system; that said incapacity was not incident to the service; and that it was not permanent. Before acting on the retiring board's report the War Department had Dr. Waring especially observed and examined at Letterman General Hospital, San Francisco, Calif., by eye and nerve specialists who had not previously been associated with the case. The authorities at that hospital found that he was suffering from asthenopia, hysteroneurasthenic form, due to an inherent unstable nervous organization which existed prior to commission, and therefore not in line of duty; and expressed the opinion that such disability was permanent. Thereupon he was wholly retired as authorized by law.

It further appears that special legislation has previously been enacted authorizing the placing of Dr. Waring on the retired list of the Army. I refer to an act of Congress approved May 6, 1922 (Public, No. 210, 67th Cong., S. 667), which authorizes the President to appoint Dr. Waring in the Medical Corps with such rank as he would have attained had he not been discharged, and then to place him on the retired list of the Army.

From my study of the facts in this case, as presented to me, I do not feel justified in signing H. R. 10785. This bill is further objectionable in that it authorizes the payment to Dr. Waring of a sum amounting to approximately $34,000, representing retired pay as a captain for the 19 years that have elapsed since he was returned to civil life, and during which he has in no way been connected with the military service.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 16, 1936.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message be printed, and that the message, together with the bill to which it refers, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the bill H. R. 12800 and include certain excerpts from court decisions, letters, reports, and so forth.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MEN AND MONEY

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a very short address by the president of Bucknell University.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by Arnaud C. Marts, acting president, Bucknell University, at the Thirty-ninth Annual Meeting of Group IV, Pennsylvania Bankers Association, at Bucknell University, April 18, 1936:

An interesting definition of a college president was recently given by Dr. W. M. Lewis, president of Lafayette College. "A college president," he said, "is a pillar of brass by day and a cloud of gas by night."

The mayor of Chicago recently addressed a gathering on the subject of money and he eulogized his subject in the following language: "Money is a useless commodity and a baffling subject. Time and again it has been proved to be a nonessential to human happiness. It does not buy love; it never purchases position or prestige or pleasure; men care nothing for it; it fails to assure its owner a place in society, and has no part in the thoughts of any of us." He paused, looked about at his mystified audience, and added, "I refer, of course, to Confederate money."

As to real money, most men have a hunger for it and their lives are built around their efforts to obtain it. Many men feel toward money as did Jock McTavish, the Scotsman whose 4-year-old son swallowed a guinea gold piece. The mother rushed out to her neighbor crying, "My little boy has swallowed a gold guinea!" "Gracious," said the sympathetic neighbor, "is he in danger?" "No," replied Mrs. McTavish, "thank goodness, his father is out of town."

There are three things we can do with money and there are three sorts of people, who can be categoried with respect to which one of these three uses of money gives them the greatest satisfaction.

The American people, as a whole, use their income each year for these three uses in the following approximate ratios:

We spend 85 percent of our income.

We save 12 percent of our income.

We give away 3 percent of our income to building up and maintaining our churches, colleges, hospitals, and other cultural agencies.

You gentlemen here tonight represent the 12 percent—the attitude of thrift and prudence. I represent the 3 percent—the need of ploughing under enough of our income each year to maintain the agencies which create character and health and education and the other refinements of life.

During the past few years you 12 percenters and we 3 percenters have been losing some ground, while the advocates of the 85 percent, the spenders, have been gaining ground. It has become a bit unfashionable in recent years to advocate saving and thrift. Spending is the fashion of today. The modern developments in scientific merchandising and advertising lure us and drive us to spend and to spend and, again, to spend. Every known human motive has been studied by the merchandisers with scientific precision, and a barrage of advertising is assaulting us during every waking hour, aimed accurately at our vanity, our credulity, our social and our personal ambitions, and breaking down all our remaining sales resistance. If we have no more money to spend, well, never mind, spend anyway—a dollar down and the rest later. "One more payment", said the proud young parents as they fondled their 2-year-old daughter, "and she's ours."

Is it not time for you 12 percenters and for us 3 percenters to defend our uses of money against the too aggressive onslaught of the 85 percenters? After all, spending alone does not lead to human happiness. The gadgets we buy may make life look finest on the surface, but they bring little permanent happiness to the human heart.

Should not you 12 percenters be saying that, after all, no individual can live a happy life who continues to spend more than he earns; that no society can be a happy society which is profligate in its spending; that no nation can endure indefinitely on deficits.

We must learn again the old-fashioned doctrine of the old-fashioned bankers—that the wise man accumulates first and spends afterward, out of what he has rather than out of what he hopes he will get in the future.

The 12-percent policy—that is, the policy of thrift and prudence—is essential to personal and social well-being, and I hope you can make it popular with the American people again.

The 3 percent is of supreme importance, also, for it is out of this 3 percent which we give away voluntarily to the Nation's cultural agencies that we draw our richest satisfactions.

With this 3 percent we maintain our 220,000 churches which, if placed side by side, would form one continuous belt from New York to Los Angeles. Here in these churches, which are maintained entirely by the voluntary gifts of those who care, is generated moral character, without which our banking laws and even our bank vaults would not be worth a straw. Here in these churches these voluntary institutions, are generated the love of God and the love of humanity, two loves which make life worth the living.

Out of this 3 percent we also maintain America's 832 voluntary colleges and universities, of which our own beloved Bucknell is one. Every brick in this building where we now meet, and in every one of the 28 other buildings on this beautiful campus, is a token of the unselfishness of a fine-grained man or woman who gave some of his or her money to the service of youth. And when one sees these splendid young ladies who are serving this dinner as a way of earning a portion of their own education here at Bucknell, and the equally fine group of young college men who are beyond those swinging doors working in the kitchen for their college education, one realizes that gifts made to the education of youth are appreciated and eternally worth while. Those who deny themselves the satisfaction of a selfish pleasure in order to make gifts to our voluntary colleges provide the means by which 550,000 of our choice young people each year widen the horizon of their lives and grow in capacity to serve their fellow men.

Then, out of the 3 percent we also maintain 2,700 voluntary hospitals in America, with beds enough in them in which to hospitalize at one time all the inhabitants of Harrisburg, Reading, Wilkes-Barre, and Williamsport.

Out of this 3 percent we train our 1,000,000 Boy Scouts, our 350,000 Girl Scouts, and hundreds of thousands of boys and girls who are enrolled in other character-forming groups such as the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A., the Y. M. and Y. W. H. A., and the Catholic Youth Clubs.

It is for this 3 percent I plead, and it is for your 12 percent I speak. May they hold their own in these difficult days of sales appeal! May they, indeed, increase their pull on the pocketbooks of the sane people of the land.

For the happiness of our Nation is not to be found, in the last analysis, in pretty faces, nor in snappy suits, nor in shiny cars, nor in showy homes, nor in any of the numerous manifestations of luxurious spending.

True happiness will be found in the future, as in the past, in the possession of reserves against the rainy day—in your 12 percent—and in the deep satisfaction of soul which comes from sacrificing selfish desires in order to serve God and to uplift humanity to higher levels of character, intelligence, and refinement. "This thing of giving," said George F. Burba, "I do not understand it, any more than you do, but there is something about it that blesses us. * * * Those who give most have most left. * * * I believe that everyone who dries a tear will be spared the shedding of a thousand tears. * * * I believe that every sacrifice we make will so enrich us in the future that our regret will be we did not sacrifice the more. * * *

"Give—and somewhere, from out the clouds, or from the sacred depths of human hearts, a melody divine will reach your ears and gladden all your days upon the earth."

EMERGENCY FARM MORTGAGE ACT OF 1933

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9484) to amend section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9484) to amend section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following: "That the terms of this Act shall not permit additional or new land to be brought into production outside of the present boundaries of any established or reorganized irrigation district"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9484) to amend section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to such amendment:

The House bill provided in a proviso at the end of section 1 that the terms of the act should not permit additional or new land to be brought into production. The Senate amendment struck out this proviso and substituted therefor the provision that "it is not intended that additional lands will thereby be brought into production." This would have restored the language of the existing law which is amended by the act. The House recedes with an amendment substituting for the Senate language the following: "The terms of this act shall not permit additional or new land to be brought into production outside of the present boundaries of any established or reorganized irrigation district."

R. M. KLEBERG,
WALTER M. PIERCE,
E. M. OWEN,
FRED C. GILCHRIST,
AUG. H. ANDRESEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman intend to make some explanation of this bill?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes. There is only a slight difference between the House bill and the Senate bill. They mean practically the same thing. However, there was a difference, so a conference was asked for; and a conference was held between the House and Senate, and the words agreed upon are as they appear in the statement.

Mr. SNELL. There is no material increase of land?

Mr. PIERCE. No. That was the bone of contention. That was the question, and it was agreed there would be no increase.

Mr. SNELL. Of course, there could be a material increase if we took in all the land in regularly established or organized districts. The language of the Senate is much broader than the language of the House bill.

Mr. PIERCE. Yes; but the gentleman will notice that the language agreed upon was the language that was considered.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN. The Senate bill provided that under the provisions of their bill it was not intended that new land would be brought into cultivation, while the agreement reached by the conferees was that the terms of this act shall not permit any additional lands. Also that there shall be no intent that any new land shall be put into cultivation. This makes it definite that no new land shall be put into cultivation.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Then the purpose of this bill will be to provide funds for the refinancing of existing projects?

Mr. PIERCE. A very few districts that could not come in under the old law. For instance, a district that was not organized at the time the original law was passed was cut off. This allows them to present their claims to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It only affects about a dozen districts in the United States.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. But most of the money will be used for refinancing of projects which have already been undertaken and not for the purpose of financing new projects. Am I right?

Mr. PIERCE. Absolutely.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. RICH. We understand that in the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act that is not the case—that they are going to try to bring in more land. Through the construction of the Bonneville Dam and other dams in Western States we are going to bring into cultivation hundreds of thousands of acres of land. Is not this bringing in additional land?

Mr. PIERCE. Not under the terms of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WELFARE OF AMERICAN SEAMEN

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8597) entitled "An act to amend section 13 of the act of March 4, 1915, entitled 'An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea'; to maintain discipline on shipboard; and for other purposes", with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. BLAND, SIROVICH, RAMSPECK, LEHLBACH, and WELCH.

AMENDMENT OF COASTWISE LOAD-LINE ACT

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11915) to amend the Coastwise Load-Line Act, 1935, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11915) to amend the Coastwise Load Line Act, 1935, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On Senate amendments nos. 1, 2, and 3: The House bill provided that in the establishment of load-water lines on passenger vessels due consideration shall be given to, and differential shall be made for (among other things) the stability of the vessel in a damaged condition. The said amendments modified this provision by substituting for "stability of the vessel in a damaged condition" the provision "probable stability of the vessel if damaged." The House recedes from its disagreement to the said amendments.

On Senate amendment no. 4: The House bill provided that, in respect of discretion vested in the Secretary of Commerce to vary from load-line marks established by treaty, such discretion applied (in addition to vessels on the Great Lakes) to vessels engaged in special services on interisland voyages and on coastwise voyages from port to port in the continental United States. The Senate amendment struck out the term "vessels" and inserted in lieu thereof "tugs, barges, and self-propelled barges." The House recedes with an amendment adding "steam colliers" to the Senate insertion.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3440) to amend certain acts relating to public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents and acts amendatory thereof submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the conference report submitted herewith:

On amendment no. 7: This amendment relates to the procedure necessary in order to have an illustration published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

On amendment no. 12: The Senate provided for 105 copies of the daily RECORD to be furnished to each Senator. The House changed this number to 88 copies. The conferees compromised by making it 100 copies for each Senator.

On amendment no. 14: The Senate provided 75 copies of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for each Representative, but the House changed this number to 60 copies. The conferees compromised by making it 68 copies for each Representative.

On amendment no. 16: This amendment provided for three copies of the daily RECORD for each joint committee and joint commission in Congress. The conferees compromised by authorizing two copies of the daily RECORD for each joint committee and joint commission, and added a provision that the Secretary and Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, and the Clerk, Sergeant at Arms, and Doorkeeper of the House, should each be furnished for office use with six semimonthly copies and that the Vice President also should receive one semimonthly copy.

On amendment no. 44: This amendment authorized the delivery of one copy of the Statutes at Large to the Chief Justice and each Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. The House struck out this language and provided that the entire edition should be supplied to the library of the Supreme Court for distribution to the personnel of the Court. The Senate conferees accepted this amendment and in addition provided that the Parliamentarian of the House of Representatives should be furnished two copies of the statutes and that the depository libraries should each receive one copy of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

J. WALTER LAMBETH,
WILLIAM B. BARRY,
ROBERT F. RICH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 3440) to amend certain acts relating to public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents and acts amendatory thereof and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina explain what changes have been made in the number of CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS available to Members, and so forth?

Mr. LAMBETH. Since 1903 it has been the law that each Member of the House is entitled to 60 copies of the daily RECORD and each Senator 88, the provision being that those Members who do not take all of their daily RECORDS are entitled to the difference in bound RECORDS. One of the chief purposes of this bill is to provide a definite quota of bound RECORDS. The bill provides three bound RECORDS for each Representative and five for each Senator. This will result in a considerable saving, because the cost of a bound RECORD is about $17.75, as against $7.60 for the daily RECORD. In addition, it operates to delay the publication of the bound RECORD until it is known at the conclusion of the session just how many daily RECORDS have not been used.

The Senate increased the number of daily RECORDS to 105 for each Senator and to 75 for each Representative. The House left the number of daily RECORDS the same as heretofore. In the conference it was agreed that the increase would be in the same ratio as that in force heretofore, which would give each Member of the House 8 additional daily RECORDS and each Senator 12, making a total to each Senator of 100 and to each Member of the House 68. This will offset the saving on the bound RECORDS, so there is no additional cost in this bill.

Mr. SNELL. These are the principal changes in the bill?

Mr. LAMBETH. Yes.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBETH. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. If the experience of other Members is similar to mine I may say that the number of daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS at the disposal of Members of Congress is wholly insufficient.

I have been hoping that the conferees would see fit to increase the number on the House side as well as on the Senate side.

Mr. LAMBETH. We have increased the number, I may say to the gentleman. There is an increase of eight for each Member of the House.

Mr. KVALE. That is not sufficient. The libraries, the colleges, and the high schools of our various districts cannot be accommodated, much less the individuals who want to be served.

Mr. LAMBETH. Probably an unlimited number of RECORDS could be distributed gratuitously if we had them, but the committee did not feel it wanted to add any additional cost, and that is the effect of this conference report.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBETH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The country newspapers of our districts are the mouthpiece of the people they serve. The only way they can gather correct information about what goes on in the Congress is through the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which they receive. These copies not only serve the schools, colleges, and public libraries, but the editors themselves ask for the RECORD. What disproportionate increase is allowed the Senate? I know there is always a disproportion in favor of the Senate. What is the disproportion now?

Mr. LAMBETH. The proportion is the same as it has been all the time since 1895.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it the same?

Mr. LAMBETH. It is the same. I will repeat that under the present law each Senator receives 88 and each Representative 60. Under the conference report each Senator will receive 100 to 68 for each Member of the House, exactly the same ratio as previously existing.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF RETIREMENT PRIVILEGE TO THE DIRECTOR, ASSISTANT DIRECTORS, AND SPECIAL AGENTS OF THE FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4552) to extend the retirement privilege to the Director, Assistant Directors, inspectors, and special agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The Senate passed this bill yesterday. Last night the House passed an identical House bill, the Senate bill not having come over. If this bill is passed I am going to vote to vacate the proceedings in reference to the House bill passed last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (b) of section 3 of the act approved July 3, 1926, chapter 801, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 693, subdivision (b)), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"(b) Superintendents of United States national cemeteries, and such employees of the offices of solicitors of the several executive departments, of the Architect of the Capitol, of the Library of Congress, of the United States Botanic Garden, of the recorder of deeds and register of wills of the District of Columbia, of the United States Soldiers' Home, of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, of the State Department without the continental limits of the United States who are United States citizens and not within the Foreign Service as defined in the act of May 24, 1924, and amendments thereof, of the Indian Service at large whose tenure of employment is not intermittent nor of uncertain duration, and the Director, Assistant Directors, inspectors, and special agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings by which the House passed the bill H. R. 11152 be vacated, and that the bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

SHOREWOOD POST OFFICE

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in connection with a branch post office to be erected in my district and to include therein copies of correspondence I have had with the Post Office Department as well as copies of letters received from the Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, because of some confusion of opinion relative to the proposed erection of a branch post office in the village of Shorewood in my district, I am taking this opportunity to clarify the history of this much-needed project upon which bids are about to be let by the Government.

When the project was originally brought to the attention of the Post Office Department and the Public Works Administration, the Government proceeded to advertise for offers of land upon which to erect a building. On the opening of bids a site was finally selected and a purchase of land was agreed upon. The original proposal was to expend some $35,000 upon the construction of a building and transfer was contemplated by the postal authorities of all the facilities of station H, now within the confines of the city of Milwaukee, to the new proposed branch. When the purchase of land was agreed upon, as a Representative from that district, I was invited to appear before the joint Treasury-Post Office committee to discuss with them the proposed plans for erection of the Shorewood branch and the abandonment of station H. At that time I stated to the committee that while I was entirely in accord with the erection of a branch post office in the village of Shorewood in my district, I was also of the opinion that while the citizens of that village were entitled to the very best postal service possible I did not wish to see any section of my district discriminated against and deprived of adequate service, which might very likely happen if station H was entirely abandoned.

In keeping with those representations before the committee as well as with the knowledge that I had submitted to the Joint Treasury-Post Office Committee all the information that had come to me in my capacity as a Representative of that district, I approved the beginning of work on plans, specifications, and other details in connection with the building's erection in January 1936. This approval was contingent upon the agreement of the Post Office Department to continue facilities in the vicinity of station H so that the citizens of that section might continue to enjoy the same post-office service and facilities that they have had during the operation of station H.

Subsequent to my appearance before the Treasury-Post Office Committee I addressed a letter to the Honorable W. W. Howes, First Assistant Postmaster General, the purpose of which was to obtain a commitment of record that if and when the Shorewood branch post office was built, facilities would be continued in the vicinity of station H, from which I quote:

MY DEAR MR. HOWES: I am in receipt of your letter of March 23 relative to the proposal to abolish station H of the Milwaukee post office and create a new branch to be known as the Shorewood branch.

As I outlined to you, I have no objection to the creation of a Shorewood branch if the people now being served by station H are not to be discriminated against by the removal of this station and the substitution of the Shorewood branch, which is so much farther away from the citizens of Milwaukee.

I believe that the village of Shorewood is entitled to good service in connection with the receipt and delivery of its mails, but I do not believe this village is entitled to better service than the city of Milwaukee, which would be the case if the Shorewood branch is completed and operated according to present plans and station H is abandoned. I must again point out that I shall have to object most strenuously to the creation of a new branch post office in a village and the abandonment of a station in the city of Milwaukee which has served that area most satisfactorily for a good many years.

I am sure that a proposed plan can be worked out by the Milwaukee authorities whereby both Shorewood and the sections of Milwaukee in the area of station H will be given equal consideration and service, and I look forward to having submitted to me a concrete proposal by the postal authorities in Milwaukee and here at Washington which I will be able to use to assure my constituents in the city that they are not being discriminated against in the contemplated creation of a Shorewood branch.

THOMAS O'MALLEY,
Member of Congress.

Following a long and continued investigation by the Post Office Department I was greatly pleased to find that my efforts had resulted at last in not only bringing about a satisfactory adjustment and agreement for the erection of a post-office building in Shorewood, but the Department had finally agreed to the continuance of certain postal facilities in the vicinity of station H. On April 7, 1936, the following letter was received by me from the Post Office Department acknowledging that an agreement concerning the building of this branch office had been reached and that station H facilities would be continued for the benefit of residents of that portion of the city of Milwaukee lying within my district. With the receipt of these assurances from the Post Office Department I addressed my letter of approval for construction to the Treasury Department, Admiral C. J. Peoples, Director of Procurement, which is reproduced herewith:

I am in receipt of your letter of April 13, in which you advised me that the Joint Treasury-Post Office Committee has decided to issue instructions whereby the architectural division will proceed with the preparation of plans for construction of a postal station at Shorewood, Milwaukee County, Wis.

Quite some time ago I appeared before the joint committee, giving them the benefit of the information laid before me, first, concerning the opposition of constituents of mine in the city of Milwaukee against the abolishment of station H and the proposed transfer of the facilities for money order, stamp purchase, and other postal service from station H to the Shorewood branch, some 3 or more miles distant. After months of protracted correspondence and discussions with the Post Office Department, that Department has agreed to continue service from station H or some similar station in the city of Milwaukee. This decision upon the part of the Post Office Department removes, of course, any service reason which might hold the building of the Shorewood station in further abeyance.

At the time, however, of my appearance before your committee I requested that the said committee make an investigation concerning the incidents surrounding the bids and the subsequent purchase of land for this station, but have heard no more from the committee as to whether or not such investigation has been made. If the committee has thoroughly inquired into the details of the offers of land on the bids and the final purchase, I would appreciate very much being advised by letter as to whether or not the committee is satisfied that the sale of this land to the Government was accomplished strictly in accordance with governmental regulations.

THOMAS O'MALLEY, M. C.

On April 23 I received a confirmation of my approval of the beginning of the construction of this needed project from the Acting Director of Procurement. This letter is appended herewith:

MY DEAR MR. O'MALLEY: Reference is made to your letter of April 15, bearing upon the Federal building project at Shorewood station, Milwaukee, and particularly inquiring as to whether the Joint Treasury-Post Office Committee is satisfied with the procedure incident to the acquisition of the site for the proposed building.

Your interest in this case is appreciated, and you may be assured that the committee, in giving careful consideration to the details in connection with this site acquisition, has taken steps whereby the Government will be fully protected.

W. E. REYNOLDS,
Acting Director of Procurement.

I am taking this opportunity to report the success of these negotiations with both the Post Office and Treasury Departments and a complete and satisfactory solution of the erection of a branch post office in my district, and in particular a solution and an agreement which will work out for the benefit and advantage of both the citizens of Shorewood and Milwaukee.

While the negotiations, as is so often true of governmental activities, caused some short delay, the resultant effects have been of direct beneficial results. We have now obtained for the populace of an important section of the Fifth District, not only a new branch post-office building which will be larger and capable of providing greater service than originally planned, but we have been able, through these negotiations, to continue important facilities of station H for the benefit of those citizens of the Fifth District living in and around the original location of that station. The old adage that proceeding cautiously in the providing of additional Government facilities usually results in a more thorough study and more efficient decision has admirably applied to this important project. The aid and information submitted both myself and the committee by citizens and public-spirited leaders of both Milwaukee and Shorewood has been of invaluable assistance in hastening a completion of the agreement between my office and the postal authorities on this station.

The citizens of Shorewood will now enjoy postal services and postal facilities equal to any metropolitan area of its size in the United States and the citizens of the areas surrounding station H will not be deprived of the facilities and service to which they, as citizens of the metropolitan section of Milwaukee, are entitled and which they have enjoyed for years. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to bring the major facts and correspondence incident to the conclusion of these negotiations to the attention of my constituency and to point out that bids for the construcion of this new governmental building are about to be advertised for by the Treasury Department.

In spite of the fact that petitions are on record with the Post Office Department that groups of citizens of Shorewood desired a separate post office, the Department has also on record the communications of the Village Board of Shorewood in which a branch post office is requested. Since the Department has no option but to favorably consider the recommendations of the authorities and leaders of any community in the provision of postal service, I have not presumed to advise the postal authorities on what appears to be entirely a matter of local opinion, feeling confident that whatever policy is decided upon in relation to the Shorewood post-office building will be solely for the provision of the best service possible under the laws and regulations governing the postal division of the Government.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10101) to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act and the Farm Credit Act of 1935, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Line 12, strike out "three" and insert "two."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. STEFAN. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this bill?

Mr. JONES. This simply reduces the period of the reduction of the rate of interest from 2 to 1 year. Otherwise it is the same. It makes it only for 1 year and then goes back to the contract rate.

Mr. STEFAN. Is this a compromise on the 3½-percent Federal farm bank matter?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. Originally we expected to have it run 2 years?

Mr. JONES. Yes; but the Senate reduced it to 1 year, and in order to get a bill we agreed to that amendment. In this connection I wish to say that the entire Agriculture Committee has favored this bill. But I want to pay special tribute to WALL DOXEY, FRED BIERMANN, and FRED GILCHRIST, all of whom have taken special interest in getting a low interest rate for farmers. The farmers owe much to them and to all the members of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

ADEQUATE FACILITIES FOR PARKS, PARKWAY, AND RECREATIONAL AREA PURPOSES

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10104), "An act to aid in providing the people of the United States with adequate facilities for park, parkway, and recreational-area purposes, and to provide for the transfer of certain lands chiefly valuable for such purposes to States and political subdivisions thereof", with a Senate amendment thereto, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter referred to as the 'Secretary') is authorized and directed to cause the National Park Service to make a comprehensive study, other than on lands under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture, of the public park, parkway, and recreational programs of the United States, and of the several States and political subdivisions thereof, and of the lands throughout the United States which are or may be chiefly valuable as such areas, but no such study shall be made in any State without the consent and approval of the State officials, boards, or departments having jurisdiction over such lands and park areas. The said study shall be such as, in the judgment of the Secretary, will provide data helpful in developing a plan for coordinated and adequate public park, parkway, and recreational-area facilities for the people of the United States. In making the said study and in accomplishing any of the purposes of this act, the Secretary is authorized and directed, through the National Park Service, to seek and accept the cooperation and assistance of Federal departments or agencies having jurisdiction of lands belonging to the United States, and may cooperate and make agreements with and seek and accept the assistance of other Federl agencies and instrumentalities, and of States and political subdivisions thereof and the agencies and instrumentalities of either of them.

"SEC. 2. For the purpose of developing coordinated and adequate public park, parkway, and recreational-area facilities for the people of the United States, the Secretary is authorized to aid the several States and political subdivisions thereof in planning such areas therein, and in cooperating with one another to accomplish these ends. Such aid shall be made available through the National Park Service acting in cooperation with such State agencies or agencies of political subdivisions of States as the Secretary deems best.

"SEC. 3. The consent of Congress is hereby given to any two or more States to negotiate and enter into compacts or agreements with one another with reference to planning, establishing, developing, improving, and maintaining any park, parkway, or recreational area. No such compact or agreement shall be effective until approved by the legislatures of the several States which are parties thereto and by the Congress of the United States.

"SEC. 4. As used in sections 1 and 2 of this act the term 'State' shall be deemed to include Hawaii, Alaska, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman should explain what this bill means.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. There is no change from the bill as passed by the House, and, so far as the amendment is concerned, the Senate bill has struck out several items of the bill as it passed the House, but left in practically the same wording as the House had with reference to making a survey of parks and parkways.

Mr. SNELL. That is all there is to it?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Yes.

Mr. RICH. It is not the intent and purpose of this bill to set up any other organization in order to do this survey work?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows:

An act to authorize a study of the park, parkway, and recreational-area programs in the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I am recommending to the House that they accept H. R. 10104 as amended and passed by the Senate.

I should like to call to the attention of the House, and make a matter of record, the fact that the last part of section 1 authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior, through the National Park Service, to seek and accept the cooperation and assistance of all Federal departments or agencies having jurisdiction over lands belonging to the United States, and that in so authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to pursue this course, the intent of the bill is that the Federal departments and agencies shall furnish the information when requested.

With the above statement, I recommend that the House accept the Senate amendments to H. R. 10104.

D. E. WOODWARD

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 6258) for the relief of D. E. Woodward, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ROANOKE ISLAND, N. C.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12799) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Sir Walter Raleigh's colony on Roanoke Island, N. C., known in history as the Lost Colony, and the birth of Virginia Dare, the first child of English parentage to be born on the American Continent, and her baptism, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "and her baptism", and amend the title.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROTECTION TO WORKMEN ON UNITED STATES PROPERTY

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12599) to provide more adequate protection to workmen and laborers on projects, buildings, constructions, improvements, and property wherever situated, belonging to the United States of America, by granting to the several States jurisdiction and authority to enter upon and enforce their State workmen's compensation, safety, and insurance laws on all property and premises belonging to the United States of America, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, lines 5 and 6, strike out ", safety, and insurance."

Page 2, line 2, strike out "enter into and upon" and insert "apply such laws to."

Page 2, line 5, strike out all after "State," down to and including "on" in line 10 and insert "and to."

Page 2, line 15, strike out all after "be" down to and including "thereunder" in line 24.

Page 3, line 5, strike out ", safety, and insurance."

Page 3, line 12, strike out ", safety, and insurance."

Page 3, line 13, after "designated", insert ": Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to modify or amend the United States Employees' Compensation Act as amended from time to time (act of Sept. 7, 1916, 39 Stat. 742, U. S. C., title 5 and supplement, sec. 751 et seq.)."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PORT NEWARK ARMY BASE

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 4737) to provide for the sale of the Port Newark Army Base to the city of Newark, N. J., and for other purposes, and agree to the same.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman from South Carolina should tell us something about this bill. This is similar to the bill which passed the other day. I believe there has been a change in the price and I think the gentleman should explain the measure to the House.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill, or at least a bill to sell the same property, passed the House unanimously. There was a veto, but the terms upon which the payment may be made have been modified so as to meet the objections that the Budget raised; and I have here a letter from the Secretary of War to the effect that the terms of the new bill have been submitted to the Budget and have been found to be in accord with the financial program.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand, the new bill raises the price from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000?

Mr. McSWAIN. No. The original price was $2,000,000. The original bill provided for the payment of $100,000 per year each year for 20 years. The present bill provides for a payment of $100,000 a year for 5 years and $200,000 a year thereafter.

Mr. SNELL. And the price is $2,000,000?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; and that was about the appraised value.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

DEPOSIT AND INVESTMENT OF INDIAN FUNDS

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8538) to authorize the deposit and investment of Indian funds, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8588, with Senate amendments thereto. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Please explain what the bill is.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this is a House bill passed some time ago authorizing the deposit and investment of Indian funds. That bill went to the Senate and the Senate amended the bill and passed it with the amendment. They have added the bill which passed last night on the Consent Calendar known as the Oklahoma Indian bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I think the House ought to know something about the amendments in this bill. This is a bill to which Saturday a week ago the Senate added two amendments, not one. The Senator from Oklahoma simply told the Senate that the only reason he was adding the amendments was on account of the parliamentary situation in the House, stating he could not secure favorable action on the bills here.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I am not responsible for what the Senator said.

Mr. COCHRAN. One of those bills provided a direct appropriation of $2,000,000 from the Treasury without an authorization, and it is in this bill.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. That bill passed the House.

Mr. COCHRAN. Last night the doctor told me to go home, and half an hour after I left, the bill passed the House. I intended to object to it. The second bill the Senate added provides for an authorization of about $775,000.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. That bill also passed the House.

Mr. COCHRAN. To pay a claim. That is the Osage Tribe claim, is it not?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. When this bill was first considered, I brought out the fact that we have already paid the claim, and they are back here now, years after, asking us to pay about $775,000 more. I object to legislation of that kind.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for just a moment?

Mr. COCHRAN. I withhold my objection.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the gentleman's statement I cannot permit his statement to go unanswered. The gentleman says that the money was paid to the Osage Indians years ago. I should correct that statement on the floor of the House. If the House will indulge me for 2 or 3 minutes, I think I can state the facts.

Mr. COCHRAN. I put a letter into the RECORD showing the gratuities that we have paid to these Indians and further showing that under the treaties we have already advanced them $22,000,000, and we paid $300,000 under the treaty agreement. I am not going to let this bill pass if I can prevent it. If the gentleman wants to have a roll call on the bill, a vote upon it, I am perfectly willing to have the House express its opinion.

Mr. DISNEY. There is no heat in my statement.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes, in view of statements made here which are incorrect and erroneous.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri reserves the right to object for 3 minutes. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. DISNEY. The item of $773,000 which is in the Senate amendment is as meritorious a claim as was ever presented to the Congress. I do not know anything about what happened in the Senate, as to how the amendment was inserted. I have not read the RECORD. These are the facts: In the early days the Government, under a treaty, took the land of the Osages and sold it for $773,000 and placed it in a so-called civilization fund and used the money, except $1.89, for other Indians, instead of its own money.

As I said, it then spent the money on what it called a "civilization fund" on other Indians and the Osage Indians received only $1.89 of the proceeds derived from the sale of their land by the Government. The Government profited by it because otherwise it would have had to spend this $773,000 out of the General Treasury on the other Indians. It took the money belonging to the Osage Indians, except $1.89, and the records of the Senate and the House prove that fact. The items in the $773,000, down to a penny, are set forth in the House and Senate reports. It all went to other Indians all over the Nation. This is shown in detail by items. The money should have been spent out of the general fund of the Treasury, and we are asking that money back now. The Court of Claims heard this, and anyone who will read the decision of the Court of Claims will find that it verifies my statement. That court decided that since the reformation of a treaty between the Government and the Indians was not a judicial function but a legislative matter, it did not have the power under its jurisdiction to award the money as a claim against the Government.

It has to be done legislatively. It may be said that the Osages are a rich tribe of Indians, and they are, because they used good judgment in keeping their oil lands in common instead of in severalty. However, outside of $1.89 of this $773,000, this money was spent by our Government on other purposes. The money belonged to the Osage Indians for the sale of their lands in Kansas, when they moved them down to what is now the Osage Reservation. Common justice demands that this claim be paid. This item has at times passed each House, but never at the same session.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DISNEY. There is no document under the sun that disproves any statement I have made. You may not feel it is good policy to pay this just claim at this time, but let us not be mistaken as to the facts and as to what is involved here. These are the facts, regardless of what anybody at any time may have ever put into the RECORD. The decision of the Court of Claims verifies what I have said.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the official records on file in the General Accounting Office cannot be disputed. These records show a payment of $300,000, as agreed upon under the treaty of 1865. Further, from 1867 to 1884 interest at the rate of 5 percent per annum on the said $300,000 in the amount of $270,000 was appropriated and covered into the fund in the Treasury under the heading "Fulfilling treaties with Osages." Of this fund, $442,867.17 had been disbursed for the benefit of the Osage Indians prior to July 1, 1922.

Likewise pursuant to the above-quoted terms of the treaty, the proceeds of the sale of the involved land by the United States, after reimbursement to the United States of the said sum of $300,000 and the expense of survey and sale, were placed to the credit of a civilization fund during the period from January 22, 1873, to January 29, 1901, in the aggregate amount of $776,931.58. The records of the General Accounting Office show that, of the said sum so credited, $189.55 was disbursed for the benefit of the Osage Tribe of Indians, the remainder of the said sum, with the exception of $248.78 covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury pursuant to the act of March 3, 1911—Thirty-sixth Statutes, page 1062—being disbursed for the benefit of various other Indian tribes.

Following the actual creation of the civilization fund in 1873, the Osage Indians began to protest against the interpretation of the treaty which held that the fund was available for the benefit of other tribes of Indians, and to insist that they had never so understood or intended. By act of February 6, 1921—Forty-first Statutes, page 1097—it was provided that the claim of the Osage Tribe of Indians against the United States for moneys due, arising out of the sale of Osage lands under the said treaty, should be submitted to the Court of Claims for determination; also that the court should have jurisdiction to hear and determine any set-off or counterclaim, including gratuities, which the United States might present against the Osage Tribe of Indians. On May 28, 1928, the Court of Claims rendered its decision—Sixty-sixth Court of Claims, page 64—denying recovery by the plaintiff on the ground that the treaty was a part of the supreme law of the land and could neither be reformed nor treated as inoperative by the courts. The court said also:

> We conclude that the Osage Tribe of Indians, under the language and meaning of said treaty, have not established a claim or right in the fund or moneys arising from the sale of the Osage lands under said treaty, and that the United States has not wrongfully appropriated any part or parcel of the lands or the funds of said Osage Tribe of Indians under said treaty.

The court also denied recovery by the United States on the set-offs and counterclaims on the ground that the jurisdictional act—

> • • • Did not contemplate that the court should consider or make allowance for counterclaims where the conclusion of the court was against the claim of the Osage Tribe of Indians; and therefore, as the conclusion is against the claim, no further consideration should be given to the counterclaims.

The purpose of the bill S. 2375 is to authorize an appropriation to pay the Osage Tribe of Indians, without interest, that part of the proceeds of sale of the involved lands not already expended for their benefit, recovery of such proceeds having been denied by the Court of Claims, as above stated.

July 1, 1922, the United States disbursed for the direct benefit of the Osage Indians funds amounting to $313,370.12 of a character heretofore considered as gratuities by the Court of Claims in the determination of suits brought under various jurisdictional acts authorizing the court to entertain claims of Indians and in such connection to consider gratuities received by the Indians from the Government and make equitable adjustment accordingly, and for the benefit of the Osage Indians jointly with other Indians funds of such character amounting to $104,454.34. No accounting has been made covering such disbursements subsequent to June 30, 1922. It may be added that during the period from January 1, 1811, to June 30, 1922, the United States disbursed for the benefit of the Osage Tribe of Indians, including the amounts above-mentioned, in excess of $22,000,000 from various appropriations made in fulfillment of treaty obligations and from funds and interest on funds belonging to the Osage Tribe.

The bill does not provide for set-off of gratuities against the amount proposed to be appropriated. If this bill is to be favorably considered for enactment, it should be amended by adding to section 2 of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain the aggregate amount of the gratuities theretofore paid to such Indians of the character provided for set-off by section 2 of the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act for 1935 (49 Stat. 596), and the amount so ascertained shall be deducted from the amount otherwise for crediting under this section.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Objection is heard.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] suggests he would be glad to have a roll call. I accept the challenge.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent was requested by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ROGERS], and there was objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. I would like to read one paragraph from the decision of the Court of Claims.

Mr. DISNEY. Oh, no; not one paragraph. Read it all.

The SPEAKER. Both gentlemen are out of order.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill.

LAWS COVERING STEAM VESSELS AND VESSELS WITH INTERNAL-COMBUSTION ENGINES

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12419) to apply laws governing steam vessels to seagoing vessels of 300 gross tons and over propelled by internal-combustion engines, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 1, strike out "sea food" and insert "fishery or kelp or sponge."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGES ACROSS TENNESSEE, TOMBIGBEE, WARRIOR, ALABAMA, AND COOSA RIVERS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4622) to amend section 2 of the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Alabama State Bridge Corporation to construct, maintain, and operate bridges across the Tennessee, Tombigbee, Warrior, Alabama, and Coosa Rivers, within the State of Alabama", approved May 26, 1928.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object just to ask a question: Is that a general bill for all kinds of bridges, or just one bridge?

Mr. HOBBS. The State of Alabama built 15 toll bridges, and because of the depression the volume of tolls has not been large enough to keep up the payments, and they desire to extend the time for which they can charge tolls. That is all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Alabama State Bridge Corporation to construct, maintain, and operate bridges across the Tennessee, Tombigbee, Warrior, Alabama, and Coosa Rivers within the State of Alabama", approved May 26, 1928, is amended by striking out, wherever they appear therein, the words "eighteen years" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "twenty-eight years."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FEDERAL-AID ROADS IN PUERTO RICO

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1392) to extend the provisions of certain laws to the island of Puerto Rico, with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Line 4, strike out "island" and insert "Territory."

Line 11, strike out "island" and insert "Territory."

Line 13, after "funds", insert: : Provided, That the system of roads on which Federal-aid apportionments to the Territory of Puerto Rico shall be expended may be determined and agreed upon by the highway departments of said Territory and the Secretary of Agriculture without regard to the limitations in section 6 of the Federal Highway Act respecting the selection and designation of such system of roads; and when the system first determined and agreed upon shall have been completed, additions thereto may be made in like manner as funds become available for the construction and maintenance of such additions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask the gentlewoman from New York whether Puerto Rico is a Territory?

Mrs. O'DAY. Puerto Rico is an insular possession; not a Territory.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It has not the same status as Alaska and Hawaii.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADMISSIBILITY IN EVIDENCE OF CERTAIN WRITINGS AND RECORDS

Mr. DUFFY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11690) relating to the admissibility in evidence of certain writings and records made in the regular course of business, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Senate amendments be dispensed with, as they are quite lengthy, but that they be printed at this point in the RECORD.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the last amendment read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the last amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, after line 6, insert "This act shall be prospective only, and not retroactive."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I want to call attention to the fact that this amendment was put in by the Senate. It is a companion piece to the section in legislation recently reported by a committee from the House which stated that the House reserved the right in the future to amend the law. I think it is perfectly ridiculous.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments are as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after "That", insert "in any court of the United States and in any court established by act of Congress."

Page 1, line 6, strike out "in evidence in proof" and insert "as evidence."

Page 2, after line 6, insert:

"SEC. 2. Any book, paper, statement, record, account, writing, or other document, or any portion thereof, of whatever character and in whatever form, as well as any copy thereof equally with the original, which is not in the United States (hereinafter referred to as a foreign document) shall, when duly certified as hereinafter provided, be admissible in evidence in any criminal action or proceeding in any court of the United States if the court shall find, from all the testimony taken with respect to such foreign document pursuant to a commission executed under the provisions of this act, that such document (or the original thereof in case such document is a copy) satisfies the requirements of section 1 of this act, unless in the event that the genuineness of such document is denied, any party to such criminal action or proceeding making such denial shall establish to the satisfaction of the court that such document is not genuine. Nothing contained herein shall be deemed to require authentication under the provisions of this act of any foreign documents which may otherwise be properly authenticated by law."

"SEC. 3. (a) The testimony of any witness in a foreign country may be taken either on oral or written interrogatories, or on interrogatories partly oral and partly written, pursuant to a commission issued, as hereinafter provided, for the purpose of determining whether any foreign documents sought to be used in any criminal action or proceeding in any court of the United States are genuine, and whether the requirements of section 1 of this act are satisfied with respect to any such document (or the original thereof in case such document is a copy). Application for the issuance of a commission for such purpose may be made to the court in which such action or proceeding is pending by the United States or any other party thereto, after 5 days' notice in writing by the applicant party, or his attorney, to the opposite party, or his attorney of record, which notice shall state the names and addresses of witnesses whose testimony is to be taken and the time when it is desired to take such testimony. In granting such application the court shall issue a commission for the purpose of taking the testimony sought by the applicant, addressed to any consular officer of the United States conveniently located for the purpose. In cases of testimony taken on oral or partly oral interrogatories the court shall make provisions in the commission for the selection as hereinafter provided of foreign counsel to represent each party (except the United States) to the criminal action or proceeding in which the foreign documents in question are to be used, unless such party has, prior to the issuance of the commission, notified the court that he does not desire the selection of foreign counsel to represent him at the time of taking of such testimony. In cases of testimony taken on written interrogatories, such provision shall be made only upon the request of any such party prior to the issuance of such commission. Selection of foreign counsel shall be made by the party whom such foreign counsel is to represent within 10 days prior to the taking of testimony or by the court from which the commission issued, upon the request of such party made within such time.

"(b) Any consular officer to whom a commission is addressed to take testimony, who is interested in the outcome of the criminal action or proceeding in which the foreign documents in question are to be used or has participated in the prosecution of such action or proceeding, whether by investigations, preparation of evidence, or otherwise, may be disqualified on his own motion or on that of the United States or any other party to such criminal action or proceeding made to the court from which the commission issued at any time prior to the execution thereof. If, after notice and hearing, the court grants the motion, it shall instruct the consular officer thus disqualified to send the commission to any other consular officer of the United States named by the court, and such other officer shall execute the commission according to its terms and shall for all purposes be deemed the officer to whom the commission is addressed.

"(c) The provisions of this act applicable to consular officers shall be applicable to diplomatic officers pursuant to such regulations as may be prescribed by the President."

Page 2, after line 6, insert:

"SEC. 4. The consular officer to whom any commission authorized under this act is addressed shall take testimony in accordance with its terms. Every person whose testimony is taken shall be cautioned and sworn to testify the whole truth and carefully examined. His testimony shall be reduced to writing or typewriting by the consular officer taking the testimony, or by some person under his personal supervision, or by the witness himself, in the presence of the consular officer and by no other person, and shall, after it has been reduced to writing or typewriting, be subscribed by the witness. Every foreign document, with respect to which testimony is taken, shall be annexed to such testimony and subscribed by each witness who appears for the purpose of establishing the genuineness of such document. When counsel for all the parties attend the examination of any witness whose testimony is to be taken on written interrogatories, they may consent that oral interrogatories in addition to those accompanying the commission may be put to the witness. The consular officer taking any testimony shall require an interpreter to be present when his services are needed or are requested by any party or his attorney."

Page 2, after line 6, insert:

"SEC. 5. If the consular officer executing any commission authorized under this act shall be satisfied, upon all the testimony taken, that a foreign document is genuine, he shall certify such document to be genuine under the seal of his office. Such certification shall include a statement that he is not subject to disqualification under the provisions of section 3 (b) of this act. He shall thereupon transmit by mail such foreign documents, together with the record of all testimony taken and the commission which has been executed, to the clerk of the court from which such commission issued, in the manner in which his official dispatches are transmitted to the Government. The clerk receiving any executed commission shall open it and shall make any foreign documents and record of testimony, transmitted with such commission, available for inspection by the parties to the criminal action or proceeding in which such documents are to be used, and said parties shall be furnished copies of such documents free of charge."

Page 2, after line 6, insert:

"SEC. 6. A copy of any foreign document of record or on file in a public office of a foreign country, or political subdivision thereof, certified by the lawful custodian of such document, shall be admissible in evidence in any court of the United States when authenticated by a certificate of a consular officer of the United States resident in such foreign country, under the seal of his office, certifying that the copy of such foreign document has been certified by the lawful custodian thereof. Nothing contained in this section shall be deemed to alter, amend, or repeal section 907 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 689)."

Page 2, after line 6, insert:

"SEC. 7. (a) The consular fees prescribed under section 1745 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 22, sec. 127), for official services in connection with the taking of testimony under this act, and the fees of any witness whose testimony is taken shall be paid by the party who applied for the commission pursuant to which such testimony was taken. Every witness under this act shall be entitled to receive, for each day's attendance, fees prescribed under section 8 of this act. Every foreign counsel selected pursuant to a commission issued on application of the United States, and every interpreter whose services are required by a consular officer under the provisions of this act, shall be paid by the United States, such compensation, together with such personal and incidental expense upon verified statements filed with the consular officer, as he may allow. Compensation and expenses of foreign counsel selected pursuant to a commission issued on application of any party other than the United States shall be paid by the party whom such counsel represents and shall be allowed in the same manner.

"(b) Whenever any party makes affidavit, prior to the issuance of a commission for the purpose of taking testimony, that he is not possessed of sufficient means and is actually unable to pay any fees and costs incurred under this section, such fees and costs shall, upon order of the court, be paid in the same manner as fees and costs are paid which are chargeable to the United States.

"(c) Any appropriation available for the payment of fees and costs in the case of witnesses subpenaed in behalf of the United States in criminal cases shall be available for any fees or costs which the United States is required to pay under this section."

Page 2, after line 6, insert:

"SEC. 8. The President is authorized to prescribe regulations governing the manner of executing and returning commissions by consular officers under the provisions of this act and schedules of fees allowable to witnesses, foreign counsel, and interpreters under section 7 of this act."

Page 2, after line 6, insert:

"SEC. 9. This act shall be prospective only and not retroactive."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. DUFFY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a statement explaining the amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUFFY of New York. Mr. Speaker, when H. R. 11690 passed the House, it contained only section 1 which enlarges the exception to the hearsay rule relating to the admissibility of business records. That section removes the obsolete common-law requirement that business entries be identified by the persons who made them. The Senate has merely made several clarifying changes in the language of section 1.

Sections 2 to 8, inclusive, are amendments made by the Senate which deal with the admissibility of public and business records located outside the United States. I wish to state briefly an explanation of these provisions. The Government has been confronted with unnecessary, yet serious, difficulties in proving ordinary business transactions in criminal cases, when documents necessary for such proof are located outside the United States. Under existing law the Government is obliged first to obtain the documents from abroad, and then pursuade witnesses to come to the United States from foreign countries to testify at the trial, in order that such documents may be admitted into evidence. Obviously, in many cases the cost of bringing witnesses to this country may be prohibitive; then, too, the Government must rely on the willingness of foreign witnesses to come to this country. The result has been that the difficulty of securing documentary evidence for use in criminal cases has had a serious effect in enforcing our criminal laws, especially those involving frauds upon the revenue.

A method is prescribed under the bill whereby foreign business records may be admitted into evidence in criminal proceedings upon certification by American consular officers. Provision is made to safeguard the rights of a defendant in a criminal action in every way. He is to be represented by counsel before the consular officer, have a right to cross-examine witnesses, and may even challenge the certification of the consular officer before the trial judge, when the records are offered in evidence.

The bill also permits the admission of foreign public records when certified by consular officers. Existing law dealing with this subject is in a state of confusion and in the interest of clarity and simplicity of procedure, provision is made whereby foreign public records may be admitted into evidence, under a procedure analogous to that relating to the admissibility of domestic public records.

The amendments made by the Senate have received the careful consideration of the Department of Justice, the Treasury Department, and the State Department, and meet with their approval.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I would have asked for more time, but I do not want to take much of the time of the House at this time, for I know how the Members feel this late in the day.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I see my good friend, the Republican leader, smiling his good-natured smile at me, but this document which I now hand to the minority leader I think will take the smile off his face. This is a sample of the kind of obscene literature that is going over the radio systems of the United States. I cannot put this document in the RECORD, for it is not fit to go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that for 16 weeks I have had a resolution pending before the Rules Committee for an investigation of the Federal Communications Commission. In view of the character of the matter I have just handed the minority leader and of the matter I hold in my hand and have on the desk, material that is not fit to go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, this House will now be certain that an investigation is fully warranted. For 16 weeks I have been trying to get this investigation to protect little children in American homes from having to listen to filthy, obscene plays on the radio; and radio, please remember, comes under the jurisdiction of the Federal Communications Commission.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I think, perhaps, the gentleman from Massachusetts would do better to hand this matter to the majority leader, because he is the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CONNERY. I will be glad to do so, and I will say for the majority leader that he has never seen this obscene material before.

One of the governmental agencies to which the Congress has delegated important powers and responsibilities is known as the Federal Communications Commission.

This body owes its existence to the Congress and, yet, I venture the prediction that there is no governmental agency which has so conducted itself as to indicate plainly the utter contempt which it seemingly has for the Congress.

Presumably, the Congress in the minds of the Federal Communications Commission exists principally as a vehicle necessary to appropriate the funds which make possible the clothing of this Commission with a legitimate standing and which permit the Commission to continue to function without someone asking questions which the Commission might find it hard to answer.

A year ago the attention of the Federal Communications Commission was directed to an obscene and indecent program broadcast into unsuspecting American homes by one of the larger networks.

This program was so indecent and so obscene that a prominent official of the network admitted that he had recommended that the program be canceled because of its indecency.

Sixteen Members of the House filed a written protest against the continuance of this type of program and asked the Commission for a public hearing.

The protest of these 16 Members of the House was virtually laughed at. No public hearing was held. No action was taken, so far as we have been able to learn, to penalize those who used this governmental grant—the license to broadcast—to broadcast into millions of unsuspecting American homes a program which was alleged to be indecent and obscene.

The Congress, in enacting the Communications Act of 1934, indicated plainly its desire to protect the American home from obscene, indecent, and profane utterances when, in section 326, it inserted the language I quote "no person within the jurisdiction of the United States shall utter any obscene, indecent, or profane language by means of radio communication."

Congress also applied a penalty which is found in section 501 of a $10,000 fine or imprisonment for not more than 2 years or both.

The Congress delegated to those comprising the Federal Communications Commission the protection of the American homes from obscene, profane, or indecent utterances by means of radio communication.

To indicate how indifferent those who control this governmental agency are and how derelict they have become in their responsibilities I direct the attention of the House to the fact that I hold in my hand copies of two radio broadcasts, copies of which have been in the possession of members of the Communications Commission for some weeks without action on their part, which broadcasts are so obscene and so indecent that the insertion of them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD would violate the rules of the House and would violate the rules of common decency. Yet, these utterances have been broadcast over the radio and into the Lord alone knows how many unsuspecting American homes.

Imagine, if you can, this governmental agency, to whom the Congress has delegated the responsibility of protecting the American homes from profane, indecent, and obscene utterances by radio communication, standing nonchantly by and virtually condoning, to say the least, the continuances of utterances so indecent, so profane, and so obscene that the insertion of these utterances in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD would offend public decency.

If there be any Member of the House or of the Congress who doubts the accuracy of the statements which I have just made or who might believe that my judgment is too strong, I have copies here for their inspection.

The Rules Committee has had before it for the past 16 weeks a resolution which I presented, calling for a congressional investigation of the Communications Commission. No action has been taken. Perhaps it will be necessary for Members of the House to take such drastic action to prevent a recurrence of such happenings that the House will see fit to order such an investigation.

When the Congress enacted the Communications Act of 1934, creating this Commission, we assumed that we were creating a governmental agency the records of which would be open to the public, or at least to the Members of the Congress.

Yet the records of this Commission, or at least most of the vital records, are withheld from the public and from Members of the Congress as well.

The hearings held by the House Appropriations Committee disclose the fact that this Commission is aware of the fact that the issuance of securities on the part of broadcasting stations has become a racket. The chairman of the Commission stated that they were investigating the possibility of such a racket when he stated—I quote—

> Just how much they can issue before they get into the value of a license given them by the Government, for which they pay nothing, is a question.

Yet, this Commission is weekly approving the sale or lease of radio facilities which facilities are of little value without the broadcast license, for sums which represent many time the value of the equipment purchased or leased. The franchise to operate, which represents the real value and without which the equipment is almost valueless, cost them nothing; and yet this arrogant Commission, which has failed to protect the American homes from profane, indecent, and obscene utterances by means of radio communication, is the sole authority for the continuance or discontinuance of these radio stations.

We are now close to adjournment. It is my intention at the beginning of the next session to demand again a thorough investigation of the Federal Communications Commission in order that we may protect the American people from the Radio Trust and American homes from profanation by indecent radio pragrams.

INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT-ELECT ON JANUARY 20, 1937

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Senate Concurrent Resolution 38, Seventy-fourth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the joint committee to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President-elect of the United States on the 20th day of January next the following Members of the House of Representatives: Mr. O'CONNOR, Mr. DOUGHTON, and Mr. SNELL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks permission to have read by the Clerk a letter from the President of the United States addressed to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DEEN] for the information of the House.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the letter, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 8, 1936.

Hon. BRASWELL DRUE DEEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN DEEN: I have approved H. R. 12120, a bill to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories, because of my deep interest in providing our young people with adequate opportunities for vocational training. So many criticisms have been directed at the bill in its present state, however, that it seems to me advisable, before the act goes into effect on July 1, 1937, that a disinterested group review its provisions in relation to the experience of the Government under the existing program of Federal aid for vocational education, and the relation of such training to general education and to prevailing economic and social conditions.

Accordingly I shall take steps in the immediate future for an appointment of such a group, with instructions to make studies and recommendations which will be available to the Congress and the Executive at the beginning of the next session.

Sincerely,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.
